18,470. Then would you advocate the institution of such wards in association with our general hospitals throughout the country?—I think they would be very excellent things, at all events at the present day.

18,471. Do you find you can work quite satisfactorily in association with the general staff of the Middlesex Hospital?—Yes, most friendly.

18,472. Do you take your part in the general administration of the institution, or are you treated as a separate branch, so to speak?—No. I am on the school committee there; and I am sent for if anyone wants me to see any case in any of their wards. Yesterday I took in a case under the senior physician there with some abdominal trouble, and with a drug habit. I took her into my ward as she was unable to go into the general hospital ward on account of the drug habit.

18,473. Is the point you wish to emphasise this, that very frequently mental disorder is associated with physical disorder, and if the patient is in a ward under the same roof as the general patients, or ordinary patients, you then are able to invoke all the specialised skill of surgeons and physicians in the general hospital to treat the physical ailments of the patient?—Yes, a most extraordinarily useful thing.

18,474. Equally I suppose on the general hospital side where a patient incidentally to a physical disorder may take some mental aberration, you are at hand with your ward for a specialised treatment of that aspect of the case?—Yes. I have taken three cases like that from the other wards which have been sent in to me. One, a woman with acute hallucinations came in to me and she did very well indeed.

18,475. So the allocation of the case to your department would depend to some extent, would it not, upon the predominance of the mental symptoms?—Yes.

18,476. Sir David Drummond: Would you advocate, if it were carried out generally, the principle you are suggesting, that the mental department should be separate, though connected with the general hospital—should not just be a ward in the same block, as it were?—That is a matter, I think, entirely of administration.

18,477. Would it not admit of very much greater liberty if it were a separate block, so that a noisy patient would not necessarily disturb the other patients?—Yes, quite right. If you are going to take in noisy patients and these people who are really troublesome and give annoyance to other patients, you are going to get the general hospital stamped as a mental one, and that is what one wants to avoid. One is really out to take in the earlier cases, the mild cases.

18,478. But some of these puerperal cases are noisy, as you know, and in three or four weeks they are well, and you do not want to certify them. These are the sort of people we should like to see admitted into an institution such as yours?—I think you will have to in a general hospital, as far as I see.

18,479. Chairman: Do you take in puerperal cases?—We had one sent in from the maternity ward which I was not able to keep because I had no bed.

18,480. Earl Russell: Although it would have been noisy?—Yes.

18,481. In spite of that you would have kept it?—I would have done my best.

18,482. Sir David Drummond: If you had a block 50 yards away?—Yes, but then you have got a mental hospital. We are rebuilding St. Luke's, and I have at present pointed out to my committee that the ground we have at Gerrard's Cross is too far away; that they should get some small place nearer and put up an acute hospital.

Mr. Snell: Suppose you had a place constructed like St. Thomas's across the way, separate buildings joined together with corridors, that is really what you want?

18,483. Chairman: Would you like to have one of the pavilions of St. Thomas's at your disposal for the purpose of mental cases?—I do not think you want one of those full blocks, if you had a floor of it.

18,484. Mr. Snell: That would satisfy you?—Quite.

18,485. Mr. Jowitt: Do you attach considerable importance to having small dormitories with only three or four people in them?—Yes; certainly it should not be more than three or four at the very most.

18,486. What occurs to me is, as I said before, that the value of your scheme is the fact that it is run on a small scale; you can give your skill and attention to comparatively few people, and it is run as a private affair. At the same time that is the drawback in applying the scheme throughout the country, that you really only tackle the fringe of the problem by doing it?—Yes, because I think the functional cases are so enormous in number, coming into the general hospitals, and they are very seldom treated fully. Of course the time each case takes is tremendous, if you are going into it.

18,487. I know it is. I should think 20 would be the outside, would it not?—I am taking it that I could look after my ward of 20, and also look after St. Luke's Hospital as well, needless to say with assistance. I think that they can be run in that way quite easily. Then small wards, I may say, are so important for this reason, that with these neurosis cases, and the early mental cases you find that symptoms seem to be contagious at times. Place three people together, and in a few days they are all exactly the same, you cannot tell which from which, whereas they were all different when they came in. Now if you could take patients and move them from one ward to another, you will find that suggestion again comes in very strongly, and that you can get very great results from that and help by that.

18,488. Chairman: There is only one question I want to ask you in conclusion with regard to the staff which you employ. Do you find that you require a specialised staff of nurses?—We have had up to the present nurses all with mental training.

18,489. How many nurses have you for your ward?—We have to have, I think it is, about five; it is a most expensive experiment.

19 June, 1925.]

Dr. RICHARD WITHERS GILMOUR, M.B., B.Sc. (Durham),
M.R.C.S., L.R.C.P.

[Continued.]

18,490. Five women nurses?—Yes.

18,491. No men?—No, no men. Only once has there been the necessity for a male attendant, and then the Middlesex Hospital have some men that they employ as male attendants when necessary.

18,492. In the ordinary course women nurses attend on both the men and women patients?—Quite.

18,493. Have you found that satisfactory?—Quite.

18,494. Then you have a staff of six nurses—there will be a head nurse, I suppose?—Yes, that is done in this way. The St. Luke's Hospital authority have a private nursing staff that they are able to call on, if necessary. I think there are five nurses that we have.

18,495. Are they on the books of the Middlesex Hospital as ordinary nurses?—No, they are on the books of our hospital, but whilst they are at the Middlesex Hospital they are under the Middlesex Hospital matron.

18,496. They are, so to speak, seconded?—Yes; they are kept by the St. Luke's authorities, and they sleep at St. Luke's House; they are all mental nurses.

18,497. That is to say, they have had training in mental institutions?—Yes.

18,498. Have they had general hospital training as well?—Most of them have as well.

18,499. Do they share the ordinary life of the Middlesex Hospital, do they use the Nurses' home?—No, they do not use that, they feed at the Middlesex Hospital.

18,500. Mr. Micklem: Are you re-building St. Luke's?—We hope to.

Chairman: We are very much obliged to you for coming to-day.

(The Witness withdrew.)

(Adjourned to Monday next at 2 o'clock.)

5, OLD PALACE YARD,
WESTMINSTER, S.W.1.THIRTY-FIFTH DAY.*Monday, 22nd June, 1925.

MEMBERS PRESENT :

MR. NATHANIEL MICKLEM, K.C. (in the Chair).

THE EARL RUSSELL.

SIR HUMPHRY ROLLESTON, BART., K.C.B., M.D.

SIR ERNEST HILEY, K.B.E.

SIR DAVID DRUMMOND, C.B.E., M.D.

MR. H. SNELL, M.F.

MRS. C. J. MATHEW.

MISS MADELEINE SYMONS.

MR. P. BARTER (Secretary).MR. H. FAIRLEY (Assistant Secretary).

The Countess of CHICHESTER and Dr. HELEN BOYLE, M.D. (Brux.), L.R.C.P., called and examined.

18,501. Deputy-Chairman: This afternoon we are to have the pleasure and advantage of the evidence of Lady Chichester and Dr. Helen Boyle, given on behalf of the Lady Chichester Hospital; and, I think, Dr. Boyle wishes to add supplementary evidence dealing with her views on the general subject. I think, Lady Chichester, you are the President of the hospital?—(The Countess of Chichester): Yes, I am.

18,502. Where is the hospital situated?—In Hove, Sussex, near Brighton.

18,503. I see there is some reference to a dispensary at Brighton. It succeeded the dispensary did it not?—Yes, it is the natural outgrowth from the dispensary. The dispensary originally started and then the hospital with beds came afterwards.

18,504. And Dr. Boyle is the senior physician at the hospital?—Yes.

18,505. Perhaps at this point, Dr. Boyle, I might take your other qualifications. You are a Fellow of the Royal Society of Medicine; a member of the Council of the Medico-Psychological Association, and of its Parliamentary and Educational Committees; a Member of the National Council for Mental Hygiene, and of its Executive Committee; a Member of the Council Central Association for Mental Welfare; Medical Referee for the National Association for the Feeble Minded; late Chairman of the Brighton Division of the British Medical Association, and Senior Physician to the Lady Chichester Hospital. Those are some of your qualifications?—(Dr Helen Boyle): Yes.

18,506. Your hospital was started, we gather, in 1905?—It was.

18,507. It is only for women and children?—Yes.

22 June, 1925.]

The Countess of CHICHESTER and Dr. HELEN BOYLE.

[Continued.]

18,508. And it is suggested that it was the first hospital to deal specially with early nervous and borderland cases?—Yes, it was. The only thing that existed before was Dr. Carswell's wards in connection with the Poor Law in Glasgow.

18,509. Then it was apparently incorporated as a corporate company in 1921?—Yes.

18,510. You have given us some details of the hospital. It has 39 beds, and an out-patients department?—Yes.

18,511. There is no endowment; it is really a voluntary hospital just like any of the general hospitals?—Yes.

18,512. And it differs from some of them perhaps in that you have no large benefactions; they are numerous I suppose but not large?—Yes.

18,513. You have given us in an appendix some information as to the class of patient that you take, and the cost at the hospital?—Yes. As a matter of fact I think that should really have come on at the end of the Lady Chichester Hospital evidence.

18,514. Not at the end of your evidence?—No.

18,515. You give there an analysis of 100 consecutive cases under several heads: those that have recovered and returned to normal life and occupation, improved, not improved, dead, and still in hospital?—Yes.

18,516. And on the next page you give the analysis of the nature of those 100 consecutive cases—is that so?—Yes, more or less.

18,517. You set out the types of cases, organic nervous cases, physical disabilities plus neuroses, early psychoses and psycho-neuroses. I suppose the distinctions are perfectly clear to the medical members of our Commission.

18,518. Sir David Drummond: It is a very large supposition, Mr. Chairman.

Deputy-Chairman: But I think we appreciate generally what the distinction means. We may take it that the whole of these cases are either nerve cases or early cases of mental disorder?—Yes, really very early cases. It seems to me that it has been a little bit difficult (I have read all the evidence up till now) to know exactly what people mean by "early cases." "Early" may mean several things; it may mean an early case of certifiable mental disorder, that is to say when the disorder has become certifiable and has only just become so, or it may mean a very early case before there is any question of certification at all.

18,519. I take it you really refer to those cases?—Those are the cases we are most interested in.

18,520. I see there are some cases of delinquents, I do not know which of the types they come under?—They may come under almost any of them.

18,521. You do not get very many of those cases, but there are some?—Yes.

18,522. Then perhaps we might just deal with the next page. You set out the cost for each patient; the average cost for the in-patient per week is £1 19s. 7½d., and you set out the different details under which those figures are made up?—Yes.

18,523. Your average number of in-patients resident daily is 43.

18,524. Sir Humphry Rolleston: That is very interesting because they have 39 beds?—It does look rather odd, but we have several temporary beds which we can put up. Another thing that makes a little confusion is this, that we have to return for the purposes of expenses the patients who have all their meals in hospital; we have a certain number who live out, and who spend the whole day with us. It is in order to economise accommodation. The accounts are kept according to the rules of King Edward's Fund. This particular page I am not responsible for, but the secretary, who keeps it according to the rules of the Fund, is responsible for it.

18,525. Deputy-Chairman: What is the general income of the hospital? Working out these figures and treating it as though there were 42 beds, I gather that the expenses would be about £4,500 for the in-patients?—(The Countess of Chichester): We have no endowment at all; that has to be raised annually.

18,526. How much do you raise annually?—We raise what we have to have to cover this and rather more, because we have capital expenses, the purchase of the house which we are paying off gradually.

18,527. You are not in the unfortunate position of having a large debt on the hospital?—Yes, from the point of view of the mortgage on the house.

18,528. Earl Russell: That is only for capital expenditure?—Yes.

18,529. Chairman: Do you usually meet the current expenses year by year?—Yes, we meet them, but our capital debt is a thing that really hampers more than anything. (Dr. Helen Boyle): We paid off the mortgage last year. (The Countess of Chichester): But having borrowed from the bank we have created a debt in order to do so.

18,530. And you have found that this hospital is required in the neighbourhood—you are always full?—(Dr. Helen Boyle): Yes, we always have a long waiting list.

18,531. Do your cases come mainly from Brighton and Hove, or do you get them from a distance?—We get them from anywhere—we do not put any check on where the case comes from.

18,532. Where, in fact, do the cases come from?—We have had one from Nigeria, one from Egypt, one from Dublin, one from Scotland, and a great many from the London hospitals.

18,533. Do you mean sent down to you for after-care?—Sometimes they come from the out-patient departments; they had not got any beds in the London hospitals for this kind of case. London has had no provision whatever until quite recently.

18,534. But where would they be—out-patients at the general hospitals in London?—Sometimes. One I was going to tell you about that came to us from St. Thomas's was a case of attempted suicide.

18,535. Sent down from St. Thomas's?—Yes.

18,536. Would the local police court be likely to remand a case of suicide to you if they thought there was a mental complication in it?—Yes. Possibly.

18,537. Your accounts are kept on the system advocated by the King Edward Fund; and we have a list of your officers. Lady Chichester is the President; and the Vice-President is Dame Henrietta Barnett. There are medical officers and others, and all the medical staff officers are honorary appointments?—Yes, except the house physician.

18,538. Sir Humphry Rolleston: Is not the price very low—you do it under £2?—(The Countess of Chichester): It is very low. That is partly accounted for by the fact of our very small staff. Owing to the nature of the cases that we deal with they are able to co-operate in the working of the hospital a great deal, which of course reduces our domestic staff, and that is, I think, largely accountable for it; that is why you see such a very low charge made.

18,539. In many of the general hospitals it is double that?—Of course, it is very, very carefully run, but I think that partly explains it (Dr. Helen Boyle): Yes. Of course, on the other hand, the salaries are fairly high, because they have to be very specialised people.

18,540. I suppose you have to have 12 to 15 nurses altogether?—Yes. The difficulty about the nurses is that they are always varying. Supposing we have two or three threatened suicidal cases, or anything very difficult, we may have to get a nurse in for two or three weeks, and we do not keep on the staff the full number that we often employ.

18,541. Deputy-Chairman: What do you reckon your staff at?—I can get it out of the latest report; may I send you that?

22 June, 1925.]

The Countess of CHICHESTER and Dr. HELEN BOYLE.

[Continued.]

18,542. Yes; you might perhaps let the Commission have a copy of the 1924 report?—Yes, I will send you a copy of the report.

18,543. Under which head do you put lighting and heating here?—That again is the King Edward's Fund system. (The Countess of Chichester): It is under "Establishment," I think, is it not?—(Dr. Helen Boyle): No, "fuel, lighting and domestic." (The Countess of Chichester): Yes, it comes under "Domestic."

18,544. You make no saving on food? Are the patients well supplied with all manner of provisions?—This is the entire charge, but, of course, owing to the nature of the case again the feeding has to be good; and then there is also, apart from this, Pound Day, which brings in locally from the inhabitants around a good deal of help. We live on Pound Day for some time.

18,545. Are those gifts in kind?—In kind—nearly entirely in kind.

18,546. Were you, Lady Chichester, to some extent responsible for the origin of this place—were you one of the founders?—I can hardly say that. I think I can say that Dr. Helen Boyle was the founder of the place, but I was connected with it from the beginning, from the very early days, being particularly interested in this type of case, and the extraordinary difficulty that was experienced in finding any place where they could be sent. There was a most curious deficiency, almost I might say vacuum; you could not get them treated anywhere.

18,547. Without certification?—You had to wait till the case was certified.

18,548. And your hospital was started with a view to meeting the need of these early cases?—Yes, and not at all to meet them locally only, but to meet cases from any part of England. We have daily applications from every part of the country.

18,549. You mention some things which, as you suggest, are obvious, that this incipient mental trouble was treated inadequately or not at all—there were no places?—Yes.

18,550. Then you suggest "that the conditions and environment were conducive in many cases to its development, and that patients often needed to be removed from them"?—That was a development from the out-patient department.

18,551. It was no good sending an out-patient back to his home?—No, you had to move some cases.

18,552. And then you suggest, as I gather, that your hospital is used for after-care cases, is that so?—Well, no, not entirely; it is only when they develop nervous symptoms again. I think Dr. Helen Boyle will give you more technical information about that. (Dr. Helen Boyle): What we do is this—we do not take any cases from the asylum, for this reason, that there is an After-Care Association which deals with them. Where we are helpful in after-care is that we have an out-patient department, to which any ex-patient who is feeling herself troubled can come and talk over it and see if we can suggest anything to help her. It is not really in one sense after-care in the way that the After-Care Association does it, but it is, we feel, an essential part of after-care.

18,553. It is giving them an opportunity to come as out-patients if they want further advice, is it not?—Yes, and if it is a considerable length of time afterwards, we might advise the case for a time again as a fresh patient.

18,554. You wish to make some suggestion as to the extension of after-care work?—Yes; I think it is essential to after-care to have clinics at the out-patients' department to which patients can go when they are beginning to feel unwell again, to which they can go without any particular notice being taken about it, or saying anything much about it.

18,555. Earl Russell: Just as they might go to any other hospital?—Yes.

18,556. Deputy-Chairman: I gather you think there should be some such institution as yours in every considerable centre?—Yes, absolutely; and preferably in connection with a general hospital. We would like to have been connected with a general hospital, and when we started it we offered ourselves to the Royal Sussex County Hospital at Brighton, but they were not then prepared, in 1905, to contemplate it at all. I do not think very many hospitals in those days would have done.

18,557. Do you think that they would possibly take a different view now?—Well, I am inclined to think so. Certainly some of them do. Whether it would be possible for the Sussex County Hospital to start the thing or not I could not, of course, say at all.

18,558. But your view is that it would be a desirable thing, if possible, that it should be in connection with the general hospital?—Yes. We are connected in one sense, because we have consultants who are also consultants of the Royal Sussex County Hospital; we can use their laboratory also. We send laboratory specimens up to the Royal Sussex County Hospital, and we utilise (though purely of course apart from their organisation) a great many of their facilities.

18,559. While you would like them to be, if possible, in connection with general hospitals, you would desire that these clinics should have no connection at all with mental hospitals?—Absolutely none; I think that is essential.

18,560. Now, your Council has directed its attention mainly to the importance and feasibility of very early treatment in the prevention of mental and nervous disorders; and in your précis you point out that that is a policy which has been advocated for a long time by the Medico-Psychological Association, and you refer to what has been done in other countries. Especially you refer to these cases: "At the International Congress of Medicine in 1914 the whole subject was ventilated in the Medico-Psychological section by papers from Professor Adolf Meyer from the Johns Hopkins University, Baltimore, and Professor Somner of Giessen, who described their clinics. The latter has stated that 'owing to the benefits derived from the treatment of mental disorders in the early stages the province of Hesse has been able to postpone the building of a new asylum for ten years.'" That is rather a remarkable and striking statement?—Yes.

18,561. "The French Committee of the National Council of Mental Hygiene at a Congress in 1923 stated: 'We start from the principle scientifically established, that insanity in a large number of cases, is an avoidable and curable illness'?"—Yes.

18,562. After your experience of the last 20 years you have come to very much the same conclusion, I gather?—Yes, certainly.

18,563. You find that a large number of patients show signs of nervous or mental disorder a long time before they become certifiable?—Yes.

18,564. And many of them never do become certifiable at all?—Yes. I have also been to clinics and mental hospitals in America, France, Belgium, Germany, Austria and Canada.

18,565. You yourself have visited them?—Yes.

18,566. Could you tell us shortly what your general conclusions are about them?—Well, there is no doubt whatever, I think, that all over those civilised countries the same idea obtains, that if we could treat the mental cases early before they become certifiable, we could in very many cases prevent them becoming certifiable and insane.

18,567. And is it your experience that in other countries they are in advance of us rather in that respect?—They certainly were. We are pulling up a little now, but when we started it in 1905 there was absolutely nothing here at all, and no interest taken in it much; but in Germany they had some rather good places; they had quite a new one near Berlin, and an exceedingly good one at Göttingen. They have also had for some considerable time places in America, the Phipps Clinic in Baltimore was one of the first, and that was started by the National Council for Mental Hygiene; you had their evidence recently.

22 June, 1925.]

The Countess of CHICHESTER and Dr. HELEN BOYLE.

[Continued.]

18,568. Yes?—Because they attracted so much attention to it—Phipps gave the money for the Phipps Clinic.

18,569. Were your visits paid to these places before you came into connection with the Lady Chichester Hospital, or after it?—Some of them were in existence when we began, but the ones in Germany were. I saw those. There is one in Utrecht which is very good. The thing that struck me, if I may say so, as a result of seeing them all and comparing them with ours, is that in nearly all the places they tend to do a thing which I think wrecks it, and that is, they take cases which are too bad—the Phipps Clinic at Baltimore has locked doors; Utrecht has locked doors, and a good many of the places that I have been to have had locked doors. Where you get locked doors, that is where the patients' liberty is interfered with, it seems to me that you tend to neutralise the chief advantage of the early clinic.

18,570. You do not want to get your place if you can help it associated with the insane at all?—No, and you cannot help that if you interfere with their liberty. They told me before I went to the Phipps Clinic, when I wrote, that it did not impede the work at all; but no sooner did I get to Baltimore than a doctor in the town volunteered to me "We cannot get our patients to go till they are really quite bad," and I said "Why?" "Because they think it is an asylum."

18,571. Do you know if in America there is the same or some similar system of certification to that which we have?—Yes, it is rather various, because of different States, different methods, more or less, but they have definitely certified cases in asylums.

18,572. Perhaps we will deal with that a little later on in your précis in connection with the question of acute cases. May I just refer back to the kind of cases which you have, those that are showing early signs of disorder and many of whom will not become certifiable? You deal with patients who are not likely to become certifiable, but who show mental aberration leading to mischief of various kinds. There you are dealing with the boys and others who become criminal?—(The Countess of Chichester): Well, of course, those come into our hands.

18,573. How do they come to you?—(Dr. Helen Boyle): We have had some from Courts. (The Countess of Chichester): And, of course, they come from their own homes, the desperate parent who cannot cope with the child brings it to us. We have very often had cases from London where the child has been sent down to us to deal with.

18,574. Are those children what I should call medically treated, or what is the treatment that they have?—(Dr. Helen Boyle): For instance, stealing is not at all an uncommon thing for us to have, and I could tell you about several cases. One was a little child who was quite young, I think she was about eight or ten—I am telling you this from memory. She was the daughter of a clergyman and a very good little child indeed, so good that she never liked to say anything that was disagreeable to anybody or of anybody; her parents had to go abroad, and I came across her at school.

18,575. Earl Russell: A boarding school?—Yes. She enjoyed being there immensely, and was exceedingly good and no trouble at all. Then for the holidays she went back to a lady she disliked. This lady owed her a grudge, and the child who had no other means of expression at all paid her back by taking her things. She had never stolen from anybody else. She felt that words would not express her feelings of fury, and so she used to go and take her money whenever she could. She did not use it particularly, and she did not want it particularly, but she always took it. We took the child away and I explained to the child what she had been doing, and I let her abuse the lady as much as she liked to me, encouraged her to, in fact.

18,576. She did permit herself on that occasion to do so?—It was extraordinarily difficult to that child to say anything. The end of it was she was taken away from the lady and she has never stolen anything since; but if that child had been badly handled, it is quite possible that her mentality and her adjustment to life might have been very seriously damaged.

18,577. Miss Symons: Do you get some children through the Children's Courts?—I do not know whether they actually came from the Children's Courts; I suppose they did. We have had one or two girls sent to us on probation.

18,578. Earl Russell: This stealing in your view was merely an expression of revenge, nothing else—it was a personal matter entirely?—Yes; it very often begins like that.

18,579. I mean the object was not the theft?—No, but it very often begins like that. If you enquire about the girls who have suddenly taken to it and used it in other ways—it usually begins in some simple way.

18,580. Deputy-Chairman: I suppose those are cases hardly for medical treatment; they are cases where you want some wise person to have a personal influence over the child?—There was a very wise woman at the head of her school, but she did not know what to do with her. It is not always easy to investigate the mentality of a small child; in fact it is notorious it is one of the most difficult forms of psycho-therapy.

18,581. Did you take that child as an in-patient for a time?—No, I saw her as an out-patient.

18,582. Earl Russell: The functions of the priest and the doctor are very much interchangeable now?—Yes. There are quite a lot of maladjustments in early youth which, if they are not understood and dealt with properly, may become confirmed, and if you can get those children when they are ten or twelve you do not find them criminals at twenty.

18,583. What you treated her with was advice, but advice which one would say could not very well have been given without a medical diagnosis—that is rather your view, is it not?—Yes, that is so. Then we get a fair number of suicidal cases. I thought, if you would like it, I would give you one which was sent down from St. Thomas's.

18,584. Deputy-Chairman: We might like to have the details?—That was a patient of 51; she was married and a widow, in fact, twice a widow, and she was an ironer, and she was suffering from the exhaustion psychoses that Sir Maurice Craig called attention to a good many years ago. She had been 16 years in one place, and she was 26 years in the same house, and she was born in the same street. She was never a minute late at work, and she worked from nine till six daily, at times overtime till ten or eleven, she said. She did her own work and her washing before she started in the morning; she was up at half past five daily, and she was in bed about ten or eleven. Lately she was working in a room alone. Her recreations were looking at the paper on Sundays, and she looked out of the window, she said. It is an odd thing that that should be regarded as a recreation. Occasionally she went to church—usually she was too tired; seldom she went to friends.

18,585. Was that under "recreation"?—Yes, I have put it under "recreation." Her brothers have children, she says, and they do not need her. Her son is a finisher. Her first husband probably committed suicide on the railway, he was found cut up on the railway; her second husband died suddenly in bed of heart failure; her daughter had been married for two years. She had cramp at night; her blood pressure was 104, which is abnormally low. She had some dental sepsis, and she was very sleepy. One night, without any warning, having been at work the day before, she got up and cut her throat extremely badly; she very nearly died; she was taken into St. Thomas's Hospital, and they sent her down to us. In the three months with us she put on two stone four pounds. She has been doing well now for two years in Brighton, and she is now so well that she stood the loss of her son very well; he died. She is probably quite stable now.

22 June, 1925.]

The Countess of CHICHESTER and Dr. HELEN BOYLE.

[Continued.]

18,586. Sir David Drummond: What is her blood pressure now?—I have not taken it; she was with us two years ago. (The Countess of Chichester): She went back to work. (Dr. Helen Boyle): Yes, but she works in Brighton, and she can come to the club night at hospital. She made a good many friends there. She is now in touch with some human society; that accident was when she was working in a room alone, and had few friends.

18,587. Deputy-Chairman: One of your main class of patients are married women, are they not?—Yes, we mention them particularly.

18,588. Those are cases of what you call unstable and nervous mothers who come to you?—(The Countess of Chichester): Usually, very much overdone with a large family to look after, who develop some form of nervous trouble, some nervous symptoms; and those are cases which, if they can be got quite early, can, as a rule, be absolutely reconstructed and returned to their own surroundings; but if the surroundings are not changed, and no help is given, it is a disaster to the patients themselves and to the family.

18,589. I suppose at your hospital there is no difficulty in getting these people to come—I mean they come willingly?—Absolutely.

18,590. You are not looked upon as a mental hospital?—That is our great desire, to avoid anything of that sort. No one need stay if they do not want to; it is entirely free.

18,591. Sir David Drummond: Are you not aware that there are few general hospitals in this country able to admit these cases?—(Dr. Helen Boyle): I think they do admit some without any special treatment.

18,592. Pardon me, I think they do treat some?—They do treat some.

18,593. I think it is a mistake to assume that our general hospitals do not take any notice of these cases?—I would not say they do not take any notice of the cases. But if you are asking me if they are equipped with proper methods for dealing with them, or that their staff is picked from that point of view, I think I should be right in saying there are not a very large number all over the country who do do that.

18,594. Deputy-Chairman: Do you think there are cases that would come to you that would not go to a general hospital?—No; I do not think they have any fear of a general hospital at all.

18,595. I did not mean through fear, but who, for some reason or other, would not be likely to go to a general hospital for advice, yet, knowing of your special hospital, would come to you?—What happens is that they often, and generally, in fact, go to a general hospital; and they are given a bottle of medicine, and they are told to go home and not to worry, and they will be all right; and after doing that for some time, sometimes a woefully long time, they hear from someone, "Oh, well, why do not you go along there and try that?" I am bound to think that the general hospital treatment is not altogether satisfactory to the staffs themselves, for they send us the cases; we have had cases from nearly every general hospital in London, I think.

18,596. Do you get cases from the Sussex Hospital?—Yes, we have got one in now.

18,597. If they have got some special nervous cases or mental cases they would send them on to you?—They do sometimes. I wish we had a larger hospital and could take them in at once. When they come to us they often have to wait, because we have a long waiting list. Another thing I feel very strongly, and that is that there are a large number of these cases amongst the chronic cases that go to hospitals for years; I think there are a large number in the out-patient department of probably every general hospital, cases which, if they had been recognised early (chronic dyspepsia and all sorts of curious little difficulties), could have been cured. We are bound to think that, because we get them after they have been attending perhaps for five years, or even ten years, at some general hospital; then they develop finally, after waiting for a long time, and come to us; they get better, and they do not have to go back as a chronic patient to any general hospital.

18,598. Earl Russell: Chronic dyspepsia itself is not a mental symptom at all, is it?—It may be, it is often a symptom of fear. I am drinking water now, because I am afraid, which shows quite well how easy it is for fear—and my fear is not comparable to theirs—to upset ordinary secretions.

18,599. Deputy-Chairman: What do you do in cases that come to you which are marked cases of mental disorder, and that really want to be detained—I mean ought to be detained?—We generally say to them when they say they would like to go away, "Oh yes, wire for your people, and go away at once," and they say, "Go away now, but I have only just arrived," and are very much taken aback; so I say, "Yes, but you want to go." Then they say, "Yes, I want to go." Then I say, "Wire to your people and tell them to come and fetch you to-morrow"; they say, "I do not know whether they can come to-morrow," so I say, "You should have thought of that before you let them go." Then they say, "They are coming on Sunday," so I say, "Oh well, if you don't want to stay you must go to-morrow." Then they say, "Well, doctor, may I stay till Sunday?"

18,600. Sir David Drummond: I think the Chairman is referring to cases that develop rather suddenly, their mental trouble develops suddenly. What do you do then?—You mean if we get a case developing into an acute mental case?

18,601. Deputy-Chairman: Yes?—We wire for their people and they take them home, and I give them a letter to the relieving officer.

18,602. Earl Russell: So that, if necessary, they are certified at once?—Yes. If necessary we send two nurses with them.

18,603. Deputy-Chairman: You would not allow anybody to be certified in your hospital?—We do sometimes, because it may be impossible to send them so far as their relations would need. Some of the places I have mentioned; you can see it would be impossible to send them such tremendous distances.

18,604. I suppose those cases you would not have undertaken if you had known what they would be likely to develop into?—It is impossible in the early stages to be certain a case will never become certifiable; we are bound to have a few of those; of course we do not like them. Another thing is that sometimes we take cases in as the other voluntary hospitals do, on the recommendation of a medical practitioner; and in the case of some of the medical practitioners I am bound to say the descriptions they give of their cases are very limited. We sometimes get them when they are not really suitable for us at all.

18,605. So far as you are able you would keep all these acute cases out of your hospital?—Yes.

18,606. You think it is too great a price to pay, to be regarded as one of the establishments for the insane; you do not want that?—I think it entirely nullifies the use of our hospital.

18,607. Sir Humphry Rolleston: Have you been able to work in any social service, so to speak—are you able to do anything in the way of improving the environmental conditions in their homes?—Yes, we do a bit, but, of course, the social service side needs a tremendous amount of development at present. Our social service is very much limited.

22 June, 1925.]

The Countess of CHICHESTER and Dr. HELEN BOYLE.

[Continued.]

18,608. I wondered whether you would have funds and helpers to enable you to do it at Hove?—(The Countess of Chichester): The difficulty is that cases come from all over the country; it is not a local hospital necessarily—I mean it would mean ramifications everywhere.

18,609. But still I suppose a very large proportion of your cases necessarily come from near by?—I should hardly say a large proportion—a certain proportion. (Dr. Helen Boyle): We do do social services in various ways. For instance, we have a club night, and a magazine. Any patient can come at any time to the hospital if they like, and to a certain extent they are visited in a small way, but we do hope that our social service side will develop very much more.

18,610. Mr. Snell: Is that an open evening once a week or once a month?—Once a week. (The Countess of Chichester): We find that the old patients very much cling to that. One old patient once said to me she was going to take up some work in Hove. I said, "Why not go right away and forget all about this"? She looked at me in astonishment; "Forget! The one thing I want is to be nearby and walk past the hospital." That is the one thing you want to get rid of—a feeling of fear with regard to the hospital.

18,611. Deputy-Chairman: Your view is that these recoverable acute cases should not go to the clinics at all?—(Dr. Helen Boyle): I should like to see places provided entirely for them.

18,612. To maintain special places for acute recoverable cases?—I beg your pardon—you mean to say the acute mental cases should not go to the clinic at all?

18,613. Yes?—That is my feeling; they should be excluded. I personally think that the mental hospital should be of such calibre and so carefully graded, and so well run, that any acute case that requires to have her liberty taken away from her should be able to be safely and comfortably sent there.

18,614. Sir Humphry Rolleston: But you draw a great distinction between an acute case, and an acute case which is certifiable?—Well, I think what you mean is this, is it not, that there are some acute cases of certifiable mental disease which, if they are put under suitable treatment, will recover in a short time.

18,615. Yes?—I personally think (I know I am at variance with a great many people over it) that all such cases where the liberty has got to be interfered with (that is the main point I think) should be in mental hospitals, and I think it is detrimental to the mental hospital to take them out of it.

18,616. Sir David Drummond: Should be in an asylum you mean?—Yes.

18,617. That is contrary to the evidence we have heard from many people?—Yes, it is. Most people feel that they should be put into the clinics, and I have had a great deal of discussion about it with a great number of people. I went to Utrecht entirely to see that, but the Utrecht clinic is not in the least what I think we most want. It is a clinic which is really a clearing house. They take the cases in there and sort them, and they send the cases that I think should be in the clinics to a place called Zeist, a little way out of the town, which is much more run on the lines of our hospital, and is the department which I think will be more suitable for the general hospital, than the Utrecht clinic itself is.

18,618. Earl Russell: You would not see any objection to these cases being under a provisional certificate, wherever they are treated?—No. Personally there again I do not think the public will see very much difference between a provisional certificate and an ordinary certificate, or a provisional order and another kind of order.

18,619. Not if the man is able to say he never was a certifiable lunatic?—I think they will get to the bottom of that in about five years quite easily.

18,620. Sir Humphry Rolleston: You would not certify a case of delirium tremens, of course?—I am not at all certain that it would not be a very good thing if they were certified.

18,621. Sir David Drummond: You would not certify people with pneumonia?—No.

18,622. Deputy-Chairman: In the quickly recoverable cases do not you think it would be of advantage that they should not be certified if they could possibly be saved from it?—I do think so in a sense, but I am not prepared to sacrifice the clinic to them. I am very anxious that those acute recoverable cases should not be removed from the asylums. I think our asylums and mental hospitals will become the most terrible places of despair, if we do not put any of the recoverable acute cases into them. I do not think you will get a good staff there, and I do not think there is any reason to suppose that because a case will not recover in three or four months it is to be deprived of the highest possible skill. I think you will perhaps notice at the end of the précis I have analysed the cases that were discharged within the last year at our local county mental hospital.

18,623. Yes, that is on page 6?—You will see that very few of them got well within three months.

18,624. Only three out of a total of 23?—Yes. The consequence is that I do not think that the number of cases who would be easily recoverable in three months is so enormously great as is often described. I do not think the hardship on them is nearly as important as it is to get your really early case to come to you.

18,625. You do not want people in your clinics too long?—No.

18,626. You mean this might be a question of 9 or 12 months?—It would be, according to these cases here; we should have only got three well in three months.

18,627. Your view is that if a patient is taken to an asylum you think it would make very little difference whether he was taken under a certification order, or under an observation order?—Personally, I think almost none, as far as the public is concerned.

18,628. Earl Russell: We have had a good deal of evidence the other way—you have read it, I understand?—I have read every word of it.

18,629. It has not impressed you?—Dr. Goodall has had a great deal of correspondence and talk with me about it. It was at his instance I went to see Utrecht the other day again. I said I thought we could compose our differences to some extent by allowing the university hospitals, the hospitals that serve a university, to have clinics to take any kind of case they wanted, that is to say, the acute case that requires interference with liberty, and any other case they want for teaching purposes, but not to extend that to the clinics in connection with any other kind of hospital, and Dr. Goodall said he thought that was quite a reasonable idea. I think they would be making a bitter mistake myself, because I think anybody can be taught quite easily on an acute mental patient, and there are a great many reasons why (even in the teaching school) the cases that you want to teach on are the cases that we have, the ones which are so difficult to recognise, but which every practitioner has in his practice every day. They are the most difficult of all, and they are the ones it seems to me you most want to teach on, and though you may get plenty of them, you will not get as good a variety as if you did not take the acute manias. Also, I think every student should go to a mental hospital; I think it is a mistake for him to have it so conveniently brought to his door that he will not have to go and see the cases in the mental hospitals; I think he should go round and see all sorts of cases.

18,630. In your précis on page 6, just after the figures you were dealing with just now, you say, "The Council, while recognising that special hospitals may be necessary, have come to the conclusion that there should be a special department in every general hospital for the treatment of these patients"?—Yes.

22 June, 1925.]

The Countess of CHICHESTER and Dr. HELEN BOYLE.

[Continued.]

18,631. I do not quite follow what you mean by saying "special hospitals may be necessary." Do you mean some hospital between the clinic and the asylum, so to speak?—No; what I meant was: we are a special hospital in my view, and while I think that ultimately the special hospitals will not be required (I hope that ours will be improved out of existence, or annexed by a general hospital) till that day, there will be I am afraid all over the country a good many general hospitals which will not be induced to do this special work; and, where that is so, it seems to me that then the town should provide itself with a special hospital like ours.

18,632. Your view is that if possible your hospital should go or be absorbed, for instance, in the Royal Sussex County Hospital?—Yes, or the Hove Hospital. I do not know whether it will be done in my lifetime.

18,633. You are suggesting that the work which your clinic does should be done in every general hospital?—I think so. Why should this class of case be omitted?

18,634. Sir David Drummond: And be treated?—There are a great number of cases that you do not want to have to put to bed.

18,635. I think a great many could benefit from a spell in bed?—So do we, but there are a great many who do not want it for very long, and who are certainly not well when they get up.

18,636. Quite true.—We have had one or two acute certifiable cases, but we do not keep them.

18,637. Deputy-Chairman: You recognise the difficulty there might be on the ground of finance, and you suggest that in connection with these clinics there should be some special Government support, as there is in certain other health departments?—Yes.

18,638. You point out that it is an expensive form of treatment needing a specialised staff, and it would be impossible for the general hospital to maintain it unless they could get some further grant?—Yes, I think so; bribe them into it.

18,639. Earl Russell: "Persuade" is what I expect they call it in departmental circles?—Yes.

18,640. Deputy-Chairman: Then you lay stress on the fact that there should be no obvious connection between the clinics and mental hospitals?—Yes; that does not necessarily mean that none of the personnel should take an interest in any case. For instance, the Superintendent of Hellingly goes down to the Eastbourne Hospital, and has an out-patient clinic there.

18,641. Yes, but what you mean is that in the mind of the patient there should be no connection between the two?—Yes, that is the case.

18,642. So far as the doctors and officials are concerned, the closer the union the better, possibly?—Yes.

18,643. Then you sum up your recommendations, and you point out that "efficient social service should be developed in connection with patients suffering or liable to suffer from mental disorder, and should work with the mental hospitals and clinics." . . . I think the necessity for that would generally be recognised, but it is a difficult work, is it not? I do not know whether you could make any special suggestions with regard to that?—About social service?

18,644. Yes?—I should think that it might be developed really by the Central Association for Mental Welfare. They have voluntary associations over the greater part of England now, and they have begun in Scotland too; they have just started a branch in Glasgow. I should think that that might form a nucleus for this kind of work, probably. They do it to a certain extent even now.

18,645. Now, I think we have got the main points connected with the Lady Chichester Hospital. I do not know, Lady Chichester, whether you would like to add anything?—(The Countess of Chichester): I think most of the points have been dealt with. Simply from an outside point of view, I feel that you cannot lay too much stress on the difficulty that arises in the minds of the patient's friends with the idea of any connection with a mental hospital. They are very ignorant, and there is an almost ineradicable difficulty over that. If you can impress upon them that the thing is part of general health, just like going to any other hospital, you catch the cases before they are conscious of it, and the thing is straightened out, especially with mothers of families; because, I think, naturally, their husbands and children very much dislike the idea of any sort of suggestion of mental trouble. This occurs with very young children too. We have had these cases almost of infants, children who have not been taught, and who cannot walk, and we have been able to persuade the parents to let them come into the hospital, and they have been dealt with from the nervous point of view in a way that their parents would not have suggested.

18,646. Taking them as in-patients?—Yes, taking them as in-patients, and perhaps re-educating, or putting the thing straight, whereas no parent would have allowed even the suggestion to be made to them that they should have been dealt with by anything that in their minds had any sort of taint, and for that reason the importance of not having acute cases is very, very great. One acute case may do your other people endless harm.

18,647. It might give you a bad name for all time?—Yes; you have to get over that difficulty again; you have to begin the whole thing over again.

18,648. Earl Russell: You have lost your character you mean?—Yes.

18,649. Mr. Snell: But I understood Dr. Boyle to suggest that the elimination of the acute recoverable case from an institution would do it harm?—(Dr. Helen Boyle): The elimination of recoverable cases from mental hospitals will do them great harm.

18,650. But you do not mean in such hospitals as you own?—No, we do want to eliminate them from our hospital. Another reason we think acute cases should be excluded is that I believe we shall get our general hospitals to accept the work very much more readily, if they think there is no question at all of their having to deal with anybody who screams or has to be locked up, or anything of that sort.

18,651. Deputy-Chairman: Taking your in-patients, what would be about the average time that you can keep them?—About three months. The average, when I worked it out last year, I think it was about three months; and you will see that was why I got the returns from the nearest mental hospital, from which you see we should only have got three out of 23 well. It took, I think it was, nine months to get 19 well.

18,652. Dr. Boyle, you are tendering some further very interesting evidence of your personal views. Perhaps before we pass to that, other members of the Commission would like to ask you and Lady Chichester further questions on the Lady Chichester Hospital.

18,653. Miss Symons: In connection with the stress you lay on the juvenile delinquents, advocating correlating the work of prisons and rescue homes, I wonder if you have any special proposal in that connection for children. I mean, do you advocate any system of examination of children in the Children's Courts to prevent children who are possibly suffering from some of these disorders going to places where there is no special attention for them?—Absolutely; what I feel about that is what they feel in America, that there ought to be psychiatrists in connection with every single Court. I once attended at the Lewes Assizes; I had to give evidence in a case; I saw quite obvious patients there. I went over Holloway Gaol a little while ago; I was asked to lecture there, and I said I could not lecture without knowing whom I was lecturing to, and the Home Office very kindly allowed me to go and see anybody I liked. I went round, and I expect people think I am very biased, but I saw "patients" in most of the cells.

22 June, 1925.]

The Countess of CHICHESTER and Dr. HELEN BOYLE.

[Continued.]

18,654. Mr. Snell: Would you say that there is any considerable proportion of people detained in prisons who are mental cases?—Of course there are the definite prison returns which the National Council gave you, and there is an enormously large number of them, obviously, from the prisons returns. But, if I may so submit humbly, I think those returns only represent probably a small number of the cases which, if they were taken early in the time that we want to get them, would never get to prison at all.

18,655. That is to say, if they were treated as cases of mental illness or irregularity?—Maladjustments—the beginnings of stealings, and so on.

18,656. Earl Russell: Of course you could perfectly well say that a man if he is a sensible man, would not be a burglar?—Exactly.

18,657. But when he is a burglar, what are you going to do with him?—If you could get the burglar, when he is beginning, that is at 16, 14, or possibly 10, like the little child I told you about, if you could get him then and see that he is adjusting to life in that way, you would find that most burglars begin by having a "grouse" against life generally: "Why should certain people be well off and why should I be poor?" and he adjusts to life in that way. He says, "Well, I will get a bit of my own back; I will see if I cannot get some of this money that is floating about."

18,658. Deputy-Chairman: You would have to extend your clinics enormously to get in all persons of that class?—I do not know. I think if there were clinics all over the country, people would get to see the differences of mentality so much more readily. A young person who was very bad tempered, or very secretive, or something of that sort, would be noticed sooner; the very good little boy in class, who becomes a dementia præcox, the egocentric young, and so on.

18,659. Earl Russell: Temper is a very difficult thing to get over, is it not?—We have had very many cases of violent tempers that we have got adjusted, and they have been able to take a place and keep it. We have had a number of young girls who have been sent to us because they were in and out of places all the time, never would keep any place, and there again one may say, "Well, that child wants a horsewhipping," or "That young woman wants to be shut up in prison," or "She wants to be penalised"; but, as a matter of fact, we find if we can discover why they do the things and explain it to them and keep them with us long enough for them to understand that it is really quite fun to get to know people and to like them, then you can send them out and they will stay in their places.

18,660. Sometimes, in the case of a boy a whipping is effective, is it not?—Yes, there are some who want it.

18,661. Mr. Snell: Did you have any opportunity of finding out what particular crimes these prisoners in Holloway had committed; I mean those who you thought were mental cases?—Yes.

18,662. What kind of offences were they?—A great many of them, stealing.

18,663. And drunkenness?—Yes, some of them drunkenness, but the ones that stand out most clearly in my mind were stealing, some stealing food for the children.

18,664. They were more or less poor people. Poor people do not have kleptomania?—I am sure they often do.

18,665. Earl Russell: What would you say of a confidence trickster; would you say he also had a diseased mentality?—What I will say about it is that if you began at 14 you would see the beginnings of why he was trying to trick everybody—probably somebody tried to trick him to begin with.

18,666. Mrs. Mathew: Dr. Boyle, I want to know which country, in your opinion, has the best method of mental treatment?—No country has a monopoly. I think, at present. The boarding-out is best at Ghel, in Belgium, so much so that I found an English doctor among the patients, and I said to him, "Do you like being here?" He was boarded-out in a cottage, and he said, "Oh, yes, much better than anything they can do for me in England." He had been there several years. I think that the clinic that I saw under Professor Cramer at Göttingen was the best, early treatment which I know of in the world. Cramer was a very modest man and hardly anybody knew about him, but I happened to hear about him. It was an extremely good clinic, no locked doors, and one half of the building was for men, and the other half for women, and they had some association rooms for entertainments; I think that was the best one I have seen, but there is a good one too at Zeist, outside Utrecht, to which that kind of case is referred by Professor Winkler's Clinic, which is a magnificent place, but they do not keep the cases there any time at all. I will tell you what makes me think that it is not altogether satisfactory. I was attending out-patients, and a girl came in with a very bad arm and hand, and they said, "Oh, that is a girl who is hysterical; she has done it herself." So I said, "But you have hardly seen her." The doctor said, "Oh, that is true, but we know her. She comes up here periodically with this," and I said, "But why is she doing it?" The out-patient doctor said "We do not know." So I said, "What is the longest time you have had her in?" "Oh, I think a week or two," she said. "Two or three weeks perhaps;" so I said, "How often have you had her in?" They had had her in two or three times; and I said, "Are you going to take her in this time?" and she said, "No, I do not think we can be always taking her in." Now that, to my mind, is wholly unsatisfactory. That patient is being disabled for a great part of her life, and there is not any reason why she should be. They took her in and entirely altered her surroundings, and talked to her nicely; it goes away, it gets quite well; she goes out in a short time and comes back again. They have never really got to the bottom of that, chiefly because the clinic is so crowded with the huge number of cases of every sort, and it is very hard to find room for her. She is a case who is incapacitated for a certain part of her life, because it has not been found out why she is doing this. She is doing it for some reason or other. It seems to me that illustrates what one feels about the clinic; that once you get away from the very early case, the very early case is apt to be regarded as less important than the acute ones. They seem to me to be more important, and not less, because they can be returned and be useful and valuable members of society. If I may add another thing, it is this, that I do not want the Commission to think that we are entirely obsessed with psycho-therapeutic measures, because a great number of the cases that come are dependent upon physical conditions. We have a large number of dental cases, for some of which treatment has been extremely successful. I remember one patient who came in with neurasthenia, and the only thing we did for her was to put four inches on to her chest measurement; she was not getting enough air to do anybody any good, and she was always feeling weakly. We have a large number of consultants, and we go into the cases as carefully as we can, in a sort of team way.

18,667. Have you had any opportunity of observing the effect of routine employment?—Yes, we have an occupational clinic.

18,668. Yes, but I was thinking of the effect of just putting labels on boxes, and things like that. It has a mental effect?—You mean a harmful effect?

18,669. Yes, monotonous employment?—Yes. We had a girl who suffered from that, who worked in a

22 June, 1925.]

The Countess of CHICHESTER and Dr. HELEN BOYLE.

[Continued.]

jam factory; there is no doubt that a very monotonous life does lead to nervous trouble, and that case I quoted to you had been 26 years in the same street, the same house, and born in the same house. That was no doubt a contributory factor.

18,670. At what did she work?—She was working at ironing, and it was when she got to the monotony of doing it in a room alone that she broke up altogether.

18,671. Sir Humphry Rolleston: I am not quite sure why you think it desirable to take in early cases of disseminated sclerosis; I should have thought you had your hands quite full with the psychological cases. Is it because you think disseminated sclerosis is very often an additional factor?—No, Sir, it is not. Even if they showed no functional disturbance and no brain disturbance, which, of course, you often get, I should still be strongly in favour of admitting any kind of nervous patient for the reason that I believe, if I may say so, that our present system of dividing the nervous system into groups, and giving it to different people, is very damaging for the general outlook on it. I do not think any other country does it as much as this one.

18,672. You are admirably adapted for improving mental control, but you would not say that you were so well equipped as a general hospital for looking after pathological details and investigating and treating them, would you?—I hope that we should be able to investigate any pathological detail that could be investigated at the Royal Sussex County Hospital. The Ralli laboratory there is open to us, and we send any cases we wish to. Dr. Farquhar Buzzard is consultant at the Hospital.

18,673. But you have no advantage over the Royal Sussex Hospital?—No, not specially for that case itself; but, personally, I think it is extremely important that we should take them all in, for this reason, that it abolishes the idea that there is something different between that and neuritis, and a case that is functionally paralysed from hysteria.

18,674. You take in organic cases to keep the nervous system together?—Yes, treated as a whole. Some of the disseminated sclerosis cases, I would like to say, are cases which have perfectly definite functional and mental trouble.

18,675. Sir Ernest Hiley: Dr. Boyle, am I right in thinking that you disapprove entirely of the suggestion of the provisional order? You would send an acute case direct to the asylum?—No, it would not be true to say I object to it. I do not object to it; I think it is perfectly harmless, but I do not think that it will do all that is expected of it.

18,676. Then any recommendation of such an order would be, in your opinion, rather a futile thing?—Well, there is such a strong opinion in favour of it that, personally, I should vote in favour of it if I were asked, I think; but I do not think the success of it will last longer than a comparatively small number of years. I mean, I think the patients will not care more for that than the other, and they will avoid it just as much.

18,677. Then you would be equally opposed, of course, to the extension of any such order from time to time, an order to avoid absolute certification?—I would like it to be possible not to certify the people, and to keep them out of an asylum; I am strongly in favour of that, but I doubt if the provisional order will help very much towards it—that is what I mean.

18,678. What would you suggest in place of a provisional order?—Personally, I do not see any reason why one should not do very much as they do in Scotland; let the doctor say: "This patient should be treated for three months and looked after properly." I do not think that there is any real objection to that, because apparently the Scotch do not find it work badly. They do not have abuses, and the doctors do not get into collusion with the nursing homes or do anything very terrible, as far as I can hear.

18,679. Would you do that without any outside confirmation, such as a magistrate's order?—I would, because, you see, you cannot get your patients to submit to the magistrate's order. If people only knew the difficulty there is to persuade them to allow themselves to have anything of that kind done—they do not mind going to a doctor's house or a nursing home, and they are not the least bit afraid of being badly treated there.

18,680. Earl Russell: Legal restraint on the doctor's order?—They find it work all right in the north, and, if it does, I should be prepared to agree to it here myself.

18,681. Yes, but would the public?—I do not believe they would.

Deputy-Chairman: Sir Ernest is trenching a little on a subject of special interest to us, when you come to your own personal evidence.

Sir Ernest Hiley: I did not mean to, Sir; I rather had in mind a remark of Dr. Boyle's earlier on.

18,682. Deputy-Chairman: Quite, but I think we shall get it out a little more fully now. You have some very strong views, apparently, Dr. Boyle, which are certainly not those that are commonly held, I think, about treatment?—I am afraid so, yes.

18,683. Your main idea is that there should be greater freedom both for the doctor, as I understand, and for the patient?—Yes, specially for the patient.

18,684. You think that the doctor should be free to treat a willing patient where-ever he considers it desirable or possible. I suppose he is now; that is not new, is it?—Yes.

18,685. Any doctor can treat any patient in his own house, surely?—If he does, he lays himself open, if the patient is a certifiable patient, to possibility of fine.

18,686. Not in the patient's own home?—Quite so, yes, that is true.

Earl Russell: That requires money, of course; you cannot do that in the case of the poor.

18,687. Deputy-Chairman: That is so; but I mean as between a doctor and a patient in his own house, he is free enough, of course?—Yes, but very often that is not at all a good place for him.

18,688. Quite so. The second point is that you want the patient to be free to go where he wishes to be treated, or where the doctor sends him; that is to say, you would allow, as I gather, an unlimited number of licensed houses?—Yes, open competition.

18,689. Open houses or licensed houses?—Any house.

18,690. At the present moment, as we know, there are only a very limited number of licensed houses, and, as the Act stands at present, they cannot be enlarged or increased. Your view is that the line which has hitherto been taken by the Legislature has been a mistaken one?—Yes.

18,691. It might have been perhaps necessary in the darker days, but now you think that to be entirely changed?—I do.

18,692. And you would have an unlimited number; you would have no monopoly of licensed houses, but free competition between those who are prepared to carry them on?—Yes; I think you get better results with free competition than in the other way.

18,693. Do not you think there would be a great public feeling against giving doctors or relatives the right and power to dispose of their patients, who are suffering from mental disorders, where they liked without any supervision?—If the patients are willing to go, there is no interference with their liberty.

18,694. But there is always a difficulty in these cases, at all events in serious cases, in saying whether the patient is willing to go or not. You do not know how far you can take the assertion of a person who is suffering seriously from a mental disorder; I mean he may say, "I am prepared to go," but he may not know what he is saying, and may not be able to form any opinion of where he is going, or what his surroundings may be?—Personally I would risk that. I think that the really trying part to the patient is that he is not allowed to say where he will go, or, if he dislikes it, that he would like to leave that place. I do not believe we should have any trouble, comparatively speaking, with anyone if they were not compelled to stop in places that they do not like. I think that is where most of the trouble arises.

22 June, 1925.]

The Countess of CHICHESTER and Dr. HELEN BOYLE.

[Continued.]

18,695. For those who can afford it, I suppose there is a reasonably limited choice now. One knows of cases, of course, where persons of means constantly go to a particular home that they choose, and that they like, within limits?—Yes, but even then (if we are talking now about the certified cases) they may choose a home, but can they get out of it again? It is very difficult to get them out of it.

18,696. You do not mean that they are forcibly detained there?—I mean certified cases—yes, of course, they are.

18,697. I was thinking of cases that were not certified, where they go as voluntary patients, as boarders?—No, I am afraid I have got mixed up. Supposing they went to a licensed house voluntarily and they wanted to get away again, if they are voluntary boarders they can get away again probably at the end of 48 hours. If the patient is not a suitable person to go, he may then be certified; and I am not denying for a moment that the person is probably quite suitable to be certified; but supposing he says, "Yes, well all the same I would rather go somewhere else, even if I am certified," then you get the difficulty of moving him. It is extremely difficult to get a certified patient moved from one place to another, even when they have plenty of means.

18,698. Earl Russell: Why—who makes the difficulty?—The last one I have had a difficulty with was the petitioner, and it very often is the petitioner. It has taken two doctors from London, two of us went up to York at great expense, and a great deal more had to be done before we could get that patient moved. It took me nearly two and a half years to get a patient moved from a mental hospital here down into the country.

18,699. Who is the person who has to give the actual consent, the Board of Control?—The Board of Control can overrule it, or they can supersede the petitioner, but it takes such an interminable time; it is such a cumbersome business.

18,700. Deputy-Chairman: But you were acting as the medical adviser, of course, of the person suffering from the mental trouble?—Yes.

18,701. If you had made a case to the Board of Control, would they not see that the removal took place?—They do ultimately; but, as I have said, it took me, with one thing and another, nearly two and a half years, I believe it was, to remove one patient into the country.

18,702. Sir David Drummond: Surely you are speaking of an exceptional case. I happen to have had some experience in this matter, and it has never been found a difficulty in my case?—In some cases it may not be, but I do think the difficulty of moving them is a serious matter. It is always rather accepted, I think, that if a patient is in a suitable and thoroughly comfortable and well run and properly managed asylum or home, it is unreasonable of him to wish to move away from it; and always, when I have wanted to move patients, I have been asked, "What is there the matter with the place that they are in?" Well, sometimes there is not anything at all the matter with the place that they are in.

18,703. Deputy-Chairman: But have you in cases suggested the removal, or has the patient suggested it to you, Dr. Boyle?—In the last case in which I was concerned it was the sister who came to me and wanted to have the patient removed. It is not that anybody is really trying to be disagreeable about it, it is that it is such a cumbersome business to get it done. The Board of Control are quite willing to help, and so on. In this particular last case I admit the petitioner was difficult.

18,704. Earl Russell: But this is a certified patient. Somebody has got to give leave for them to be moved—who do you say it should be?—If the petitioner will not move the patient, and the Board of Control think that the patient has been there a long time, and wants to come away, I do not see why the Board of Control should not say that that patient should be moved somewhere, and find another place for him.

18,705. So that the Board of Control is still to be the authority; but you mean they should act more readily than they do?—Yes. I do not know what limitations there are on their actions with regard to the petitioners; but it seems to me it should be a comparatively easy thing if patients are unhappy anywhere to get them removed to another place, even if they wanted to be moved to their own house.

18,706. Deputy-Chairman: May I go back to a point? You say you think the licensed houses should be allowed generally—not have them restricted at all?—Yes.

18,707. Would you have them under control?—Yes, where they take certified cases certainly.

18,708. But not the other cases?—Well, unless the case is certified I imagine they have no jurisdiction.

18,709. Earl Russell: You were not asked this, but are you under any kind of control at the Lady Chichester Hospital?—None whatever. (The Countess of Chichester): They do not take certified cases.

18,710. Deputy-Chairman: You say they are not under control in certain cases where the patients are not certified. All the licensed houses will be under control at the present moment although they can take cases which are not certified?—(Dr. Helen Boyle): Yes.

18,711. Do not you think that should be an essential feature of these houses, that there should be some control?—Yes, certainly.

18,712. I mean, you would not allow a house to be set up anywhere to take persons mentally unstable without any supervision, or without any control?—If the patients are mentally unstable, possibly; but not, if they require their liberty interfered with. I feel myself that the chief raison d'être of legal supervision is to see that the patient's liberty is not taken away from him. If their liberty is not taken away from them, I would leave them to go where they liked and do what they liked.

18,713. You would never have anybody certified who was not dangerous to himself, or dangerous to other people?—Yes, practically that is what it amounts to.

18,714. And then you would say that that is the only person who is to be under any supervision?—I do not quite understand.

18,715. I gather that you think that unless the case is certified there should never be supervision?—Yes, no supervision for uncertified cases, because they are free.

18,716. If possible you would prevent certification as long as possible, and in every case where it was possible, would you not?—Yes.

18,717. So that you would have, outside the class whom you certify, a large number of people who were suffering from mental trouble?—Yes.

18,718. Do not they require some protection, do you think?—I am inclined to think that they would suffer less and do better if they were not supervised by any particular authority, until you have to take their liberty away.

18,719. There has been a very strong expression of opinion by many witnesses that it is a mistake to allow licensed houses—shall I put it in this way—to make large fortunes out of people suffering from mental trouble. You have no sympathy with that at all?—No, none at all. If you have free competition it is very unlikely they will make large fortunes, I think it is almost impossible for them to make very large fortunes.

22 June, 1925.]

The Countess of CHICHESTER and Dr. HELEN BOYLE.

[Continued.]

18,720. You mean the good houses will survive and the bad houses will fall out?—Yes.

18,721. And that the doctor and the patient can really look after the whole thing without any legislative interference at all?—As long as there is no interference with the liberty, I think they can certainly. But you will see that I suggested that if nursing homes are not registered, which is a possibility in the future, I believe it might be possible to suggest that any nursing home taking patients of any kind, should be obliged to furnish the names of the doctor in charge of the case on demand.

18,722. You say that, because you do not want to draw any distinction between mental illness and any other form of illness?—Yes.

18,723. But you think it might be desirable in these houses. When I say licensed houses, I suppose you would not have them licensed at all, but simply run as private nursing homes?—Exactly. If they want to take certified cases let them take them, and the Board of Control looks after those certified cases. Those are the ones you would have to control.

18,724. But apart from certified cases, no control—that is your view?—Yes.

18,725. You see one cannot help feeling that there are many cases of mental illness which you do not need to be certified, because they quickly recover; yet you want to detain them, and you want to see that they are not detained longer than they ought to be; you want to see that they are properly provided for, and that no advantage is taken of their mental condition; and up till now these cases have been under a certain supervision or control. Do you think all that is a mistake?—I really feel myself that it just amounts to this, that I do not believe it is any use postponing certification if you have to interfere with the liberty of the person. I think that is the thing that the people do not like, and I think that is the thing that gives rise to the trouble. If you have to interfere with their liberty, I do not believe there is any way of getting round it and making it anything but hard. I think a certificate is no harder than a provisional order.

18,726. I quite follow that; it is only calling the thing by another name; but apart from its duration an observation order is just the same as a final order—that is your view?—Yes, I feel that. I think you will have the same difficulty in getting the patients to be treated.

18,727. Miss Symons: Dr. Boyle, there is one point on what the Chairman has just been asking you which still puzzles me rather. You are not contemplating the certification of all the so-called non-volitional cases?—No; I would leave those without certificates.

18,728. You do not think that in cases of that kind where the patient really has no will power, there is a danger under your proposal, that they might either be put away, or be put upon by designing relatives, or possibly not receive proper treatment if there were no supervision?—I do not believe there is any more danger than there is now. You do not supervise the non-volitional case of any kind. I mean to say, you do not insist upon a patient being certified who is, as I know one now, paralysed and cannot speak. She has had a clot on her brain and she is not a mental case, but you do not insist upon her being certified; yet she is immensely less capable of looking after herself than most of the mental patients.

18,729. When you were making the point about the difficulty of moving the patient, you do not mean, do you, that the medical superintendent objects to the patient being moved. Was it the petitioner objecting in most cases, or have you found the medical superintendent unwilling to have patients removed?—As a rule the medical superintendent is quite co-operative about it; but I remember one case where the medical superintendent said that he would not have a case back if she was taken away, and that gave rise to a certain amount of trouble, because they were rather afraid that, if they took her away, they might not find another place to take her for that same money. That gave rise to the trouble I had with that case which took me such a very long time to get moved, but I think myself it is really more an attitude of mind to it. People do not think of moving their mental relations very much, nobody thinks of moving them, but I think they want a change as much as the rest of us do, and as I have said here, I think the poor do too. If we could exchange them between asylums a bit, I am sure we would have immensely less trouble on the part of the chronics. Give them a bit of change now and then. We should not be so hidebound about settlement. Sometimes their settlement is miles from their friends, and they do not want to go such a long way away.

18,730. Deputy-Chairman: Do they remove them to their settlement, or do they simply charge the place of settlement with their expense?—No, they transfer them.

18,731. I thought they simply charged the place of settlement?—No. For instance, we have had one or two patients who went away from us and were certified. They would like to have stopped at Hellingly which is a mental hospital near us, where one or two of the other patients and friends they have made could go and see them. Then they have been drafted off to some place in the Midlands where they happened to have a settlement.

Earl Russell: This new rating Bill will make a lot of difference to that?

Deputy-Chairman: Yes, quite.

18,732. Earl Russell: Dr. Boyle, have you any experience of the procedure in rate-aided cases, and how it is carried on?—Not very much of course. We see the cases that we occasionally certify, and I have certified a certain number myself.

18,733. In view of what you have been telling us this morning, I should like to know whether you think if a case is certified, it had better go direct to the asylum and not stop in the workhouse?—I think it would be much better to go straight, and I am bound to say that with us in Hove as a rule they do. They are taken by the relieving officer from their house straight to the asylums.

18,734. One of the difficulties now is that the asylums cannot take them in until they are certified, but the workhouse can?—But they are certified before they go.

18,735. Have you got any view about the dietary scale in the rate-aided asylums—do you know anything about it?—Practically nothing; it is years since I was there.

18,736. Now to come to what you say yourself, your No. 3 on page 8: "Freedom for any person who desired it to take in one or more patients for gain." I think as it is, a doctor may take in one patient for gain provided he notifies the Board of Control?—Yes, nearly always, and they can generally get permission to have two, and in rare cases three.

18,737. Do I understand from what you have been saying to the Chairman, that you think the Board of Control ought not to be notified, or is that only in uncertified cases?—Only in uncertified cases.

18,738. I do not want to pursue that because the Chairman went into it at some length, but I gather you think that they might be looked after without any notification to anybody except the doctor or their friends?—The uncertified, yes.

18,739. I think if I may say so, at the bottom of that page, this is rather a false antithesis that you make, is it not—you say that "The sane are often treated by those whom we regard as quacks, faddists and charlatans," and then you say "if we do not guard them why should we guard those who are not sane." Surely the answer is that the sane, even if they are fools, are supposed to have some sense, whereas the other people ex hypothesi have none?—I do not think it is true of the insane that they have none. If they take several mental cases, at any rate, it is very rare to find that there is not one of them who will make it his business to investigate how the home is run in a way that any sane person might. It is very rare to find a mental home which could do some of the things I sometimes come across in the ordinary nursing home. I remember a patient of mine who came and began to get well with me, and then had to be moved; she got well with startling rapidity when she went to an extremely bad home. I think it had every single thing it ought not to have had; she was removed there entirely for economy, and she was so horrified at what went on there that she constituted herself into a sort of private detective, and she was so interested that she got quite well. That is the curious thing about these cases, that you cannot tell what will get them well in the way you can with the others, and that is why you want freedom for them more than for sane people—not less.

22 June, 1925.]

The Countess of CHICHESTER and Dr. HELEN BOYLE.

[Continued.]

18,740. In these things, as you say on page 9 about private asylums, I understand you are in favour of having no monopoly, and of everyone being able to run them; but does that apply to institutions for the certified as well as the uncertified?—Yes, it does.

18,741. Only in the case of the certified you would have notification to the Board of Control?—Yes.

18,742. And no licence from the Board of Control?—I do not really see the reason why. But the Board of Control would visit the certified patients. As a matter of fact, the public and the friends and the servants and the nurses, and all those kind of people, are better protection than any sort of outside supervision can be. A nursing home with a breath of suspicion against it cannot survive, and does not; people get afraid of it.

18,743. I am very glad to hear that.—I have never known a bad one survive except one.

18,744. You trust to competition?—I trust absolutely to competition, because as soon as there is anything against them they get squeezed out. But any form of supervision, again, may guarantee that home in a way that is dangerous. The only one that I know of was the case of a nursing home which was under supervision. It did harm rather than good, because it gave a sense of security when that should not have been given.

18,745. You remember we are dealing with a suspicious public. Will you tell me whether you think this is a thing which is likely to make them less suspicious; you suggest at the bottom of page 9 "Private houses afford freedom for trying out treatments in a way which would be difficult in a public institution"? Is not that the sort of thing that the public might seize upon, and say that the poor are being experimented on?—They are not necessarily poor to begin with, but, on the other hand, if the patient is able to choose her home and the friends are able to choose her home, and they go there in that way, those people will be satisfied. It may not be, in your opinion or my opinion, at all a good method of treatment, but the people would be satisfied with that because they have chosen it.

18,746. Even a sane patient does not choose her treatment?—Do not they? I think very often they do. They go to a doctor because they know what his sort of line is very often.

18,747. I agree you may be able to try experiments, but I doubt whether that would reassure the public?—It is possible, put like that, that it would not; but I think it is true that if they tried it they would like it better, because they would be able to choose a home that would suit their particular type of ideas.

18,748. Now I see on page 11, your No. 5, you go so far as to say that these private houses, which are to be unlicensed and unregistered, and subject to no supervision, are to be allowed to take any patient if his doctor wishes it, although he is certified?—That is what they do, roughly speaking, in Scotland.

18,749. It is a little revolutionary, though, in this country, is it not?—I think if a patient is not obliged to stay there, and can come away when he likes, he will not mind; there is nothing to be afraid of.

18,750. Miss Symons: Can you be quite sure that he is not being obliged to stay?—I think you can. There may be very rare cases possibly where a patient is not as comfortable as he might be, but you have got very few people who have no friends, where there would be no servants, no nurses in the house, and where the head of it would be really thoroughly bad. I do not believe you would get that place to survive at all—certainly not if there was any competition about.

18,751. Earl Russell: Then you suggest that the public asylums should be allowed to take voluntary boarders at the discretion of the medical superintendent?—Yes.

18,752. But his discretion would rather have to be limited to the case being suitable in a rate-aided institution?—Yes. Also, I think, there are some cases who would like to stay rather longer than they ought.

18,753. Then there was only one more question I wanted to ask you, and that was on page 12, where you analyse your 100 cases?—May I say before I go to that, that with regard to the non-volitional cases in homes, I think a great many of them will go to places chosen by themselves and their families, and their doctor. Then I think the doctor being made responsible more or less for the home is a good thing. Some of my colleagues do not agree with that at all, but I think as a matter of actual fact at present the doctor is really, and does regard himself as, responsible very largely for the nursing home his patient is in; and if he thought they were not being properly looked after, I think he would inevitably move them. I believe that is the case actually at the present moment.

18,754. That is the practice now with ordinary cases?—Yes, and these would come under the same heading; if we insured their having somebody looking after them, I believe it would be quite safe. Another thing is this, that at present with the law you get a certain amount of secrecy about it which is bad. Often the cases I have discovered, which have been defectively treated, have been the cases where the friends do not want them to be certified, and the nursing home dare not let them go out, or dare not let them appear for fear they should be forced to certify them. Now that drives the thing underground, and then you are much more likely to have faulty treatment for that reason than for the other.

18,755. May I just direct your attention to page 12 where you give this analysis of 100 cases? Among the hundred there are 12 with no improvement; six of those were discharged to be certified subsequently. I want to know what happened to the other six—were they just turned loose on the world?—Those did not become insane; they were either neurotic cases—

18,756. No improvement does not mean they were insane; it means they were just as little ill as they were when they came in?—Yes, that is it. They may have had to be sent away because they were difficult or tiresome—something of that sort.

18,757. Mr. Snell: Dr. Boyle, reverting for a moment to that question of removal from a place after a certain time, is it your opinion that staying too long in a place may actually encourage a chronic condition?—Yes.

18,758. That is to say, after a certain period they sink into a hopeless torpor, which a change of institution or some break in their lives might prevent?—Yes, I think so, and not only that either; I think they are often converted from peaceable members of an asylum into very difficult chronics, because they get across some member of the staff or some other patients, or they mix the staff up in some delusion or other.

22 June, 1925.]

Dr. EDWARD MAPOTHER, M.R.C.P., F.R.C.S.

[Continued.]

18,759. It is probably impossible to fix a time; that would vary considerably with the state of the patient?—Yes, and some of course like being there.

(The Witnesses withdrew.)

(After a short adjournment.)

THE RIGHT HONOURABLE H. P. MACMILLAN, K.C. (in the Chair).

Dr. EDWARD MAPOTHER, M.R.C.P., F.R.C.S., called and examined.

18,760. Chairman: Dr. Mapother, you are Medical Superintendent of the Maudsley Hospital?—Yes.

18,761. Perhaps we might take from you very shortly your previous experience. Were you, for three years after you received your qualification, locum tenens at three of the London County asylums?—During periods over the first three years, yes.

18,762. And the Metropolitan Asylums Board's Darenth Institution?—Yes.

18,763. In alternation with these appointments, you held other appointments which gave you general experience in medicine, and especially in organic neurology?—Yes.

18,764. In 1908, I think, you were appointed Junior Medical Officer at Long Grove Asylum, then recently opened, and you had reached the rank of Deputy Medical Superintendent there when you were appointed to your present post in April, 1922?—Yes.

18,765. During your last two years in the Army did you serve at various hospitals which were treating war neuroses?—Yes.

18,766. And were you finally in charge of the Neurological Section of the 2nd Western General Hospital, Manchester?—Yes.

18,767. Then I think, from September, 1919, to November, 1920, you were seconded to act under the Ministry of Pensions as Medical Superintendent of the Maudsley Hospital, which was then treating neuroses and mental disorders which had arisen during war service?—Yes.

18,768. I think you have visited a large number of neurological and psychiatric clinics abroad?—Yes.

18,769. Associated with the Universities of Amsterdam, Cologne, Munich, Utrecht, Vienna, and Zurich?—Yes.

18,770. And have you especially investigated the administrative arrangements at those places?—Yes.

18,771. Now, in addition to being Medical Superintendent at Maudsley, are you also Physician in charge of the Department of Psychological Medicine at King's College Hospital, and Lecturer on that subject there?—Yes.

18,772. And you are Lecturer also on Morbid Psychology in the course for the Diploma for Psychological Medicine at Maudsley Hospital?—Yes.

18,773. And you are, I understand, permitted also to engage in practice as a consultant in psychological medicine?—Yes.

18,774. You were a member, were you not, of the Committee of the Medico-Psychological Association which prepared the evidence given before us recently?—Yes.

18,775. I think, for the purposes of your evidence to-day, you are assuming that we have before us what was said by the representatives of that Association, and also the British Medical Association, on the reform of the law and of the administration generally?—Yes.

18,776. For the present purpose, although you have received permission from the London County Council to give evidence, I think you desire us to regard the opinions expressed by you as personal?—Yes.

18,777. We shall do so. It may be useful to put it on the note that the Commission had the advantage of

I know one old man who was in a place for 18 years, and they had the greatest difficulty in getting him to go away.

Deputy-Chairman: Thank you; we are very much obliged to you.

paying a visit on Friday afternoon to your institution, when you were good enough to show us round the establishment and to explain its different departments. May we take it generally that the hospital has three functions, namely, research, teaching, and voluntary treatment?—Yes.

18,778. You have recently issued, have you not, the first Annual Report of the Maudsley Hospital under its present régime?—Yes.

18,779. Copies of that report have been supplied to us all, and we have read it with much interest. A considerable amount of information may be derived from that report upon the initiation of your present system and the progress made up to date?—Up to about February of last year, yes. I am just on the point of issuing another report, but I have only outlined facts to give you about the second year. I will give you some further facts if you wish them.

18,780. We shall be very glad to receive that report when it has been prepared. In supplement, then, of the evidence which we have already received from the Medico-Psychological Association and the British Medical Association, and the information which is before us in this report, Dr. Mapother, I think you desire to put before us your views on general lines with regard to the reform of the existing system?—Yes.

18,781. Having brought you up to that point, perhaps now you might indicate to us the points which you specially desire to bring before us this afternoon?—I think that I might say they are really summarised on page 4 of my précis. I think there are four main kinds of reform needed. Firstly, the adaptation of the legal formalities required to the patient's attitude towards his treatment; by that I mean the question of whether he is desirous of treatment, or incapable of expressing an opinion upon it, or definitely objects to necessary treatment.

18,782. That is the first aspect?—That is the first aspect. Then the second, upon which I lay most stress, is the provision or approval of specialised types of institutions, which would deal separately on the one hand with the chronic and the recoverable cases, and in each of those classes with the patients who were objecting or objectionable, as I have put it, and on the other hand with those who are neither objecting nor objectionable. Then the third aspect, I think, is the provision for teaching and research—the extension of the present provisions for teaching and research.

18,783. With regard to the first matter, do you regard the classification of patients, from the point of view of the degree of volition which they possess, as very important?—I think it is very important indeed. I think these formalities attending reception are very important as an accompaniment or as a condition of their treatment in specialised institutions. I do not lay as much stress as perhaps some people do on the effect of merely altering the formalities and treating the patient in the same type of institution; but I think that if they accompanied treatment in specialised institutions they would be very important.

18,784. I gather your view is that the main classification, from the point of view of administrative arrangements for patients, is this: first, those who are able to co-operate in their treatment; secondly, those who are merely negative, and, thirdly, those who are actively resistant to treatment?—Yes, that is the main classification, with this proviso, that in speaking of those three classes I am speaking of certifiable patients. I would put outside of those classes the patients who are uncertifiable, the merely neurotic, for example, whom I regard, and I think it is very important to regard, as simply suffering from another degree of mental disorder.

22 June, 1925.]

Dr. EDWARD MAPOTHER, M.R.C.P., F.R.C.S.

[Continued.]

18,785. These are persons whom you would relegate to medical treatment as persons suffering from a certain form of ailment, namely, a mental disorder?—Quite. I think no questions of legal arrangements should arise in the case of the entirely uncertifiable. Of course, in the first two classes of certifiable cases I think the legal formalities associated with their treatment should be very greatly reduced.

18,786. The difficulty of course occurs to one that the type of case you are referring to first of all, that is to say, the mentally ailing as distinguished from the certifiable case, may at any moment pass into the latter category?—I quite agree they may, and for that reason I do not suggest that there should be any exact correspondence between the institution in which you treat them and this classification for the purpose of legal formalities. For example, at the Maudsley we have patients who are certifiable but willing, and those who are entirely uncertifiable; and I think that that is inevitable, for the very reason you mentioned, that at any moment a patient who enters your institution entirely uncertifiable may become certifiable, though still a willing patient.

18,787. But you would have no patients in Maudsley who are resistant to treatment, whether certifiable or uncertifiable?—None; they are all entitled to discharge on giving just sufficient notice to communicate with their friends.

18,788. That is the statutory 24 hours under the Act of Parliament?—Quite.

18,789. Of course, there is always the difficulty of the value of the consent, and the continuing effect of a consent, particularly in the case of a progressive mental malady. You may say that at the inception there may be a degree of intelligence sufficient to appreciate the situation and to co-operate in treatment, but if unfortunately there is not progress and the case becomes worse, then the consent, however reasonably taken at the outset may cease to be really an effectual consent?—I quite agree; but that raises the whole difference of principle, which I think put shortly is this: at the present time there is an excessive tendency to consider that certifiable patients are to be regarded as unwilling, unless there is definite evidence to the contrary; whereas I would put it that a patient is to be regarded as willing, unless there is definite evidence that he is unwilling.

18,790. You would only bring in the legal compulsion where it was necessary to use restraint against the wishes of the patient?—Exactly.

18,791. May you not have the type of patient who is rather volatile in temperament, and says quite cheerfully, "I am quite willing to come into your institution," and when in your institution as a voluntary inmate proposes to do quite outrageous things? You would have to restrain that person, would you not?—We should not keep a case of that sort; I would put that patient among the objectionable; I would not keep a patient in a clinic who is unmanageable.

18,792. Even though that patient said, "I want to stay on at Maudsley," would you say to him, "You may wish to stay, but, you know, we cannot have people like you, who will not conform to our rules"?—I think there is a definite limit to the usefulness of the clinics. They are a supplement to and not a substitute for mental hospitals and other arrangements. That type of patient would, I think, be treatable in the observation hospitals to replace the observation wards; but a patient who for that reason or any other is objectionable to others or unmanageable in the clinic must go, I think.

18,793. In your own practice at Maudsley, patients reach you, I understand, either through coming first of all to your out-patient department?—Three-fourths come that way.

18,794. Or are recommended to you from other sources—no doubt by their medical advisers?—Yes; most of them coming from their medical advisers come to the out-patient department. We generally require their attendance at the out-patient department, unless they are recommended by an expert of some kind.

18,795. Then you really exercise a certain measure of selection at that stage?—Yes, that is the function of the out-patient department, very largely.

18,796. You are able to judge which patients are likely to be benefited from your institution, and are appropriate for treatment there?—Yes.

18,797. The others, I suppose, you find it necessary to reject?—Yes.

18,798. And in other cases, because they are resistant and for other reasons, it will be necessary for them to be certified and sent to an asylum?—Yes.

18,799. Do you attach importance to having no certifications carried on in Maudsley?—Yes, I think it is very important indeed. I think the willingness of people to approach it voluntarily depends upon that—upon a knowledge that they will not, without their consent, be certified while they are there.

18,800. You are, of course, the person who can speak with more authority than anybody else, because you have carried out the experiment on a larger scale, as far as England, at least, is concerned; and you think it would be a deterrent to patients' willingness to avail themselves of such a clinic as yours, if there were a possibility of their being certified under your roof?—I not only think it, but I have had experience of the other aspect. I was in charge under the Ministry of Pensions, and in those days we did certify at the hospital. In my opinion, the atmosphere was entirely different; and I may say, from my own point of view, that I had to be one of the certifying doctors, and it made my relations with the patients very unsatisfactory—I mean, in going into certain wards, I think my visits were regarded as rather terrifying.

18,801. Rather ominous, shall we say?—Quite.

18,802. Mr. Micklem: Do the patients who come to you now know they will not be certified?—Entirely.

18,803. How is it brought to their knowledge?—It is an understanding that is given to them; it is widely known; everybody knows it.

18,804. Chairman: Perhaps it is that they are all informed that they are voluntary patients?—And can leave at 24 hours' notice; they are given written notice of that, of course.

18,805. Do you find that all those who enter your institution voluntarily really appreciate that they are voluntary patients?—I think all of them do, except those who have become rather clouded in their consciousness since they came in. There could not be any ignorance on the subject, because everybody else in the ward knows it. I mean, if any patient was reluctant to stay, and said so aloud, several people in the ward would immediately inform him, "You have only got to write a note to the doctor."

18,806. Would you approve of taking any obligation from a patient at the outset to submit himself for treatment for a stated period, say three or six months?—I do not think it would be so useful in the clinics as in certain other types of hospital. I think it would be a very useful thing in certain cases; of course, such a power does exist under the Inebriates Act, and there are a number of cases, drink and drug cases, where such a thing would be useful; many of such cases, of course, would be uncertifiable.

22 June, 1925.]

Dr. EDWARD MAPOTHER, M.R.C.P., F.R.C.S.

[Continued.]

18,807. I was thinking of the bracing effect of a resolution, and assistance to keep that resolution, such as you get when you are brought into the well-regulated establishment?—I quite agree. There are a number of patients who from day to day can hardly make up their minds whether they want to go or to stay. Solve the problem for them, and they are easier in their minds. But I do not think that such cases would generally be suitably treated at the clinic, for the reason that if the patient complained after giving a six months' undertaking, we will say, and became reluctant and was protesting against detention, it would not be favourable to the atmosphere of the clinic.

18,808. And I can see, also, that an obligation of that sort manifestly could not be enforced?—It could not, in the clinics.

18,809. Therefore, it would only have a certain moral value?—I think it might be useful in some other institutions where some of the patients were compelled to remain.

18,810. But it is very important, I think, to note your considered opinion that institutions of this sort, where uncertified persons are treated in clinics, should be places entirely dissociated from the process of certification?—Yes, entirely.

18,811. And if a patient unhappily in your institution becomes worse, so that certification is necessary and confinement in an asylum is appropriate, you then, I suppose, inform the relatives, or the relieving officer, if there are no relatives?—Practically always the relatives; we adopt the same measures as one would adopt at a general hospital; simply give advice to the relatives, tell the relatives that they should go to the relieving officer.

18,812. And consequently the patient, if ultimately relegated to an asylum, is not relegated to that asylum by any action of yours?—No.

18,813. That is valuable for preserving the voluntary atmosphere of the institution?—I think it is essential.

18,814. What view do you entertain on the subject of the non-volitional patients? I can understand the comparatively simple case of the voluntary patient and I can understand the resistant patient, whose liberty you must infringe for his own good; but I have more difficulty with regard to the intermediate case, the non-volitional case, as to how he should be treated. Have you any views as to that type of case?—I think they should be dealt with in the clinics, provided they are not objectionable to others. I think one has got to bear in mind that they include a great many of the most recoverable cases, a great many of the people who are very seriously ill, a great many of the puerperal cases, and so forth, and that they are the cases with regard to which it is specially desirable to keep them out of an asylum. They are the cases who most permanently recover, in many instances, and I think it is very important indeed. We do not take them at the Maudsley Hospital at present, because, of course, a definite application for admission is a condition of admission, but I think that in the future clinic they should be admissible.

18,815. Therefore, this type of case, the non-volitional case, which you have in mind, is, of course, not the idiot, who has no power of volition, but a person whose powers of volition are temporarily in abeyance?—Quite.

18,816. I am not thinking of the mentally defective, but we are talking about the person who is ordinarily rational, but whose volition is for the time being really in abeyance?—Quite; personally, I would apply the term to the people where it is chronically in abeyance; but I think the important class is the one I have mentioned, the confusional case really.

18,817. How would you suggest that that case should be dealt with as regards procedure? It is manifest that the patient himself, or herself, cannot apply for admission. Do you suggest that it should be done on behalf of the patient by a representative or relative?—Yes, backed by a recommendation from the doctor.

18,818. Do you think that would be a sufficient safeguard?—I think so.

18,819. Then have you any view as to keeping in touch with the Board of Control or other central authority in the case of patients who are under voluntary treatment?—I think that every institution that ever receives any certifiable patient of any kind should be approved by the Board of Control, and that every admission to such an institution should be notified to them, and that they should have the power of visitation of such institutions. I would suggest that institutions which take nothing but uncertifiable cases should not be subject to any such control.

18,820. Should not even be required to report?—Not if they are purely confined to uncertifiable cases.

18,821. Mr. Micklem: How are you going to draw the line between certifiable and uncertifiable; it is not a clean cut, is it?—No; it is a practical distinction based upon whether the patient is prone to conduct which is seriously detrimental to himself or to others, or whether he is incapable of looking after himself or being looked after by his friends or relatives.

18,822. Chairman: Of course, it is still the difficulty which I think the medical profession feel at the present moment, of determining whether they are or are not infringing the law; because the present law is that you must not have a person who is certifiable in your house for treatment for gain. I can imagine that it may be most embarrassing to a practitioner to say of a particular patient whether he is really a certifiable case or not, so that at a particular moment he becomes guilty of an infraction of the law. As Mr. Micklem says, the edges are not definite?—They are always bound to be ill-defined. It is a matter of opinion, of course. At the present moment the determining opinion is that of the Board of Control, and I think that would necessarily remain so.

18,823. Can you suggest any protection for the doctor? Let us assume a medical practitioner, skilled in mental treatment, desirous of conducting a nursing home in his department, just as a surgeon conducts a nursing home in his department. The surgeon has no menace hanging over him of legal prosecution. The other doctor has. He is never quite sure whether at any given moment he may or may not be breaking the law?—He would have the option which is exercised by a certain number of people running homes for uncertifiable cases now, of writing to the Board of Control, describing the case, and asking their opinion upon it. That is actually done at the present moment, if there is any doubt in the mind of people.

18,824. Do you not think it might be met by the system of approving the houses or nursing homes: registration of them and approval of them?—I do suggest that: that every home that ever takes a certifiable case should be registered. I think if a universal registration of nursing homes could be instituted, it would be a very valuable thing; but in such a case would the homes which took these neurotic patients be liable to visitation by the Board of Control, because it is the Board of Control's opinion that will necessarily be the determining opinion? Unless every home is liable to visitation by the Board of Control, I do not see how it really helps.

18,825. Of course, you could not very well expand the functions of the Board of Control to make them visitors of every nursing home?—Quite so; otherwise, I do not quite see how it helps to have universal registration.

18,826. You would not have registration confined to a particular type of nursing home which takes cases of nervous breakdown or nervous cases generally?—I think the universal registration of nursing homes is a desirable thing, but I do not think that is particularly relevant to the question of the avoidance of illegal detention.

22 June, 1925.]

Dr. EDWARD MAPOTHER, M.R.C.P., F.R.C.S.

[Continued.]

18,827. Mr. Micklem: What is the good of registration unless there is some supervision?—I think it should involve some supervision. My suggestion is that every approved home would have to notify every patient admitted to it and would be liable to visitation by the Board of Control.

18,828. As a nursing home?—Every institution that took any certifiable cases.

18,829. Do you mean only those that took certifiable cases? I rather gathered you thought it should be all nursing homes?—I take it that elsewhere it would be a question of visitation by some officials of the Ministry of Health other than the Board of Control.

18,830. Chairman: Registration accompanied by supervision under some regulations, no doubt. I think that is a very difficult department of our investigation: the question of the treatment of the non-certified case by the private practitioner in a nursing home, to ensure the necessary protection for the public without depriving the patient of the benefit which is to be got from a private nursing home?—Yes, it is very difficult. At the present time, of course, the treatment of uncertifiable cases is extensively carried on, and the treatment of certifiable cases is carried on, too, though illegally.

18,831. Lord Russell: We have had evidence from Dr. Boyle that they ought to be treated without any supervision or any report at all?—Dr. Boyle goes farther than I do.

18,832. Chairman: The difficulty in this problem is that on the one hand you have the advocate of the case being looked at from the purely medical point of view; on the other hand, you have the legal point of view, which is always emphasising that aspect of it; and this is a department where these two aspects appeal one to one class of mind and the other to the other. We have to do our best to reconcile these views. You, naturally, look at the problem from the point of view of the patient whom you hope to cure?—Yes. I entirely agree to rigid legal control in every case where there is objection on the part of the patient.

18,833. Where for the treatment of the patient it is necessary to invade the liberty of that patient's will, there should be legal formalities preceding such invasion?—Yes, I think it is absolutely necessary.

18,834. I am much impressed with the general proposition you put forward—that, as matters stand just now, certification is the preface to treatment?—It is for the certifiable poor, absolutely.

18,835. Whereas, what you would aim at is that treatment should be the means of avoiding certification?—Certainly.

18,836. That really puts your position in a sentence?—Quite.

18,837. But then, if you are to have treatment which is to result in the avoidance of certification, you must provide the means for achieving that end?—Quite.

18,838. At present, you point to this, that there are no means, or almost none?—Practically none.

18,839. Your institution is in that respect a pioneer, because it does treat with a view to avoiding certification?—Quite. The general hospitals do not treat as severe cases.

18,840. As long as the case is willing and recoverable?—Yes, those are our two demands.

18,841. Mr. Micklem: Rather on a smaller scale they are working in the same direction?—Yes, but they are not legally authorised to take as severe cases as we are. Those should be the two criteria: the willingness and the recoverability.

18,842. Mr. Snell: If you decide, having admitted a patient, that he or she is not recoverable, then you do not retain them?—No; we notify the friends.

18,843. Chairman: I am not keeping entirely to the order of your précis, because I am taking advantage of your presence here to put to you one or two of our general difficulties. From your experience of asylum treatment, apart from Maudsley, do you think it is desirable to eliminate from our asylums the irrecoverable chronic cases?—I should suggest that they are what asylums are for.

18,844. You would rather keep that class of case there?—That is almost all I would have at the asylums eventually; but I am not suggesting that it is practicable at once.

18,845. The reason why I put that question was this: that we have had some evidence to this effect, that asylums ought to be places of hopefulness and places where cure may be looked for, and that if you have a large proportion of the population consisting of senile demented, persons for whom all that you can do is to give them shelter and comfort until they die, you are distracting the staff from the task of treatment and making them really hotel keepers for a class of person for whom they really can do little or nothing medically.—In a sense, I suggest that that is the situation now, that the presence of the extremely chronic elements in the asylums is rather detrimental to the new case, and that the new case and the recoverable case in their own interests should be treated apart. I do not believe myself as a matter of asylum experience that the discharge of others has any stimulating effect upon the chronics who are left behind on each committee day; I have never noticed any cheering effect in that. There are a large number of institutions for mental defectives and so forth where discharge is practically non-existent, and they are quite contented institutions.

18,846. We shall need to have, and probably we may have in an ideal state, quite a number of institutions; because there is your type of institution where the voluntary patient is to be treated but where there is to be no certification; then you require institutions where certified and resistant patients are received; but they in their turn are different, or may be different from those for chronic cases?—Yes. I have spoken of them in my précis as observation hospitals, replacing the present observation wards of workhouses.

18,847. Yes; I appreciate that you are telling us of what you think would be desirable rather than what may be immediately practicable?—I think progress has got to be gradual, but I think that particular step, the institution of observation hospitals, should come very soon, because I think it is so essential to the success of the clinics. I think it is the co-operation between those two types of hospital that is going to make the difference. We are not getting at the Maudsley Hospital by any means all the cases we might, and many cases that go into the observation wards and thence to the asylums could come to us. If there were better co-ordination between a few observation hospitals and a few clinics, I am quite certain that a great many cases would never need to go to the asylums.

18,848. Earl Russell: Is there anything against such observation wards being in the asylums themselves?—I think it is undesirable to treat a new case in contact with the chronic case. I am suggesting that most cases in the observation hospitals would be under the provisional order.

18,849. I should have thought you could have had a separate wing, with separate access, which would do at least as well as the observation wards of workhouses?—As well perhaps as the observation wards of workhouses, but not as separate observation hospitals. The idea of observation hospitals or "receiving houses" has been mooted for 20 years; the London County Council favour it.

18,850. Chairman: Would your scheme involve really the staging of the matter first of all in the voluntary clinic, in-patient and out-patient; secondly, the observation home, where patients who had ceased to be voluntary or were incapable of being managed in a voluntary clinic, should for a period be under observation and treatment; and thirdly, only as a last resort, the asylum?—Yes. I do not mean that it would necessarily be a progress step by step.

22 June, 1925.]

Dr. EDWARD MAPOTHER, M.R.C.P., F.R.C.S.

[Continued.]

18,851. Some of the cases would have to be taken to the asylum right away?—I think they should all pass through the observation hospital, though they might not wait there very long if they were hopeless.

18,852. If you had a senile dement, I suppose such a case would pass to the asylum straight away?—Yes.

18,853. That provision might be a consummation devoutly to be wished, but it would be a very expensive matter administratively, would it not? Your establishment, which at present deals with a relatively small population passing through your institution, is costly per head, is it not?—Yes; but I would like, if I may, to say something on that question of cost.

18,854. Please do.—There is, to a certain degree, a fallacy involved. I am not denying that it is costly and is bound to be costly, because when you are dealing with a small number your central charges are bound to be high; the salaries of the superintendent, matron, clerk, and house steward, and people like that, are spread over a relatively small number of patients, so a small institution is always expensive; but one has got to remember that one is comparing the cost of a hospital like the Maudsley with the cost of an asylum as a whole. It is strictly comparable to the cost of the admission wards of the asylum, and that is a very different figure. We have got a nursing staff that is high in proportion to the number of patients; it is out of all proportion to that at an asylum taken as a whole; but it is exactly the same proportion of nurses to patients as that in the reception ward of a mental hospital. I happen to know, for example, that at Long Grove the number of nurses per patient in the reception hospital is exactly the same as at the Maudsley; so that your reception hospitals at the asylums, which are the comparable things, are far more expensive of course than the asylum as a whole.

18,855. That particular department of a general lunatic asylum may be as expensive as yours?—It is not quite so expensive, because, of course, we have a much higher proportion of medical staff, and I think on the whole we feed our patients better, and so forth; and our central salaries, of course, are high. Those points come in, but if the clinics were doing the work which is now done by the reception hospitals at the asylums, the rate of the asylums or the expenditure at the asylums would be correspondingly diminished.

18,856. There would be a set-off in that respect?—Yes, a considerable set-off.

18,857. Mr. Snell: The cost of the pathological laboratory is added?—It is separate now.

18,858. Earl Russell: And the costs ought to be distributed among all the asylums?—They are.

18,859. Chairman: You are doing work for them all there?—Yes.

18,860. Would you wish to see similar clinics established in all large centres of population throughout the country?—Yes, everywhere; and more than one in London.

18,861. And do you think it would be possible to work them on a larger scale; because, if I may say so, it did strike one that a great benefit to the patients was the relatively small size of the institution, in enabling each patient to have the benefit of your personal supervision as head of the establishment, as well as the attention of your subordinates?—I think they might be reasonably cheapened by about doubling them. I think that it would be workable to have a "Maudsley" of about 300 to 400 beds; but I think they would lose efficiency if they were much bigger than that.

18,862. How far do you carry that view in regard to the size of lunatic asylums generally? Do you think you can have adequate medical supervision of a large asylum of possibly 2,000 or 3,000 inmates, male and female?—I think the supervision as regards chronic cases is perfectly adequate. I do not think size matters so much. It is the mixed character of the asylum that is the drawback; and if they were institutions for chronics, I think the large size has many advantages.

18,863. You spread out the on-cost, of course, and perhaps the patients are not so sensitive to their being brought together?—It is economical; and you can make many arrangements of a practical kind for a large number of patients that you cannot make for a small number; organisation of industries, and so forth.

18,864. But if you are dealing with patients who may reward your treatment by becoming cured, you cannot possibly handle anything like these large numbers, can you?—No. I do not say the supervision is ineffective at the asylums, but it is only as effective as it is because relatively few patients are recoverable. Of course, a very large proportion of the attention of the medical staff is directed to just those few; the senior medical officer probably deals personally with only about 100 cases.

18,865. In your case all your patients may repay treatment and therefore receive attention with that hope?—Yes.

18,866. Would you put the figure at just about double the existing accommodation at Maudsley as being the limit of personal supervision?—Yes. I have not thought it out accurately; but I think that would be as large as one would care to go in an institution of that kind.

18,867. I think we have your point upon the classification of the different types, and your point upon the desirability of treatment with a view to avoiding certification rather than certification as the passport to treatment?—Yes.

18,868. Then I think you have a view as to the desirability of assimilating procedure and place of treatment in the case of poor patients and paying patients?—Yes, I have. There are one or two ways in which I view that. I have suggested private institutions rather analogous to what I have spoken of as the clinic and observation hospital for the poor. I think the really desirable places for the treatment of the paying patient would be analogous institutions, some on the lines of the Maudsley, taking the uncertifiable and the quiet, willing and non-volitional cases, and others rather, perhaps, on the lines of the observation hospital, taking again the recoverable case, but those who were objecting or objectionable. A very rough comparison would be a place like Bethlem, for the objecting and objectionable, and a place rather on the lines of Swaylands, but taking some certifiable cases, which, of course, places of that sort cannot do at present. Curable private patients should be treated in such places as far as possible, rather than in scattered nursing homes, for the reason that in the case of paying patients adequate treatment, laboratory investigation, and so forth, becomes very difficult and expensive, if it is not conducted in a place with its own laboratory. I do not say that it should be compulsory to put patients in such places, but I think that the institution of private places on those lines is very desirable. Then, again, another point of assimilation that I would like to emphasize is that I think the quiet, willing but certifiable patient in the well-to-do classes should have the option of voluntary treatment in a doctor's home, in the same sort of way as a poor patient might be boarded out. At the present time, an insane patient cannot be a voluntary boarder in private care. I think that is a very serious weakness in the law. It is the most desirable kind of single care there is, I think.

18,869. Mr. Micklem: I think the doctors could take one patient, or two patients?—Under certificates, Sir, but there is no such thing as a voluntary boarder in private care. If insane, a person can only be a voluntary patient in a registered hospital or licensed house; but you cannot get private care.

22 June, 1925.]

Dr. EDWARD MAPOTHER, M.R.C.P., F.R.C.S.

[Continued.]

18,870. Chairman: Unless the case is certified?—Unless the case is certified.

18,871. Mr. Micklem: Do not the Board of Control make some exceptions there? I thought Dr. Boyle was telling us that by application to the Board of Control you could get leave to retain a private patient, or more than one?—There is no provision for it in the Act; of course, the matter does rest with the Board of Control; but I do not think there is any regular provision for it in the Act.

18,872. No. The only provision in the Act is that licensed houses may take boarders, or registered hospitals apparently may take boarders, although it is not so expressly provided?—There is no provision for a voluntary boarder in private care. I do not know what the Board of Control may do in the matter.

18,873. Chairman: Do you think that it would be an advantage to enable that class of case, that is, the uncertified case, to be treated in a doctor's house?—I think so. I think for a great many quiet, harmless cases, it is the happiest sort of surroundings they can have.

18,874. They have the advantage of medical supervision at hand?—Yes.

18,875. Of course, one has always to bear in mind the possibility of abuse?—Again, it should be subject to supervision and control.

18,876. And visitation?—Yes.

18,877. You referred to the fact that there is the system of boarding-out of poor cases?—Yes.

18,878. That has obtained to a considerable extent in Scotland, where patients are sent out to cottagers' houses throughout the country and are visited by Deputy Commissioners of the Scottish Board of Control?—Yes.

18,879. You would figure the same type of visitation by some Commissioner, or Deputy-Commissioner, of patients in single care?—Yes, possibly you would require decentralised visitation.

18,880. You could hardly expect the Commissioners themselves to go round all the individual cases if this was taken advantage of largely?—No; of course, you could not do that, though they now have to visit the same patients if they are certified; but I think that the thing might spread and become a bigger problem.

18,881. Mr. Micklem: I suppose you think that the present licensed houses might well be increased and that registered hospitals might well be increased?—I would say especially registered hospitals.

18,882. Chairman: But the registered hospital is not an institution one can call into being at once very well, because it is really a charity; it has its own foundation?—It has been, of course, but there is no reason why a registered hospital should not be just self-supporting—self-supporting and not profit-making. In the past registered hospitals were always endowed; I do not see why they should be; I can imagine a registered hospital which was just self-supporting, without endowments.

18,883. That would mean it would have to support itself either by the fees charged to patients, in which case it simply becomes a non-profit-making concern?—Yes, under the management of disinterested people, of course.

18,884. Or it might be assisted by contributions from the public, which makes it a charitable institution?—Yes; it is difficult to imagine getting contributions from year to year. I do not think that for a registered hospital you would get charitable contributions for the well-to-do every year.

18,885. I do not think you would. That rather tends in this direction: that you would like to see the type of institution which we know at present as a licensed house, which is conducted for profit, transformed more into the likeness of the registered hospital, which is comparable in treatment, but which is not run for profit?—Quite. I do not want to be taken as suggesting any criticism of the licensed houses at all. It is more a matter of theory and principle.

18,886. We quite understand. Do you think that some relief might be got by dedicating one institution to one type of case and another kind of institution to another type of case, where you are dealing with large centres of population, like London? At present each of the large asylums has all types in it?—I think that is very important indeed.

18,887. Do you think it would be better to distribute the cases among the institutions available, so that each institution would have its own type?—I think that would have a great effect in promoting contentment, especially if the voluntary system of admission to asylums was authorised. In that way you would get the discontented and protesting people largely confined to certain institutions; the rest would be happy and content. I think you would again have to separate them out, because the worst feature of the mental hospital of the present time is the presence of the noisy and refractory patients; I think it must strike everybody.

18,888. I think that is a very impressive fact. You think of the patient who is brought in, possibly excited and nervous and apprehensive, and finds himself for the first time in a place where he has gone for treatment, exposed to noise and disturbance; one can well see what a harmful effect that would have.—Yes, and to some extent it goes on later. Classify in your wards as you may, you have a relatively small number of gardens, and you will find in a garden adjoining quiet and well-conducted people, and reaching them from a little distance the obscene screams of the noisy, refractory patient, who either utters filth or howls like a wild beast. That sort of thing going on day after day must be rather trying to quiet and well-behaved people.

18,889. What is your solution of that?—I suggest chronic, noisy patients in one institution. I agree it would be a hideous institution, but I think it is better that they should be concentrated in one place than that they should make life unbearable to other people.

18,890. Mr. Micklem: Would you put the chronic noisy cases with the chronic quiet cases?—No. I suppose it is possible really to get them isolated in very remote villas. It might be done (I do not know) by keeping them in one institution, but my opinion is that, once they are unfortunately so—I mean the case that year in and year out is like that—the concentration of those and their separation from others would be a considerable improvement.

18,891. What about the type of case which is very violent but of short duration—not an uncommon type of case?—Quite. I think you would have to treat those in an institution where there were quiet patients, and have a special villa for them. If the improved periods were relatively short they might have to be at the institution for the chronic refractory cases; but you should have a villa there in which the temporarily quiet people would be kept.

18,892. I understand it to be your view that it is most undesirable that mental cases should live together without discrimination?—Yes.

18,893. And that you ought particularly to protect the quieter cases from disturbance by the noisy cases?—Yes.

18,894. Because medically you regard the noise and disturbance and violence of such cases as very detrimental to the cure?—Yes, and it is intolerably unpleasant to the quiet chronic case.

18,895. Then the ideal classification, I take it from you, would be that the noisy patients and disturbing patients should be in one institution, and the quiet patients in another institution?—Yes.

18,896. But you cannot achieve that because temporarily some quiet patient may become noisy; then you should have means of isolating any noisy patient while noisy?—Quite.

18,897. Mr. Snell: Do you not always tend to have noisy and refractory patients in an admission ward?

22 June, 1925.]

Dr. EDWARD MAPOTHER, M.R.C.P., F.R.C.S.

[Continued.]

—Yes; a move has been made by providing for two admission wards in some of the mental hospitals, and it is a very good one.

18,898. Chairman: It is a pretty rough classification, is it not, simply to say "quiet" and "noisy"? —Yes.

18,899. It is not merely the noise that may be detrimental?—I have used in my précis the word "objectionable" to include all sorts of offences. I do not mean only noise; there are many other forms of offensiveness.

18,900. But you think no harm would arise to the offensive cases inter se if they were all together?—I do not think so. As a matter of practical experience, one comes across a great many nurses who are devoted to the nursing of that sort of patient and who will threaten to resign if you move them out of a refractory ward. There are a great number of nurses with a special gift for that, and a real devotion to it.

18,901. That is a most remarkable statement?—It is a remarkable fact, but I think it is a fairly well known one. I think they are the best kind of nurses, those who have a real sense of their vocation. There are a large number of nurses who hate that spell of their duty.

18,902. Mr. Micklem: Are you speaking of male or female nurses?—Both. I have in my mind a couple of female nurses, but I have known a good many.

18,903. Chairman: I think you will probably find the vocational sense stronger among women than among men in that work, do you not?—I do not know that that is so. At the present time there is a tendency rather for the female nurses to come in in a very transitory way, whereas the male nurses do come to regard it as their permanent calling and settle down to it.

18,904. We have heard about a large number of young women who just pass through, but I was thinking rather of those who become permanently settled in the institutions?—I am a very ardent advocate of female nursing of male patients.

18,905. That was to be my next question. You have had considerable experience of that—would you recommend the use of female nurses in all cases?—Yes, in the clinics. In one ward we have three male nurses. The ward is in charge of a sister, and a staff nurse, but we have no ward that is not really run by women.

18,906. Have you some male attendants who are under the lady matron?—In one ward, yes.

18,907. Do you find that causes any friction?—No; we have had no trouble.

18,908. Mr. Snell: Then your patients, if I may say so, are selected; you do not retain those who are specially refractory?—No, that is perfectly true. I am not for a moment saying you could do the same universal female nursing in mental hospitals; I only say you can spread it much further than it has gone. It does of course cause a very slight restriction of the cases we might take but it is a much smaller restriction than one might think, because a great many unmanageable patients are more manageable by a woman than a man.

18,909. Chairman: You add that the attendance of a woman nurse is of itself therapeutic?—Yes, I think it is undoubtedly.

18,910. Mrs. Mathew: Your nurses are trained in both branches?—All except our probationers; that is more than half our staff. All our sisters and staff nurses are trained in general nursing.

18,911. Chairman: We have not been taking your points exactly in order, because so many of the topics you have touched upon have proved so attractive as we went on. There is one observation that you made which is of interest to us. From your considerable experience of public asylums, you inform us that the defects which you have observed do not lie in the direction of unjustifiable detention, neglect or ill-treatment, but rather in other directions?—Yes, quite.

18,912. Let us consider those other directions where you think the disadvantages of the present system lie. You have summarised these on page 9 of your précis?—Yes.

18,913. Is it first of all, the mixing up in one institution of cases of different types?—Yes, I think that is the real drawback. The results, I think, are those that I have mentioned there also.

18,914. First of all, you have under the same roof the curable cases, the incurable cases, and those who need detention but are resistant?—Yes, quite.

18,915. And is classification under those types inevitably imperfect?—Yes, I think that it is. It is somewhat a matter of what I was mentioning just now. Classify as you may in your wards they are rather apt at any rate to hear each other, and they are bound to some extent to mix in central arrangements like church, the visiting room, at occupations and at entertainments, and so forth; it is almost impossible to avoid it.

18,916. The social environment of the patient is a very material matter, I should think?—Very. Of course, every mental hospital does its very utmost to render the classification as perfect as possible, and most of them are provided with an admission hospital and a convalescent ward, which are entirely separate from the main building. In spite of that, there is a certain amount of contact.

18,917. This feature of asylum life in our country at the present time under the existing system, I gather, in your view, deters people from taking advantage of such institutions, and also deters the best class of nurse or attendant from selecting that work?—I think that is so.

18,918. These are both unfortunate features?—I would point to what I was saying about half our staff being trained nurses. I do not think in any asylum in the country you could get that state of affairs.

18,919. Now let us consider with you a little what you would wish to see established in any large centre of population. First of all, there must be a number of "Maudsley" institutions, obviously?—Quite.

18,920. You must have a clinic to which people would be attracted at the initial stages of the ailment?—Yes.

18,921. And where they may receive treatment in a clinic?—Yes.

18,922. That is an indispensable part of your system as you envisage it?—Yes.

18,923. Then the observation hospital. I have a little more difficulty in seeing its role. Perhaps you might develop that idea with us a little, Dr. Mapother?—I imagine them as replacing, as I have said, the present observation wards, and having three or four in London, associated with an equal number of clinics, perhaps one associated more or less with each clinic. The patients who would go into the observation hospitals would be the new patients that were unsuitable for the clinic. They would be unsuitable because they were either objecting or objectionable.

18,924. Let us assume that one has arrived at your clinic; the case has been seen by you, or by one of your assistants, and found to be a case unsuitable for reception at Maudsley, but suitable for this observation hospital; the relatives would be recommended to take the patient to the observation hospital?—Yes, and a certain number might leave our wards, and in the same way the relatives would be recommended to take the patient to the observation hospital, as they are now recommended to approach the relieving officer.

18,925. But this is to be an intermediate stage before certification, and which may possibly result in avoiding certification also?—Yes.

18,926. For such a case, I take it, you would want compulsory powers for retention?—I think you might want a provisional order. I do not think it should be a definite certification, in the first instance.

22 June, 1925.]

Dr. EDWARD MAPOTHER, M.R.C.P., F.R.C.S.

[Continued.]

18,927. It would not probably require that the patient should be certified as of unsound mind, but should be certified as a person whom it is desirable to restrain in the meantime?—Quite; though some of them might be willing or non-volitional cases that were objectionable, as well as those who were definitely objecting; because, of course, we have to turn out patients who are even willing to remain but are too noisy—I mean the melancholic who shouts at the top of her voice; she has got to be turned out.

18,928. Mr. Micklem: You suggest an observation order?—Yes. The name "provisional order" rather suggests to me that it is almost inevitably going to pass over into a certificate, and is a merely provisional arrangement.

18,929. Chairman: Another word that might be more attractive is a "temporary" order?—Yes.

18,930. But its object would be to secure that patients who were the subjects of such orders should receive treatment in special institutions, and to confer upon the persons who had charge of them certain powers with regard to them?—Yes.

18,931. You must obviously have some powers with regard to such patients?—Exactly.

18,932. What I understand you would like would be that the doctor should not commit himself to a diagnosis of the case as a case of insanity, but the treatment of the case should be coupled with powers of detention, if necessary, for a limited period?—Yes.

18,933. Have you any idea of the period which you would recommend?—A month would probably suffice. A month would suffice in the type of hospital functioning essentially as a clearing house; but, of course, if you had no other hospital for the curable unwilling case, then I think there should be powers for longer than a month.

18,934. There has to be some formality at this stage. You are contemplating there should be power of detention?—Yes.

18,935. What procedure do you contemplate; who is to pronounce the order, the provisional order, or the temporary order?—At the beginning of the month?

18,936. Yes?—I think the procedure would be that the patient would be admitted, say, for three days on the application of a relative and the recommendation of a doctor, and that at the end of three days there should be an observation order or a temporary order signed either by a magistrate, as has been suggested, or preferably by a member of the visiting committee of the institution.

18,937. You would contemplate at that stage the introduction of the layman and the law?—Yes. I think you clearly must. I mean some of these people will require detention against their will, and I think at that stage you have got to have legal authority.

18,938. Would you have the observation hospital worked in association with the clinic?—Yes; I think it is very essential. There would be a good deal of coming and going between the two, necessarily.

18,939. Mr. Micklem: Are you not in danger there of getting the clinic into trouble, so to speak; I mean, getting it connected with the mental hospital?—I think they should be connected in one sense, in the way that Maudsley is connected with the mental hospitals of London; and it is connected with the observation wards, to some extent.

18,940. Not in the mind of your patients?—No, and I do not know why it should be in the future any more. It is, as a fact, connected now; we get patients from the mental observation wards; we send patients to them. We are under the same governing body as the mental hospitals in London, but there is a large distinction in the patient's mind.

18,941. Would there not be some danger of losing that distinction which you think is of value now?—I do not see why one should lose it, but, of course, the condition of affairs exists in the case of Maudsley; it exists in the highest degree.

18,942. Chairman: But without that operating as any deterrent to patients?—It does not operate in the least as a deterrent.

18,943. In connection with the establishment of those clinics, do you favour the idea of their being established, where you cannot have an independent establishment like your own, as part of a general hospital?—Where you cannot have an independent clinic, yes, but I think it would be an inferior substitute.

18,944. We had evidence on Friday about what is being done at the Middlesex Hospital just now, on a very small scale no doubt; but in your experience do you find that hospitals would be willing to afford accommodation for mental clinics?—I think it is inevitably bound to be on a very small scale. I am entirely in favour of a sample of patients being treated in general hospitals for various reasons, because I think the public and the medical profession will take a more reasonable view of mental disorder when it is treated in the general hospital. But I do not think the general hospital could ever deal with the whole of the problem, even as regards numbers, and I do not think they could ever deal with anything except what I may call a Bowdlerised sample of it; they are never going to be able to afford three or four wards for each sex, to classify all the patients, and if you do not have that your ward is going to be either chaos or a clearing house; it cannot carry out treatment to a finish.

18,945. You really seem to contemplate a sort of service of mental hygiene with a series of institutions comparable, let us say, to the special service that is given for the treatment of tuberculosis, which would be the subject of Imperial grant, and supported possibly also by local rates?—Exactly.

18,946. And in the series of institutions which you contemplate, you would have the clinic, the observation hospital, and the asylum each playing its own definite role in the general service of the mentally afflicted?—Quite, and there are other items that I have mentioned, specially perhaps convalescent homes; and the reason I suggest them is that I think they will prove a very large economy, because a number of your patients that would otherwise be occupying beds in expensive hospitals could be cheaply treated in convalescent homes, during the later stage of their illness.

18,947. Of course if you catch your case early, you may prevent it ever becoming an acute case?—Quite. Not all cases, however, begin insidiously; many cases begin quite abruptly.

18,948. I believe, to put it colloquially, you may go in off the deep end very suddenly?—Exactly.

18,949. Now you contemplate further development in what you call the hospital for extended observation. What have you in mind in that?—I have in mind that there would be considerable pressure on the observation hospitals that I have spoken of, replacing the observation wards, and that there would be a number of curable cases who were unwilling or objectionable, and yet whom it was very desirable to keep out of the asylums; and if you had a special hospital to which such cases could be sent (and I have one in mind, one institution in London, where it could be done), those cases could without going into an asylum be treated to recovery.

18,950. Would that not be achieved by enabling the observation order or the temporary order to be renewed in suitable cases? The trouble I feel we might encounter would be this, that if you have too many different types of institution, the public would not appreciate the differences among them, and they might be difficult to administer. One wants to have simplicity, because one of the things that has impressed us is the complication of the existing system?—I think what you say would meet the case perfectly if there were not too much pressure on the observation hospitals; but I can conceive they would have to function as clearing houses, and, if you were not careful, you might get a number of beds that might treat 12 new cases in a year blocked by one hopeful case for the whole year. I think that would be a difficulty.

22 June, 1925.]

Dr. EDWARD MAPOTHER, M.R.C.P., F.R.C.S.

[Continued.]

18,951. Then you only propose to get over it by setting up another type of institution. It might be better to have a larger observation hospital to start with?—Yes. A large proportion of its beds would tend to get silted up with recoverable cases. One has to think of all the acute manias. In practice, the acute mania is not a case that one finds easy to deal with at the voluntary clinic, they are often too noisy or objectionable, and others become intolerant of discipline and demand to go, and yet they are a highly recoverable type of case—frequently a case that is an episode, and one which one would like to keep out of asylums—there are a lot of them, and I think such cases would rather tend to block your beds in your observation hospital.

18,952. And although the treatment might take longer, you think that case ought to have a chance of avoiding certification?—I do.

18,953. Then at the other end, convalescents should be dealt with, in your view, by the provision of some kind of homes, I take it?—Yes.

18,954. That must be one of the difficult stages in treating your patients—the return to normal life again?—Yes, it is. Of course, with us the return is gradual. The patients are allowed out at week-ends with their friends; they go out a good deal; first, perhaps a single day a week, and then week-ends. The process is very gradual with us.

18,955. And you have not, of course, the same problem as the superintendent of an asylum has, who knows he ought not to detain a person who has ceased to be certifiable, although it may be in the interest of the person that he or she should remain, after having got past the stage of certifiability on the road to recovery?—Quite. Of course, we discharge many patients who are not by any means fully recovered, with a view to their attendance at the out-patients' department. In this way treatment, although expensive while it lasts at the clinic, may ultimately be cheaper than treatment in the asylum.

18,956. What about the home surroundings and circumstances of the patient? Do you not find that the return of a patient to the home circumstances may merely bring on the ailment again?—That may be so, and it is really those cases I had in my mind when I mentioned the institution of hostels in my précis.

18,957. A case reasonably recovered, but which might lapse again if subjected afresh to the conditions to which it was originally subjected?—Exactly. Matrimonial troubles and troubles with parents may be the cause of the breakdown.

18,958. Mr. Micklem: Do you find a great number of your patients are in-patients for a time, and then come back later for advice?—Yes, a large number. Even though they may go out against advice, very often they clamour to come back the next day.

18,959. Chairman: If we had both the power and the money, many of your suggestions would be very desirable, but we have to cut our coat according to our cloth, and one is anxious to see what are, in your view, the most clamant reforms at the present moment. Suppose we were to ask you what are the matters which, in your opinion, just now, call for reform most urgently, and what are the means you would suggest should be taken?—In the way of provision I think the most important thing is the institution of clinics and observation hospitals. I think that is the most important side of it. Of course, it must be accompanied by legal changes, but, as regards provision, I think those are the most important.

18,960. And if you had institutions of that sort, you anticipate that certification would be avoided in a substantial number of cases?—A very large number of cases.

18,961. And then you would make the asylum, as we have known it hitherto, the home for the chronic case?—Eventually.

18,962. And you do not think that would have the effect which some witnesses have rather laid stress upon, a sense of hopelessness in those who become inmates of asylums?—There might be some effect in that direction, but I think it would be a drawback that would have to be faced for the greater gain of the separation of the acute cases.

18,963. In connection with the observation hospital which you have in mind, would you grade it in turn—I see you make a reference to the system going on now at Ewell?—Yes, there would be internal classification. I would have classification inside the observation hospital itself.

18,964. Have you something to say to us on the subject of the relations of local authorities to voluntary hospitals?—I think it is desirable that the main arrangements dealing with the mass of cases should be under the local authorities. I do not think it is practical that the general hospitals should undertake the bulk of the work, though I am strongly, as I have said, in favour of their undertaking treatment of some cases for educational purposes, and for the effect in producing a reasonable atmosphere towards the whole subject.

18,965. So as to assimilate the mental ailments to other ailments, to remove the line of demarcation which exists just now?—Exactly.

18,966. But, on the other hand, the special circumstances of mental disorder rather suggest, just as the special circumstances of tuberculosis suggest, that you should have separate institutions?—Yes.

18,967. After all, it is an incident of the treatment of tuberculosis that you must have fresh air to a degree that is not necessary in the case of other ailments; therefore, you have to have out-of-door places for the treatment of patients. Similarly, with regard to mental disorder you require a certain type of treatment that is special to that disease?—Yes. There is no line of demarcation. Where you have one disease that grades in different patients, and in the same patient at different times, into eligibility for one of these different institutions, I think you must have co-ordination between them.

18,968. And a patient might, therefore, pass from one to the other, according to the conditions?—Yes, exactly, and it can best be arranged if they are in the hands of one authority, I think; and for teaching and research I think that co-ordination is extremely important, too.

18,969. Suppose it were possible to have clinics and observation hospitals on a scale which you would desire, would you place those under the local authority, or would you place them under the Board of Control?—Immediately under the local authority with a central supervision by the Board of Control.

18,970. You would really make a local health service, but, because of the specialty that it deals with, mental disorder, you would have the Board of Control superior in the end?—Yes, general supervision.

18,971. I think, Dr. Mapother, we have covered most of the topics, but we do not want to part from you if you have any other points, which I may have omitted to bring up, which you would like to put before us?—I think when you were at Maudsley Hospital the other day it was mentioned to me that you might possibly ask me about research and teaching, and those topics; I do not know whether you would like me to say anything upon that subject.

18,972. I think we should. I personally have been asking you questions almost entirely about certification and treatment?—That of course is what my own précis deals with.

18,973. We have had the cause of research advocated to us by Sir Frederick Mott and others, but, as you are carrying on that work, we should like to hear you, and Mr. Snell has a question to ask which may afford you the opportunity of telling us what you have to say upon it.

22 June, 1925.]

Dr. EDWARD MAPOTHER, M.R.C.P., F.R.C.S.

[Continued.]

18,974. Mr. Snell: First of all, have you written anything, or is there anything written on these psychiatric clinics abroad?—I do not think there is any general work on the subject. There was a discussion at the Royal Society of Medicine about a couple of years ago, and I spoke on the subject. I have a small paper that I could let you have.

18,975. I think I must have seen that?—I have extensive notes taken when I was at these clinics.

18,976. On the matter of research, you have a small research fund of about £10,000 have you not?—Yes, we have; that is part of the money left by Dr. Maudsley.

18,977. What is the position of that fund at the present moment?—Up to the present it has not been very extensively used, it has been accumulating to some extent; it has been dipped into a small extent to buy apparatus, and so forth, but at the present moment arrangements are really contemplated for the employment of the interest on the money for studentships and scholarships.

18,978. What I really want to ask is, is it your opinion that useful research work could be done with an ultimate saving to the community if the funds were available?—Undoubtedly.

18,979. Chairman: Just to follow that up: do you approve accordingly of the proposal in Lord Onslow's Mental Treatment Bill that the local authorities should be empowered to provide funds for research?—Yes, for research and teaching.

18,980. Mr. Snell: I wonder if it is possible to indicate what sort of research work could usefully be done and in what directions?—What medical directions?

18,981. Yes?—I think continuous research work should go on in all directions, every subject that is allied to this. To some extent, it might be psychological research and anatomical and chemical and bacteriological; and I would rather stress especially research dealing with treatment, dealing not merely with the pathological side; such researches sometimes become a little academic; I think that research should be largely directed towards treatment, and that brings out the point that I think research should always be conducted in connection with a clinic and where the living patient is available.

18,982. That is to say, that there are promising opportunities for the expenditure of money on research?—There are indeed.

18,983. That would repay the community for a reasonable expenditure?—Yes. Of course results must not be expected in the immediate future—I mean there is no question of reducing the rates in 10 years or something of that sort, but that ultimately research pays is certain.

18,984. I may put it then, may I not, that £10,000 is not enough as the basis of a research fund?—No, it is not. Of course that £10,000 is quite independent of the maintenance of our laboratory, and the payment of all the salaried officers connected with it. The County Council in London does support the laboratory and pay the salaries, quite independently of this £10,000 which is going to be used for the endowment of scholarships and studentships.

18,985. Then you would urge finally that if the community saw fit to provide sufficient money for research, it would derive a substantial benefit?—Undoubtedly, I think.

18,986. Chairman: Is it a department in which there has hitherto been comparatively little research?—Very scanty, and mainly, I believe, because of the absence of the clinic or some such place to serve as a centre. I do not think myself that research work carried out in isolated local laboratories of asylums will be very productive; I think it must be research carried out in laboratories associated with a central school and associated with a university and in touch with that; and, of course, that condition of affairs does not exist, except in the case of the Maudsley and in one or two other places.

18,987. And perhaps the very obscurity of the disease has hitherto been a deterrent in the exploration of it?—Quite.

18,988. You think now that we are entering upon more hopeful days, do you?—I do, indeed. I think the activity and general interest, and the whole attitude, of the medical staffs of the mental hospitals towards their work has changed out of all knowledge, in my own time. The sort of criticism which is sometimes levelled at them is very much out of date, in my opinion.

18,989. Miss Symons: Dr. Mapother, in putting this scheme before us do you think it would be necessary to encourage local authorities, and possibly, in order to secure efficient control, to have a 50 per cent. Exchequer grant?—I should like to see the central grant made as large as possible; I do not know what the limit is, but I should like to see it put up to the limit.

18,990. Both in order to bring this about, and in order to secure more control?—To bring up efficiency. Not all local authorities are like the London County Council, and there are local authorities which need, in my opinion, stimulation very badly.

18,991. In connection with the observation hospitals that you advocate, do you contemplate entirely new buildings, or do you think it would be possible to make use of any existing buildings by a redistribution of the patients now in them?—It might be possible; I am not sufficiently acquainted with them. I think on the whole it would probably mean new buildings mostly. It might be possible, if certain boards of guardians were willing to give up one of their institutions, to adapt it, because the accommodation at some is good, but at some it is not.

18,992. There is one other question which I think Lord Russell was anxious to put to you. He wanted to know what your opinion from your experience is of the present dietary in public mental hospitals—whether you think it is adequate and sufficiently varied for the needs of the patients?—My view is this, that it is physiologically adequate (speaking of the chronic patient) but dull, and that it has been considerably improved of late years. As regards the acute patients, it has to be always borne in mind that medical extras are very largely given, and that the standard diet is not what the acute patient lives on. Our dietary cost at the Maudsley is very much higher than the mental hospital dietary; but it must be remembered that here, again, you have got the same fallacy I spoke of before, that they are not comparable. Our dietary cost is comparable to the admission hospital of an ordinary asylum, and that would be found to be very much higher because medical extras are largely given. With regard to the chronic patient, some improvement, I think, is desirable. It is a question of money purely. I think one has got to bear this in mind; I believe it is the fact that 5d. a day per certified patient represents £1,000,000 a year to the country, and, in order to make any large improvement, you would probably have to spend a good many millions a year. If the community is willing to do it, I am in favour of it. It is not a medical question. I think the diet is physiologically adequate, because most of them gain weight, and seem to maintain their health on it, but I think it is dull.

18,993. Mrs. Mathew: I only want to ask you whether you are satisfied that we have the very best design for our asylums—they seem all to be on the same principle?—I think I should like to see an extension of the villa principle, though they have certain practical difficulties in getting about from one to another in bad weather, and so forth. I should like to see that, and, in that connection, would come in what I mentioned about the proximity of gardens for different types of patients. If you had the villa principle carried further, there would be less of that. The villa principle, of course, is carried very far at Ewell which you have seen, Sir, but the other is cheaper; I think the block system is cheaper, and these things generally turn on questions of money.

22 June, 1925.]

Dr. EDWARD MAPOTHER, M.R.C.P., F.R.C.S.

[Continued.]

18,994. But you think the improvement would be almost worth the expenditure?—I think it certainly would, in the case of the acute recoverable patient. Ewell is the place I have in mind for the "extended observation hospital." But one may have to cut one's coat according to one's cloth in that matter.

18,995. Of course we could move out our asylums a little further; we need not have them on such expensive ground; but it seems to me that certainly the old ones leave a good deal to be desired?—I quite agree.

18,996. And even the new ones seem to be on the same principle?—I think there is only one cure for some of the old places, and that is to pull them down.

18,997. Chairman: I suppose it is desirable, as far as possible, to remove the element of the institution in places where patients reside?—Yes, quite.

18,998. Because you want to make the people feel, as far as you can, that they are still human beings, not separated off from their fellows, and merely receiving treatment for the time being?—Yes; that is the whole aim, I think.

18,999. You do not want them to be institutionalised more than you can help?—No.

19,000. And, of course, the large type of barrack building, to which Mrs. Mathew refers, has all the savour of institution about it, and not the feeling of normal human life which is conducted in separate houses by separate families?—I do not think you get it to the same extent where you have villas.

19,001. It helps to mitigate that feeling very much?—I think it does.

Chairman: Then may we thank you for your attendance here to-day, and for your kindness in showing us round Maudsley on Friday.

(The Witness withdrew.)

(Adjourned.)

5, OLD PALACE YARD,
WESTMINSTER, S.W.1.

THIRTY-SIXTH DAY.

Friday, 10th July, 1925.

MEMBERS PRESENT :

THE RIGHT HON. H. P. MACMILLAN, K.C. (Chairman).

THE EARL RUSSELL.

SIR HUMPHRY ROLLESTON, BART., K.C.B., M.D.

SIR ERNEST HILEY, K.B.E.

SIR DAVID DRUMMOND, C.B.E., M.D.

MR. NATHANIEL MICKLEM, K.C.

MR. H. SNELL, M.P.

MISS MADELEINE SYMONS.

MR. P. BARTER (Secretary).

MR. W. FAIRLEY (Assistant Secretary).

The Hon. WILLIAM SIDNEY, J.P., and Mrs. ROSE DUNN GARDNER, J.P., called and examined.

19,002. Chairman: This morning we have with us representatives of the London County Council in the persons of the Hon. William Sidney, J.P., and Mrs. Rose Dunn Gardner, J.P., who have been deputed to present certain aspects of the law and administration regarding lunacy for our consideration. I think, Mr. Sidney and Mrs. Gardner, you were appointed by the London County Council on the 26th May, 1925, to state to this Royal Commission the views of the London County Council on the matter of our remit?—(Mr. William Sidney): That is so.

19,003. As we know, your Council is the authority responsible for the care and treatment in its mental hospitals of no fewer than 18,500 patients?—Yes.

19,004. And one, of course, recognises how intimately your Council is concerned in any proposals affecting the treatment of these patients?—Yes.

19,005. As you are aware, we have had the advantage of paying a visit to the Maudsley Hospital, and also of having the evidence of the Medical Superintendent before us recently, and we are therefore familiar with the pioneer work which the London County Council has done in the matter of the treatment of incipient and uncertified cases. It might be convenient, I think, if we just touched, first of all, upon that topic. I think your Council considered the question of dealing practically with the matter in consequence of Dr. Henry Maudsley's gift of

10 July, 1925.]

The Hon. WILLIAM SIDNEY, J.P., and
Mrs. ROSE DUNN GARDNER, J.P.

[Continued.]

£40,000 for the establishment of the Maudsley Hospital?—Yes.

19,006. And did your Council give its general approval to the provisions of Lord Onslow's Bill, the Mental Treatment Bill of 1923?—It did, yes.

19,007. Which, as we know, deals with the temporary treatment of patients without certification in approved institutions?—Yes.

19,008. May one take it that the Maudsley Hospital, which has been founded and is conducted by the London County Council, is an experiment in that direction?—That is so, yes.

19,009. It was necessary, was it not, for your Council to obtain special statutory powers to establish such an institution?—It was.

19,010. And you obtained those powers, I observe, under the London County Council (Parks, &c.) Act of 1915, Part III?—Yes.

19,011. We are familiar with Section 6 of that Act which we have all studied, and it appears to adumbrate, if one may say so, the system regarding the advantages of which we have heard so much?—Yes.

19,012. Perhaps it might be useful, for the purpose of raising some discussion, to look at the terms of that section, first of all, if you please. I notice that the persons who are to be the beneficiaries, if I may so call them, of the scheme, are those who are suffering from incipient insanity or mental infirmity, and are desirous of voluntarily submitting themselves to treatment?—Yes.

19,013. Do you regard the word "incipient" as qualifying both the insanity and the mental infirmity, or are the two categories distinct? Do you receive incipient cases of insanity and cases of mental infirmity whether incipient or not, who are prepared to submit to voluntary treatment?—Yes.

19,014. There are two classes, as you will appreciate; there is the incipient case where you hope to arrest the progress of the malady at an early stage, and there is the other class of case who is willing to submit to voluntary treatment?—I think both, yes.

19,015. Therefore we do not qualify the second category as necessarily incipient cases—they may be more established cases?—Yes, certainly.

19,016. The essence of the matter is that the patients are voluntary patients?—That is so. (Mrs. Dunn Gardner): And I think, also, they must be suitable patients.

19,017. Yes, but I was thinking for the moment of the general categories of patients who are eligible, in the first place, for this mode of treatment. The incipient case is one class of case, where you hope by treatment without certification to arrest the progress of the malady and cure the patient?—(Mr. Sidney): Yes.

19,018. On the other hand, you have cases where patients, whether incipient or not, are willing to submit to treatment voluntarily without certification?—Yes, of course, with the limitation mentioned by Mrs. Gardner. (Mrs. Dunn Gardner): If they are suitable patients, Maudsley take in the voluntary cases. The fact of being voluntary would not by itself gain them admission to Maudsley.

19,019. But all voluntary persons are eligible—that is how it stands?—Yes.

19,020. I suppose one may take it that there are two aims disclosed in this provision; one is the aim I have already indicated, of providing treatment for cases in their early stages without certification at all, in the hope of achieving recovery?—(Mr. Sidney): Yes.

19,021. And the other is, even in cases which may be well established, to avoid the stigma of certification (such as it is) where it can be avoided, in consequence of the patients being willing voluntarily to submit to a measure of restraint?—Yes, that is so.

19,022. And the consequence of the success of the scheme would, of course, be a large diminution probably in the number of certified cases?—I think it must be. That is the hope.

19,023. That is the objective of the whole thing?—Yes, that is so. Experience only will tell whether that is so or not, of course.

19,024. Quite; but I suppose your Council has recognised that under the existing régime patients are not able to get the advantage of institutional treatment until they are first certified?—That is so.

19,025. Therefore, until they have reached a more or less advanced stage of their malady?—That is so, of course.

19,026. This provision at Maudsley is in line with the general conception of modern medicine: that prevention is better than cure?—Yes.

19,027. Which is in conformity with the good old adage as well?—Yes.

19,028. Then looking at the second sub-section, you deal there with the question of the expense, and you take power, I see, to pay the whole or any part of the expenses of maintenance and treatment in the hospital of any such person as a voluntary boarder. In practice, do you exercise that discretion?—Yes.

19,029. And are some patients in Maudsley treated free?—Yes.

19,030. Could you give us any indication, first of all, as to who exercises that discretion, and what are the classes of cases where you give this privilege?—The Committee exercises that discretion. Of course the lady almoner obtains all the particulars; then each case comes before the Committee.

19,031. With the facts ascertained?—With the facts set out.

19,032. You observe there is a statutory discretion imposed upon you there—you may, if you think fit, defray the expenses?—Yes.

19,033. That means you must think fit upon information, of course?—Yes, and a considerable number are so dealt with.

19,034. Cases are selected for free treatment, after investigation and consideration of their circumstances by the Committee?—Yes, that is so.

19,035. Then you decide that such and such a case is a proper case to be treated free?—That is so.

19,036. Is such a case, when treated free, placed in the category of a person in receipt of Poor Law relief?—No.

Earl Russell: No, because the charge is on the county rate, not on the poor rate.

19,037. Chairman: That is a very interesting feature of it. These patients, although they receive the benefit of the institution free, are not in any sense pauperised?—No. (Mrs. Dunn Gardner): But we do have some cases which are paid for by the guardians—which are sent to us by the guardians, at any rate.

19,038. That is another category, but I am interested in the type of person whom you treat in Maudsley who is unable to pay for the treatment, and who at present could only get treatment really as a pauper in a London County Council institution. This provides a method whereby such a person may receive treatment free, if a deserving and proper case, without becoming a pauper?—Yes.

19,039. And the charges are defrayed out of what fund?—(Mr. Sidney): The county rate.

19,040. To what extent, could you tell me, have you exercised that discretion? How many of the patients are free?—I do not know that we have got the figures with us.

19,041. They could easily be got, no doubt?—A fair number.

19,042. Quite substantial, is it?—A fair proportion, I should say.

19,043. Then, on the other hand, you have the ordinary paying patient who is able to pay on different scales which you will have for the purpose?—Yes; five pounds is the ordinary standard charge.

19,044. Some less and some more?—Yes, and a paying patient very often becomes a free patient after a period.

19,045. They have come to the end of their means?—Yes.

10 July, 1925.]

The Hon. WILLIAM SIDNEY, J.P., and
Mrs. ROSE DUNN GARDNER, J.P.

[Continued.]

19,046. Mr. Micklem: What do you pay for the free patients?—(Mr. Sidney): What do they cost?

19,047. Yes?—£5.

19,048. Chairman: It arises in this way, I think, Mr. Sidney; you will have the cost of running the institution?—Yes.

19,049. Then you will have receipts from paying patients?—Yes.

19,050. Then you will have probably a deficit on the undertaking if you have a considerable number of free patients. Do you merely rate upon the deficit for the conduct of the institution, or do you fix a standard for each free patient and rate for the accumulated amount of these sums?—We could give you the figures for the cost of running the whole institution. Do you mean per head?

19,051. We wanted rather to know what it costs you to keep a patient free in Maudsley?—It costs about £5 a week, which includes everything.

19,052. Establishment charges and everything else?—Yes.

19,053. Of course that is a figure very much higher than the ordinary asylum rate?—Yes. Of course it is a very costly institution. It is very heavily staffed, and the number of patients is small.

19,054. We have to keep that in view, of course, in any recommendation that we may make?—Yes. It is very very costly. If you are going to increase the number of "Maudsleys," it would be a very heavy cost on the rates indeed.

19,055. Earl Russell: You do not charge the whole laboratory cost to Maudsley, do you?—No.

19,056. But you allocate that among all the asylums?—Among all the asylums, yes.

19,057. Chairman: All your institutions are, of course, entitled to use the service of the laboratories at Maudsley?—Yes.

19,058. I think it might be interesting to us to have a short abstract of the finance of Maudsley, that is to say, what it costs to run it, and any detailed figures you have taken out for the purposes of your own information; because this type of institution is naturally very attractive, but one has to consider what it costs, and we have not before us as yet, I think, any figures as to what it actually costs?—We will supply you with all the figures; we will show you the cost of the institution.

19,059. And perhaps it could be shown to what extent the paying patients come to the relief of the non-paying patients. It is a system on which they bear each other's burdens to some extent, and one would like to see what the net cost to you is of treating patients free there?—All the figures will be supplied to you.

19,060. Then provision is next made in subsection (3) for rules, and that makes reference to Section 338 of the Lunacy Act of 1890.

19,061. Earl Russell: Maudsley is an asylum under the Lunacy Act, I suppose, is it?—Yes.

Chairman: Yes, with a special code in the 1915 Act applicable to it.

Earl Russell: Generally it is subject to the 1890 Act?

19,062. Chairman: Yes. Then subsection (3) is really a matter of machinery; it provides for the rules which are made under subsection (1) of Section 338, prescribing the books and entries and notices and so on. Then we come in subsection (4) to a very important matter, which emphasises the voluntary aspect. Any patient, I understand, with you may leave on 24 hours' notice?—Yes.

19,063. And I take it that all patients on entering the establishment are made aware of the fact that if they please they may leave at 24 hours' notice?—Yes, it is on the form. Whether 24 hours is long enough is rather a question, or will be in the future, I think, if we are going to extend the voluntary system. It is rather short notice.

19,064. Lord Onslow's Bill suggested, you remember, 72 hours?—I think it did.

19,065. The real point of the length of the period is this, that you want to have time to communicate with the relatives?—Yes; even 72 hours seems to be rather short. On the Continent they have to give several days' notice.

19,066. Of course, the more you prolong the period, the less you have the atmosphere of liberty?—Yes, I know that it is a difficulty.

19,067. It seems to me the practical point is that if you have a patient who ceases to be voluntary and becomes resistant and may be a danger, you must have some power to detain for a short period, in order that the relatives or the authorities may be communicated with and the right steps taken?—Yes, and also to protect the public.

19,068. You might have a suicidal case, who says, "I want to go out at once"?—Yes.

19,069. Have you found in experience any difficulties of that sort owing to the shortness of the period of 24 hours?—I do not think so; I have not heard of any, but I do think the 24 hours' notice is too short.

19,070. What is the procedure you adopt in the case of a voluntary patient desiring to leave you, where you think that there is risk?—We notify the friends.

19,071. I take it that whenever any patient enters Maudsley, it is done with the concurrence generally or at least with the knowledge of some responsible person who will probably sign some paper, and with whom you would naturally communicate regarding the case?—Yes.

19,072. You are always in touch with someone?—Always in touch with the relations or friends.

19,073. What happens in the case of a patient who has no relations? Who stands guardian, so to speak, if there is no sponsor?—I do not know that we have had any case. The relieving officer would be communicated with, of course, as a last resort.

19,074. Take the category that Mrs. Dunn Gardner referred to, of which you have some, namely, patients sent to you by boards of guardians: in their case, I suppose, you communicate with the board of guardians?—Yes, certainly; they give an undertaking.

19,075. I would like to know a little about that class of case. If it is a case sent to you by a board of guardians, it must be a case which has come within the purview of the Poor Law, manifestly?—Yes.

19,076. On what basis are such patients sent to you. Do they merely write and invite you to receive a patient?—Yes. (Mrs. Dunn Gardner): They write and ask, and then they pay at the rate which the patients would be costing in the infirmary from which they came.

19,077. Do these cases come to you from boards of guardians all over the country?—(Mr. Sidney): No, only London. (Mrs. Dunn Gardner): And only a few in London.

19,078. These must be uncertified cases which are known to the board of guardians, paupers, and persons who the board of guardians think might benefit by Maudsley treatment?—(Mr. Sidney): Yes.

19,079. And they invite you to receive them?—Yes.

19,080. And they pay the asylum rate and you make a loss on every case which you take?—They pay the infirmary rate.

19,081. That is much less than the £5 of which you have been speaking?—There would be a loss, yes.

19,082. But not quite the same loss as if it were an absolutely free patient?—No; we get the infirmary rate.

19,083. These are really Poor Law infirmary cases which have developed mental symptoms, and where it is assumed the Maudsley treatment might be beneficial?—That is so.

19,084. Are there many such cases in Maudsley?—I do not think we receive many.

19,085. Miss Symons: Do you reject any applications from the infirmary?—I should think we take all those that have applied.

10 July, 1925.]

The Hon. WILLIAM SIDNEY, J.P., and
Mrs. ROSE DUNN GARDNER, J.P.

[Continued.]

19,086. Chairman: I notice there is no geographical limitation in the Act on the sources from which your patients may be taken. Take your paying patients—do they come from all parts of the country?—(Mrs. Dunn Gardner): It is only for county cases. Very exceptional cases are admitted sometimes from outside the county, and they pay, of course, a higher rate than the in-county patients. Very few of them are received.

19,087. It is primarily intended for the London area?—Yes.

19,088. Earl Russell: Your discretion under subsection (1) is wide enough to cover the outside?—(Mr. Sidney): We take no outside cases at a reduced amount; they have to pay the full amount.

19,089. Chairman: That is very proper, because they are charged to the county rate. Then with regard to pauper cases, they are entirely from London Poor Law union areas?—Yes.

19,090. Earl Russell: There are some legal questions I would like to ask on this. You see the wording is "a voluntary boarder shall be at liberty to leave on giving 24 hours' notice." Do you interpret it as meaning "shall not be at liberty to leave without giving 24 hours' notice"—because it is not quite the same?—Yes.

19,091. Chairman: It is expressed positively and not negatively?—Yes.

19,092. Earl Russell: Then I see that, purposely no doubt, the notice does not have to be in writing, or in any formal manner. Would you take it as sufficient notice if a patient in the wards simply said "I want to get out"?—I suppose it would be so under that.

19,093. I suppose you would, at any rate, make him say it to the Superintendent?—Yes, I conclude that is what is done.

19,094. Chairman: What Lord Russell has mentioned raises a point which has always troubled some of us, and that is, what really is a voluntary patient? I am sure it must have puzzled you also, because once you have any degree of mental disorder, even incipient mental disorder, there may be some deterioration of the will—I mean, it is not a normal case ex hypothesi. The question is, how far you can justly rely on the patient having expressed a real voluntary intention as distinguished from a merely imperfect voluntary intention. Coupled with that, if I may put the whole of the problem before you, a patient after reception may deteriorate; the case may become worse, so that the element of voluntarism may practically disappear; the case may become non-volitional owing to the progress of the malady, and such a patient would not be in a position to appreciate the power to give 24 hours' notice. Have these practical questions presented themselves to you in the administration of the institution?—I do not think they have. I have not heard any. I quite see your point.

19,095. A person may at an early stage of the malady say "I am most desirous and anxious to go to Maudsley," and you may estimate that he has a real desire and intention to go there at that stage; then, after the reception, the malady may progress; the person may really not be in a state to appreciate the right to leave within 24 hours. Is such a case still regarded as a voluntary case, although it has become non-volitional, shall we say?—I suppose if the mind deteriorated to a very serious extent, it would become a certifiable case, would it not?

19,096. Yes, but then, although certifiable, you do not necessarily eject a case because it is a certifiable case?—(Mrs. Dunn Gardner): Or still curable.

19,097. That has always struck me and my colleagues as a great difficulty, that you might have a patient as a voluntary patient who, nevertheless, has at least suffered some deterioration of his will power, and may during his residence practically lose his will power by the very nature of the disease. Is he still to be characterised as a voluntary patient, although, if you spoke to him, he would be quite incapable of understanding what you were saying?—Might I mention a case in a private institution who was admitted as a voluntary patient, understanding, as she says, that it was a sort of a home of rest? Immediately on her giving notice, she was certified in the same institution and kept there as another kind of patient, and from the little I was able to learn there, it was quite an ordinary occurrence; it was more easy to admit cases as voluntary cases and then to certify them in the institution.

19,098. That raises a very large topic. It is most undesirable that certification should be associated with these voluntary institutions at all, lest people may be deterred from going there because of the menace of certification as the ultimate upshot?—I am afraid, if it was largely practised, it would do away with the voluntary patients altogether; they would regard it merely as a trap to get them certified; it is being done.

19,099. It does not quite, if I may say so, meet my difficulty. I always like to look at things from a practical point of view, and I shall assume a patient who has quite sufficient will power to appreciate that he is submitting himself to treatment in an institution for cure, and what he is signing, but after residence for a fortnight or three weeks the malady has progressed rapidly and the patient has ceased to have any will power; would he still be retained in Maudsley?—Would it not be a matter for the Medical Superintendent? If it was merely a temporary phase of the illness, then he would be kept there; but if he had permanently deteriorated, then it would be better that he should be certified.

19,100. Two ways out occur to one. First, you take his voluntary act of entering the institution as, so to speak, continuing on until the patient becomes resistant and says "No, I will not." That may be one way. If the patient says "No, I will not," then he has got to go out. If, on the other hand, he does not take up that attitude, but the case has deteriorated, then the Medical Superintendent may say from the medical aspect, "This case has now become one of those cases in which we cannot hope for cure, and this is a case that should not remain here but should leave us and be certified." That is how it may solve itself in practice?—(Mr. Sidney): A voluntary patient may become a non-volitional patient; then I conclude the Medical Superintendent would communicate with the relatives, and they would give their consent to his remaining there.

19,101. Subject always to what Mrs. Dunn Gardner points out, that it may be a temporary aberration. Then, for that purpose, you treat the original voluntary act as persisting over what I may call that gap in the volitional power of the patient?—Yes.

19,102. Earl Russell: I appreciate very much the arguments against certifying in a voluntary place like Maudsley, but you have got also to think of the other side, in the interest of the patient. Supposing a patient becomes properly and necessarily certifiable, what steps do you take—do you send him away somewhere and then bring him back?—He is removed.

19,103. Where to?—He is sent to the friends, and then they go to the relieving officer, and they go through the usual formalities.

19,104. Is not that in itself rather undesirable? Supposing a patient is a violent patient; is it not rather undesirable to take a violent patient through the streets to a private house. When you come to think of it from the medical point of view, that is not attractive?—No, it is not.

19,105. Chairman: The difficulty is how to bridge the transition from Maudsley to the asylum?—(Mrs. Dunn Gardner): The point rather is that the steps are taken not by the authorities of Maudsley but by the friends.

19,106. Sir Humphry Rolleston: And, if he has no friends?—Then you communicate with the relieving officer, whom the law makes his friend.

19,107. Earl Russell: I am thinking of the physical transfer of the patient, and the bad effect it has

10 July, 1925.]

The Hon. WILLIAM SIDNEY, J.P., and
Mrs. ROSE DUNN GARDNER, J.P.

[Continued.]

upon him, supposing he is violent and resistant?—It happens whenever one of the 2,000 patients are taken into each of the institutions; they always have to be moved from the observation ward where they are.

19,108. Actually, from the point of view of the patient, of course, it would be simpler to put him in an ambulance there and then at the Maudsley and take him direct to an ordinary asylum?—I should very much regret to see that done.

19,109. There is also the medical point of view, of course?—But the friends may arrange for that to be done.

19,110. Direct?—Direct.

19,111. Chairman: But the certification does not take place in Maudsley?—No.

19,112. Earl Russell: And he cannot enter an asylum until he has been certified?—No. (Mr. Sidney): I suppose the voluntary boarders will be taken into our ordinary mental hospitals.

19,113. Chairman: Voluntary ones, yes, that is, if legislation were enacted. I think Lord Russell's case is just the kind of case I have in mind. It is the case of a patient who has got steadily worse, unhappily, in your institution, and it is recognised that you cannot do much for him; he has ceased to be a voluntary patient. What is to be done with him? In your desire to dissociate your institution from the process of certification altogether, you say: "We have had this patient, he has been with us, and we can simply send him away now, and he must be subjected to the ordinary process of law." This episode is over, and he is just relegated back to the position of an ordinary case which has to go through the ordinary machinery; the only point which arises is, whether the desire to dissociate your institution from certification may not operate prejudicially to the patient, by relegating the patient at what is an acute stage of his malady to the ordinary machinery, and beginning all over again, in order to certify him for admission to an asylum as a certified patient?—I am sure there will be cases of that nature, where it would be desirable to certify him at once.

19,114. Earl Russell: I suppose you might deal with him by hyoscine. I should like to hear the medical views?—(Mrs. Dunn Gardner): It is really a question for the Medical Superintendent, as to whether the patient has suffered in consequence of the regulation.

19,115. Chairman: Possibly, some of your later suggestions may help to mitigate the difficulty, because if observation institutions are to be set up where patients may be detained provisionally pending final disposal, that might be a proper reception place for a patient who has left Maudsley?—That has been suggested.

Chairman: I was thinking of the ways in which all this difficulty might be mitigated in the interests of the patients.

19,116. Sir David Drummond: As a matter of practice, how many in the last 12 months would necessarily be dealt with in that way?—(Mr. Sidney): We have not got the figures.

Sir David Drummond: I suppose very few.

Chairman: I think, Sir David, we have the report of the first year's experience in Maudsley, and there are statistics given there of the number of patients who left and who were subsequently certified. I think I remember reading the figures there.

19,117. Sir Humphry Rolleston: Does not Mr. Sidney feel that it is really much more important to protect the reputation of Maudsley as a place where certification does not under any circumstances take place rather than to be responsible for what takes place when the patient is handed over to the care of the friends for them to deal with?—I think so as regards the Maudsley; but I was thinking of the position if you are going to take voluntary boarders in at all our mental hospitals. At the Maudsley, I daresay, it is better to keep it free from the taint of certification.

19,118. But at the mental hospitals they must be certified?—I was referring to the proposal to take voluntary boarders into mental hospitals.

Sir Humphry Rolleston: I thought we were really concerned with what took place in Maudsley, and gathered that Maudsley thought it was so important to protect their reputation as a place where certification did not take place, that they were not really so much concerned with what happened to a patient when they handed him over to the friends or the guardians.

19,119. Chairman: Yes; the emphasis is on the dissociation of Maudsley from certification?—As regards Maudsley, certainly.

19,120. I think I may read a passage from the report on page 11. The heading is: "Disposal of patients needing certification." That is our exact point, and your Medical Superintendent states this: "As before stated, no cases are certified in the hospital. When a patient about to be discharged appears to require institutional care"—that is an euphemism, of course, for a case requiring to be sent to an asylum—"various procedures may be necessary—(a) If a case has been admitted from a Poor Law Institution, the patient is sent back in accordance with an agreement obtained from the guardians at the time of admission."—you just hand him back to the source from which you got him—"Otherwise the friends are notified and required to make arrangements in accordance with their undertakings to be responsible for care and treatment on discharge. The procedure is very like that at a general hospital. (b) In some cases the relatives arrange for admission either under certificate or as a voluntary boarder to a private mental hospital. (c) In cases where this is financially impossible, they are advised to make arrangements with the relieving officer (of the patient's previous parish) for admission to the observation ward upon discharge from here. (d) In a few cases (at the request of friends) the relieving officer of Camberwell is notified and patients transferred direct to the observation ward of that parish. This is only done where the physical state of the patient requires it or where intense suicidal disposition or hostility to the relatives renders it unsafe to hand over the patient to them even for the necessary journey. The following table shows the relative frequency of these procedures," and then certain statistics are given; so that I think we have a clear outline of the methods which are pursued.

Sir David Drummond: I should like to know what are the figures there?

Chairman: The table takes this form: Cases discharged, Total: with approval 248, against advice 49; of those with approval, 248 in number, 75 were discharged not improved, and 50 requiring institution. That, presumably, means asylum cases.

Sir David Drummond: A very large number.

19,121. Chairman: Quite a substantial number. Then the table shows under the letters (a), (b), (c) and (d) how each of those 50 cases was dealt with under one or other form of procedure. Now there is another large matter which you deal with next in your précis and upon which we should be happy to have your views. I see your Council is strongly of opinion that the administration of such an institution should be under the visiting committee charged with lunacy administration?—Yes.

19,122. As you know, that is a topic which has been debated to some extent, and debated from the very point of view to which you have been addressing yourself—the question of dissociation of the uncertified case from lunacy administration; and it has been suggested that it might be desirable that this particular work, the treatment of the uncertified case or the incipient case, should be confided to the ordinary health authority in contradistinction to the lunacy authority, with the same object in view, of dissociating cases at that stage from what I may call the stigma of lunacy surveillance. Now, there are reasons for and against that. Do I understand that

10 July, 1925.]

The Hon. WILLIAM SIDNEY, J.P., and
Mrs. ROSE DUNN GARDNER, J.P.

[Continued.]

the London County Council, notwithstanding the drawback to which I have alluded, consider that it is preferable that the incipient case or the voluntary case should be dealt with within the ambit of the lunacy committee's authority?—Certainly; it is more convenient that it should be under the one administration.

19,123. Have you thought of that other aspect to which I have alluded, the desirability of severing, if possible, the pre-certification history of the case from lunacy administration altogether?—It might be desirable perhaps from the point of view of keeping it apart from the taint of lunacy, but from an administration point of view surely it is better that it should be under one administrative body.

19,124. Earl Russell: And surely also from the medical point of view. Are you not all the time treating one disease in different stages?—Yes.

Chairman: Yes; I think that is perhaps the most important feature.

Sir David Drummond: I would like to point out that there are admitted into Maudsley quite a number of cases that are not essentially mental cases; they are cases, admitted for mental treatment incidentally, in which mental symptoms may arise, but the treatment consists in treating the original disease, ex-ophthalmic goitre, and St. Vitus's Dance, for example. Therefore they do not quite come under this category. I saw at least five cases there that would be treated in a general hospital for St. Vitus's Dance, or for Graves disease.

Chairman: Yes, I noticed one case myself.

Sir David Drummond: I was going to ask a question upon that point.

Chairman: I think you might ask it just now, Sir David, because it is very relevant.

19,125. Sir David Drummond: It is just this: Do all the cases admitted come under the designation of insanity or mental infirmity?—Yes.

19,126. I am afraid that is not exactly the view I should have taken from what I saw at Maudsley, because the cases I saw were essentially cases of general disease in which this mental state arose, if there were any symptoms present at all. Therefore the treatment consisted in the treatment of that original disease.

Chairman: But they must all be cases which exhibit, possibly as a concomitant of another disease, mental disorder.

Sir David Drummond: That may be so, but the essential feature of the case was otherwise.

Chairman: Yes, it is predominantly a physical case with mental symptoms.

Sir David Drummond: That is so, and therefore I ask, is there not another class admitted in which, incidentally, mental symptoms may arise or have arisen?

Chairman: Is your difficulty, Sir David, whether such cases fall under the category of persons suffering from incipient insanity or mental infirmity?

19,127. Sir David Drummond: Yes, that is so.—(Mrs. Dunn Gardner): They are all admitted to the Maudsley Hospital in consequence of their mental symptoms. The fact that they develop other symptoms—

19,128. Earl Russell: I am afraid Sir David's point is that the other symptoms develop first and are the dominant ones?—(Mr. Sidney): There may be cases which ought not to have been admitted there.

19,129. Sir David Drummond: That is what I ask—are all your cases cases which really come under this designation of incipient insanity?—(Mrs. Dunn Gardner): The directions are that that should be so, that they should be admitted for their mental symptoms, but not excluded because they also have other illnesses.

19,130. If you were to extend that, you could fill your hospital with physical disease, in the course of which early mental symptoms had arisen, and cases which do not come under this designation at all?—We can fill the Maudsley Hospital quite well.

19,131. Chairman: We had some evidence of a general hospital in connection with this question. In the wards of a general hospital you have patients suffering from various forms of physical ailments, and, as a concomitant of these states of high fever and so on, you may have mental disorder supervening, we were told. I think it was in Edinburgh Infirmary that there was a ward to which cases were transferred when they became unmanageable, although the causation of their state was not strictly mental disease, but it was a concomitant of ordinary special disease. In that case the patient was temporarily transferred to this other ward, which was under the charge of an alienist, who had a staff specially fitted to deal with cases of that sort. It seems a very useful expedient; but in your administration of Maudsley we must take it as we find it; you do not exclude a case of mental disorder merely because the mental disorder has supervened upon, or is a concomitant of, a well-known and defined physical disease?—(Mr. Sidney): No, we have not in practice done it.

19,132. Whether it is in within your Act is perhaps another matter, but in practice you have admitted such cases as Sir David has seen?—(Mrs. Dunn Gardner): In London, of course, a number of these cases in hospital who develop mental symptoms are sent to an observation ward in the workhouse—a strangely unsuitable place for them always, I think.

19,133. Maudsley, of course, has close association with King's College Hospital?—(Mr. Sidney): Yes.

19,134. And I take it in the case of, let us say, ex-ophthalmic goitre or any other well-known disease of that sort, which may have mental symptoms, you are able to pray in aid the assistance of the medical staff, as distinct from the alienist staff, from over the way, to deal with these cases and to prescribe for them?—We have consultants. (Mrs. Dunn Gardner): And they send over their cases to us, and we to them.

Chairman: I rather take it Sir David's point would be this, that these are cases of well-known disease which require special treatment from the physical point of view?

Sir David Drummond: Essentially so, if you are to do their mental condition any good.

Chairman: And the proper person to prescribe for such a case would not be the alienist, but the general practitioner?

19,135. Sir David Drummond: Not at all—such diseases as kidney disease, brain disease, and so forth, as apart from insanity?—(Mr. Sidney): And those are cases which you consider might be in a general hospital?

Sir David Drummond: Most certainly, that is the point.

19,136. Chairman: No doubt the London County Council will take note of the point that has been raised. But we are interested in seeing how you conduct your institution, and you do not debar a case from admission for the reason that it is suffering from some perfectly well-known physical ailment, but has mental symptoms really as a concomitant; you take in such a case?—Yes.

19,137. Now, on this general question, however, of administration, I take it that your County Council has considered quite fully the relative advantages and disadvantages of the visiting committee, that is to say, the body charged with the administration of the Lunacy Acts, having charge also of Maudsley and any similar institutions?—Yes, we certainly think it is desirable.

19,138. And you think that the administrative advantages outweigh any drawbacks that may result from the association with the lunacy administration, which is the necessary consequence of the two systems being in one hand?—I think so, yes.

19,139. The idea (one wants just to put to you the idea for your consideration) that has been suggested more than once is that just as tuberculosis and certain other diseases are treated at special clinics and the costs are charged against the ordinary rate in contradistinction to the poor rate, similar institutions for dealing with incipient insanity short of

10 July, 1925.]

The Hon. WILLIAM SIDNEY, J.P., and
Mrs. ROSE DUNN GARDNER, J.P.

[Continued.]

certification might also be a charge against the public health rate?—Yes. (Mrs. Dunn Gardner): It is a point, I think, is it not, that if you only sent to your asylums patients who were practically not hopeful patients it would make it very much harder for the patients whom you did send to the asylums, who would have to abandon all hope on entering, and also for the staff who would have nothing to deal with but the chronics?

19,140. But still this scheme contemplates two types of institutions. On the one hand the institution for the voluntary uncertified patient, and, on the other hand, the institution for the certified patient. These two will go on in future in parallel?—(Mr. Sidney): That is the question that has really not been decided. If you are going to have a very large number of voluntary patients, we should, I suppose, have to send them to the mental hospitals and mix them with the other patients; otherwise we should have to have a large number of institutions similar to the Maudsley, which we should have to set up in London. We should to a large extent empty our mental hospitals.

19,141. Of course you do propose, alongside the Maudsley type of institution, the admission of voluntary patients to the asylum properly so called?—Yes, that we contemplate.

19,142. There might be a certain overlapping between these two categories?—I daresay if we were beginning de novo we would start with separate institutions for voluntary patients like the Maudsley, but we have got to take things as they are. We have got our larger mental hospitals, and if we had a larger number of people who entered as voluntary patients, we should empty our mental hospitals.

19,143. Earl Russell: Yes, but if you had voluntary patients at your ordinary institutions, you would have associating with them recovering patients under parole to some extent?—Yes. Classification has been carried very far in the matter.

19,144. It would not be a very sharp line between them?—No. (Mrs. Dunn Gardner.) You see it is not settled yet. We are building villas and we might have villas for voluntary patients.

19,145. Chairman: We recognise that we are at a stage of transition, but it is interesting to know what is the goal of the transition; and if we could reshape the world to our ideal, we could probably solve this problem. Now I do see an administrative difficulty here. Suppose you were to reproduce the Maudsley institution in some numbers, and at the same time were to have voluntary patients going into asylums. What would determine whether a voluntary patient went to a Maudsley institution or to one of the ordinary asylums as a voluntary boarder? What would be the line of distinction between the two cases?—(Mr. Sidney): I do not think we could draw any distinction. We should either have to send them all, except the small number who went to Maudsley, to our mental hospitals, or else send them all to institutions like the Maudsley. You could not have a mixture of the two systems, I think.

19,146. One of the projects that is foreshadowed here, is that you would have places in association with the asylums, villas such as Mrs. Dunn Gardner was referring to, which would be in a sense really Maudsley adjuncts of a mental hospital?—That would be so, if Mrs. Dunn Gardner's idea was carried out. I think that is the better of the two.

19,147. Now, there you are trenching on a very difficult subject, because if the incipient case and the voluntary case went to the premises of the asylum, although no doubt the case would be different in law, would it not be very liable to attract to itself just the stigma that the people would say "So and so has gone to Hanwell," and they would not discriminate between the two?—There is that risk.

Earl Russell: But then you want to aim at making Hanwell a desirable address. It will take time, no doubt.

19,148. Chairman: No doubt it will achieve that. Now I think we might get on our note an important recommendation of your Council which relates to this matter. I understand that the Mental Hospitals Committee made a recommendation in consequence of which the County Council on the 26th May, 1923, resolved as follows: "That, in the opinion of the Council in the application of the principle embodied in the Mental Treatment Bill, 1923, which the Council has already approved, that there should be power for temporary treatment to be given in approved institutions to persons suffering from mental disorder who are likely to benefit from such treatment, without it being necessary for such persons to be certified, it is desirable that the duty of administering the local authority's mental hospital or hospitals, and the provision of necessary approved accommodation for the treatment of uncertified mental cases, should be dealt with as the work of one and the same branch of the local authority's administration"?—Yes.

19,149. We may take that as your considered view, no doubt, after looking into these various aspects of the problem which I have been putting to you this morning?—Is it not the case, Sir, that in Scotland the voluntary boarders go to the ordinary mental hospitals?

19,150. I believe so, yes.—Has there been any objection?

19,151. I do not know that any has been taken?—I thought that was so.

19,152. That is so. Then you deal next with the case of the patient who is incapable of volition, which is also dealt with in the Mental Treatment Bill, 1923. The principle upon which these cases are proposed to be dealt with by that measure is to substitute the will of some responsible guardian for the absence of will on the part of the patient?—That is so.

19,153. It is really a substituted volition?—Yes.

19,154. Earl Russell: When you say without certificate you mean not certified in the full sense, but of course the Mental Treatment Bill provides for two medical certificates?—It does, yes.

19,155. Chairman: You mean without the certificate of insanity?—Yes.

19,156. Earl Russell: Without the full justice's order?—Yes.

19,157. Chairman: But that type of case is again rather a puzzling one. It all depends, does it not, upon who is to judge as to whether the case is non-volitional or not?—Yes, entirely.

19,158. A discretion must reside somewhere as to the disposal of the unhappy subject?—Yes.

19,159. Earl Russell: You come back again to our modern high priest, the doctor?—Yes.

19,160. Chairman: Personally I have always felt throughout all these discussions that it is extremely difficult to abstract categories; and when one tries by legislation and administration to deal with human people, one never gets precise definitions which will cover every variety of human experience. You can only do it on broad lines?—That is so. It would be simpler, of course, to define a voluntary boarder as a person who has either got the will power or has not got the will power.

19,161. Yes. I have suggested that the wider classification might be better, between simply voluntary and involuntary patients. That is the widest possible classification. Then, again, you can have three classes, voluntary, non-volitional but passive, resistant; and the necessity for restraint arises only in the case of the resistant patient?—Yes.

19,162. But, on the other hand, in the non-volitional case you are undoubtedly subjecting the person of the patient to restraint?—Yes.

19,163. Which the law would not permit unless it were specially authorised?—No.

19,164. You are disposing, in short, of a human being without his will, if you can put it in that way?—Yes.

19,165. Which would be an unlawful act were it not authorised?—Yes. (Mrs. Dunn Gardner): But it seems rather hard to exclude him from the benefit

10 July, 1925.]

The Hon. WILLIAM SIDNEY, J.P., and
Mrs. ROSE DUNN GARDNER, J.P.

[Continued.]

of treatment, because temporarily he has not the will to say he would like it.

19,166. It is not a question of his exclusion from treatment, but a question whether he should be treated under certification or not?—He would be treated in a different place, in any ordinary mental hospital.

19,167. Yes; he would not get the benefit of the special type of institution. The non-volitional case may happen to be perhaps the most curable case, because the period of non-volition may be quite transitory, and it would be hard that such a case, merely on account of the absence of volition, should be certified in order to get treatment.

Sir David Drummond: I think that is a very important point. Curable cases are often the people who are not in a position to state their will in that way.

19,168. Chairman: I am afraid if the case is resistant, certification of some sort may be necessary, but that again might be alleviated by your subsequent suggestions for observation and temporary certification, less than full certification?—(Mr. Sidney): Provisional certification.

19,169. Now may we pass to certain amendments of the existing Lunacy Act which you propose. You deal first with the voluntary boarders; and I understand that, from your experience, speaking generally, you regard the Lunacy Acts as providing adequate protection for the individual?—Yes.

19,170. But you emphasize the fact that the Act of 1890 is now 35 years old, and that the outlook upon this whole subject, both medically and socially, has very materially altered and, I hope, advanced in the interim?—Yes.

19,171. And the amendments you suggest are in the direction of a recognition of that new outlook?—Yes.

19,172. Then, first of all, you are in favour of the voluntary boarders being received in all mental hospitals administered by a local authority?—Yes.

19,173. Have you considered what safeguards should be attached to that, to prevent, let us say, the abuse of the institution by persons tendering themselves as voluntary patients who, attracted by the new outlook of the mental hospital, regard it as a desirable place to live?—(Mrs. Dunn Gardner): Do not we say "suitable cases"?

19,174. Some safeguards are manifestly necessary there. In whom is the discretion to reside? A person may present himself and say: "I desire to live in Hanwell"?—(Mr. Sidney): There must be a doctor's certificate; we would have to rely upon that.

19,175. Earl Russell: Why must there be a doctor's certificate? Why cannot the patient come as he would to any ordinary hospital? I agree that the medical superintendent should say whether it is a fit case or not, but why must there be a doctor's certificate?—To show simply that he is not a crank.

19,176. But the medical superintendent can find that out?—But after a certain time would you not fill the hospital?

19,177. Chairman: There we are right at the heart of the difficulty. As Lord Russell points out, the door of the general hospital, so long as there are beds available, is open to all patients?—(Mrs. Dunn Gardner): Who are regarded as suitable.

19,178. Who are suffering. Is not that it? If you have a street accident, the person is taken at once to the hospital; others find their way through the out-patient department, where the doctors say: "This case ought to be admitted". Others come with what we call in Scotland a "line" or recommendation?—But if a patient suffering from cancer were to go across the road to the consumptive hospital, he would not be admitted; he would have to go somewhere else. (Mr. Sidney): But, of course, it is easier to detect a person suffering from a bodily disease than from a mental disease.

19,179. Earl Russell: It is not necessarily very easy, if he says he is suffering from heart trouble, for instance?—No.

19,180. Chairman: You make a very important recommendation, and it is one which has commended itself to us all, namely, that the voluntary system should be associated with the mental hospitals, but we must consider rather carefully what are to be the safeguards?—(Mrs. Dunn Gardner): It is a very important point.

19,181. Are people to be allowed to present themselves, as Lord Russell figures, at the door of an institution and demand admission, or must they pass through some preliminary test of suitability, or what is to be the machinery? Has that point been thought out by the London County Council to any extent?—(Mr. Sidney): No, I do not think it has, although of course there must be some precautions taken.

19,182. One would like to know, from the practical point of view, how that machinery could be devised?—Yes.

19,183. Earl Russell: There is a specific case which has always stuck in my mind since it was given in evidence here by a medical superintendent of a public mental hospital, who said that a woman felt an attack coming on, and she wanted to come in. Could he let her in; and his answer has to be "No." But supposing he could take voluntary boarders, why should he say: "Go away and find some other doctor, and come back with a certificate"? Why should he not be able to say he can take the case in, if he has room?—(Mrs. Dunn Gardner): But he would be in a position himself to give the certificate. He would not require a certificate from another doctor who might not have treated her. He for a long while probably had been treating this case?

19,184. Yes, he had in this case, but a person might come, in whom he saw signs of a mental breakdown beginning: why should he send that person out to find another doctor?

19,185. Chairman: At the present moment the medical superintendent's task is perfectly simple. The person presented at his door comes with a warrant, and he simply opens his door and the case is taken in: he has no discretion. If the voluntary patient is to be introduced, there must be some method whereby the institution is protected against persons who are quite unsuitable; there must be some sifting process, and the machinery for that is obviously a matter of very considerable importance, or you might have the system abused altogether. There is the case that Lord Russell figures, where the patient should be able to get the benefit of renewed treatment at the earliest possible moment. You are not however going to open the doors of the London County Council asylums and make them agreeable residences for malingerers and ne'er-do-wells?—(Mr. Sidney): I think you must have a medical certificate, or you must have some reference from some hospital.

19,186. There must be some ticket of admission, so to speak, some qualification?—Yes; it cannot depend solely upon the medical superintendent's examination of the person who presents himself or herself at the gates of the institution.

19,187. Would it be possible, do you think, for the solution to be found again in the clinic and the observation ward? That would be the first stage—that the patient should go there in the first instance?—(Mrs. Dunn Gardner): That would mean that you would have to mix up the voluntary boarders with the certifiable cases, because, as I understand it, the observation hospital is to take the place of the observation ward of the infirmaries.

19,188. Yes, but I think with a rather wider sphere?—Yes; but I mean you would deliberately mix your voluntary boarders and certifiable cases then.

19,189. Earl Russell: I do not see myself why the opinion of the medical man who has seen this patient at an out-patient department is worth more than the opinion of the medical superintendent at the asylum

10 July, 1925.]

The Hon. WILLIAM SIDNEY, J.P., and
Mrs. ROSE DUNN GARDNER, J.P.

[Continued.]

when the patient gets there?—I suppose you might have the opinion of some friend who had known the patient for a long time, as well as the doctor.

19,190. But I can imagine cases in which it might be desirable that the patient should be admitted there and then, and not put out for a day or two to get certificates?—Quite.

Sir David Drummond: But in that case the doctor who took the out-patients in the first instance would have very little difficulty in recognising the case, if it were a case requiring admission.

Earl Russell: And you could allow them to come with a certificate from the Poor Law doctor, to whom they had been brought by the relieving officer.

Sir David Drummond: Those requiring admission at once would be recognised by the doctor at the asylum.

19,191. Chairman: I think we may leave it at this: that the County Council approve generally of the principle of the voluntary patients being admissible to your institutions?—(Mr. Sidney): Yes.

19,192. But you are not at the moment in a position to give us any suggestions as to the machinery that will be necessary in that matter. If, on thinking it over, with the assistance of your officials, you have any suggestions to make to us on the practical side as to the safeguards, you might be good enough to communicate with our Secretary, because the point is well worth consideration. The working of it out is very important, and one would like to have suggestions from a large body such as the London County Council. Perhaps you will be good enough to consider how it should be done in practice, and, if you have anything to suggest, communicate with us?—Yes, I have been thinking about what the channel should be.

Earl Russell: On the lines the Chairman mentions: what is to be, so to speak, the ticket that is to bring them in?

19,193. Chairman: Yes; it obviously requires deliberation?—I understand that at Maudsley a great many come through the out-patient department, or else enquire what their doctor thinks about it. They have seen a doctor, probably.

19,194. Maudsley is on a small scale, but I am thinking of the general case of every asylum in this country, if it had to receive voluntary boarders if tendered, and what is to be the qualification?—Yes, we will give you that information.

19,195. Of course, we recognise that the admission of voluntary patients may be of the greatest value in this way, that a person may thus obtain the benefit of the institution without certification, and may therefore be encouraged to go there at an early stage, instead of having first of all to be a pronounced case before the benefit of the institution can be obtained. That is the general principle, is it not?—Yes.

19,196. Now you also point out, as Mrs. Dunn Gardner has already done, that the presence of such patients may infuse an atmosphere of hopefulness, and one sees the psychological effect of that.

19,197. Mr. Micklem: In your précis on page 4, you say "It is clearly anomalous that authority for what has been allowed for many years to private institutions should be denied to the authorities of public mental hospitals." So far as private institutions are concerned, that has been extremely limited, has it not? They have no general power of receiving boarders?—Yes.

Chairman: Registered hospitals receive large numbers. Bethlehem has more voluntary patients, I understand, than involuntary patients.

19,198. Mr. Micklem: But licensed houses only have the boarders under the statutory sanction of the 1890 Act?—(Mrs. Dunn Gardner): Yes. They admit voluntary boarders.

Mr. Micklem: But in every case they have to get the consent of the Board of Control, and they have to get the consent for a limited time.

Chairman: Yes; there are certain formalities. They are in the category of voluntary patients, I think, Mr. Micklem.

19,199. Mr. Micklem: But it has to be done with the previous consent of the Board of Control, and that consent only runs for a very limited period, and has to be renewed, if necessary?—But the public hospitals have no right to admit voluntary boarders under any circumstances.

19,200. I follow that; but I rather thought from what was stated here that it was assumed that these private institutions could receive voluntary boarders as they pleased?—(Mrs. Dunn Gardner): I should very much like to know how many at private institutions are received as voluntary boarders and perhaps, within a week, are certified.

Mr. Micklem: The Act says they may receive and lodge as boarders for the time specified in the consent of the Board of Control, but not beyond that.

19,201. Chairman: At the moment no voluntary patients at all can be received in a public mental hospital. In the registered mental hospital, and in the licensed house, such patients under certain formalities are received. That is the actual position?—(Mr. Sidney): Yes.

Mr. Micklem: But they are very strict formalities.

19,202. Chairman: No doubt, they are, but the fact remains that there are a considerable number of them, subject to those formalities, in the licensed houses and registered mental hospitals. Now on the question of certification you draw attention to the rather anomalous position that in certain cases two medical certificates are required, and in other cases one only. May I take it that the general effect of the Council's views upon the matter is embodied in their resolution of the 26th May, 1925, as follows: "That in the opinion of the Council, it is desirable that in every case in which an order for the compulsory detention of a person of unsound mind is made, the presentation to the judicial authority, who is asked to make the order, of two medical certificates should be necessary before the order can be made, that one of these certificates should be given by a practitioner who has been approved specially for that purpose, and that amendment of the Lunacy Act, 1890, to secure this is desirable"?—Yes.

19,203. First of all, I think that the County Council are in favour of the abolition of any discrimination in the matter of formalities between the private patient and the parish patient?—Yes.

19,204. Then, secondly, as to the method which should be applied to both cases indifferently, the Council's view appears to be that two certificates in all cases are necessary?—Yes.

19,205. I do not want to cover ground that we have covered very frequently before, but have you considered whether the expense of two certificates is necessary in all cases, or whether the resort to two medical opinions should not be confined to cases where there is some room for doubt? I mean, do you approve of two certificates for all cases?—I think it is more desirable.

19,206. You think the value from the public point of view of the protection thus afforded counterbalances the increased cost in which it would result, for it would cost a great deal more?—Parliament has thought it necessary under the Mental Deficiency Act that there should be two certificates, and I do not see how you can draw a distinction very well between the two cases.

19,207. Earl Russell: But your experience tells you that in eight out of ten cases there is no sort of doubt?—Yes.

19,208. The admissions into the asylum leave you with no doubt. Is it really necessary to have a second certificate there?—It is more to satisfy public opinion. I cannot say that in my experience it is necessary to have two.

19,209. Mr. Micklem: But the Council do not intend this to cover the case of an urgency order,

10 July, 1925.]

The Hon. WILLIAM SIDNEY, J.P., and
Mrs. ROSE DUNN GARDNER, J.P.

[Continued.]

do they? In many cases immediate action must be taken?—Yes, you would have to exclude those cases.

19,210. But you do not mean that in those cases it would be necessary to have two certificates?—In my personal experience I must admit that I have not seen the necessity for the two certificates.

19,211. Sir David Drummond: What do you mean by saying that one of the certificates should be given by a practitioner approved specially for the purpose?—That is to bring us into line with the requirements of the Mental Deficiency Act.

19,212. But what was in your mind when you advanced that view?—(Mrs. Dunn Gardner): I think we thought it would be a great protection that one certificate at any rate should be given by an expert.

19,213. But that would be impossible in outlying parts of the country?—Of course, we only know about London. (Mr. Sidney): We are only thinking of London, where it is possible to carry it out.

19,214. Earl Russell: Approved specially by whom?—(Mrs. Dunn Gardner): In the Mental Deficiency Act the approval is by the local authority or the Board of Control.

19,215. Sir David Drummond: I am afraid it would not be practicable throughout the country?—(Mr. Sidney): Not throughout the country, possibly, no. (Mrs. Dunn Gardner): But why should it not be applicable to all mental cases? If it has been found to be practicable and applicable for mental deficiency cases, why not for the others?

19,216. Chairman: You may point to the Mental Deficiency Act as being the latest pronouncement of Parliament upon the subject, but we want to explore it on its merits; and when it is contemplated that a large additional expenditure might be necessary, it is very desirable to see whether that expenditure will be useful. For the moment I gather that the only merit of it in your view is that it would give the public a greater sense of security?—(Mr. Sidney): Yes, that is so. I think that is our view.

19,217. Rather than that it would in fact result in protecting the patient against being detained unwarrantably?—Yes.

19,218. Sir David Drummond: I would like to point out to you that these gentlemen who are appointed under the Mental Deficiency Act are not experts at all; they are not in any sense mental experts?—(Mrs. Dunn Gardner): They are not mental experts, but they are experts with regard to mental deficiency.

19,219. They are not; they just happen to be appointed; two or three doctors will apply to get permission to do this, and that is acceded to, but there is no question of expertness?—I believe their credentials are inquired into before they are appointed, as to what their experience has been, and that sort of thing.

19,220. This is quite a different point. You are suggesting that they should be medical men who are approved specially to deal with questions of lunacy?—Only one should be.

19,221. Earl Russell: You see, in effect at any rate, under the pauper practice there is a second medical certificate almost immediately: that of the medical superintendent of the place where the patient is received?—He has been received then.

19,222. He has been received, it is true, but you do not find that many do have to be sent away because they have been wrongfully certified in practice, although there is only one doctor?—I think I have seen several patients who have been sent to an asylum and, on reception, their illness has cleared up, and they have been at once recommended to the committee to be discharged, but they have to wait until there is a committee meeting.

19,223. Chairman: There are two points. The first is: are there to be two certificates? The second is: who are to give the certificates, be they one or two? On the first question, should there be two certificates, the only suggestion we would make for your consideration is this: whether in general one certificate is not necessary for all cases, private and parish, subject to this, that it should be in the discretion of the judicial authority or the certifying doctor, if he thinks that the case is one of any doubt or difficulty, to call in a second opinion. In ordinary life when cases of difficulty arise in practice you do call in a second opinion, just because the case is difficult, but you do not call in a second opinion generally for a cold in the head. The obvious case can be treated without a second opinion; and, if you take a case of pronounced insanity, is it necessary for two people to go through the process of certifying in such a case? I am putting it argumentatively, to test it. Is it necessary to have two opinions in every case, or would it not be a sufficient safeguard if there were one opinion, coupled with the provision that, if the case were one of difficulty, the doctor or the justice of the peace should be entitled, if they so wished, to be fortified with another opinion?—Until we have discussed the question of receiving houses or observation hospitals, it is rather difficult to say, is it not?

19,224. I agree the questions are related?—Yes, and whether during the time of waiting to see if they should be certified or not the patients will be under the care of experts or whether they will be in the ward of an infirmary or workhouse, makes, I think, a great deal of difference.

19,225. If every patient is to pass through the stage of the observation ward, it may be that one medical opinion would be quite sufficient for admission to that stage. Then the case would be under full observation; and if it was one of any difficulty a second opinion might be obtained before the final certificate was granted. But the suggestion that all cases must necessarily have two certificates is one that requires consideration, in view of the large additional expense which might be unnecessary, and, if its only object was to appease public anxiety, it might really not be well spent money?—(Mr. Sidney): Yes, I think that is so, Sir. Personally, I do not think it is necessary to have two. But the idea was more to bring us into line with the Mental Deficiency Act; and also, as regards the private patients, if it is determined that one is sufficient for private cases as well as other cases, I do not think we need insist upon two.

19,226. Earl Russell: I think we are all quite with you in getting the two classes into line?—They must be in line.

19,227. Chairman: You want uniformity of procedure, and you also point to the fact that the latest expression of public opinion is embodied in the Act of 1913?—Yes.

19,227A. Then let us pass to the next question of whether the medical practitioner concerned should have any special qualification. Here again your resolution is on the lines of the Mental Deficiency Act, Section 5, where one of the medical certifiers must be approved for the purpose by the local authority or the Board. Now that is practically your language, though you put it a little more emphatically. Sir David has pointed out quite properly that it does not necessarily mean in the least that the person approved by the local authority shall be a specialist in mental disease; but, on the other hand, it would have this result that if a person were specially selected and approved for the purpose he would acquire experience of the work and he would be a man who knew about this matter?—Yes.

19,228. Earl Russell: You would not get a man standing high in the profession applying for a guinea a time; it would not be worth his while?—No.

19,229. Chairman: You would not get him in the country either?—As a matter of fact, as regards pauper patients, almost invariably the certificate is given by the medical superintendent of the Poor Law infirmary, who has certain experience, because he is constantly seeing these patients who are brought into the observation ward, and he has a certain knowledge of mental cases.

10 July, 1925.]

The Hon. WILLIAM SIDNEY, J.P., and
Mrs. ROSE DUNN GARDNER, J.P.

[Continued.]

19,230. There is something to be said for this, Mr. Sidney, that the process of certification, being a very important one indeed because of its consequences, should not be left entirely to any general medical practitioner, and, possibly, a very inexperienced one, who at the present moment is as qualified in law to certify as the most experienced doctor?—I think so. It ought to be somebody approved.

19,231. It might be an advantage therefore if the local authorities were to designate a particular medical man, presumably they would select one of some experience, who would then become the recognised person for this purpose, and would acquire experience in his work, as we saw in Glasgow. Dr. Carswell told us he was specially appointed by Glasgow to deal with these cases, and he saw every case?—I think that is so.

19,232. And that again would help to allay public apprehensions by giving the feeling that this was a responsible doctor who was specially charged with this duty and selected for this duty?—I think that is most important.

Sir David Drummond: But you would not expect a man who had a big reputation to undertake this duty; a man whose opinion was worth having might not be the man who would be approved.

Chairman: You could not command the services of the eminent practitioner, but would you not get in the large districts an experienced man?

Sir David Drummond: I do not think it will work in practice.

19,233. Chairman: Now we can pass to another topic. I see the County Council is in favour of greater freedom in the matter of boarding-out, and there you refer to the Scottish practice. Apparently, according to your experience, Section 57 of the Act of 1890 has not in practice proved workable?—No.

19,234. Have you found in practical experience that some system of boarding-out of harmless cases would be a desirable thing?—I think so, Sir, yes.

19,235. Do you think you could get the right type of home?—It would be rather difficult, of course, in the case of London.

19,236. You see it is obviously a case where you want to send the person to a rural district?—Yes.

19,237. In Scotland it has been largely done by sending the patients to cottagers in the rural parts of Scotland, where the patient joins more or less in the family life and does a good deal of work about the place, if one may speak colloquially, and leads a more or less happy life as a member of the family. But somebody was good enough to say in that chair some time ago that they thought there was possibly a larger supply in Scotland of responsible God-fearing —(I think was the expression)—cottagers who would undertake the care and could be entrusted with the care of these people. I am not for a moment subscribing to that view, if I may say so, as between the two nations; but the difficulty of course is to get the proper type of home to send the patients to, because the risks of abuse are very great. The patient may be overworked, underfed, improperly sheltered and clothed; but do you think you could command in rural districts round about London a sufficient number of homes in which you could board out suitable patients?—I think so. I think Mrs. Dunn Gardner has rather gone into this question. (Mrs. Dunn Gardner): I went over to Belgium and saw the boarding-out system there, but at present I think it is hardly worth contemplating because we have not got enough accommodation for our ordinary people. I mean there is no extra housing available; nobody has got an empty room. Each patient must have a separate room. They could let it to somebody who is not a patient at all.

19,238. Of course, payments are made in respect of such patients?—So is rent. I do not think there is at present any superfluity of accommodation which we can make use of. Where I saw it done in Belgium, in each place there were a great many houses and a very few people, and they were most anxious to have the boarders. Of course, at Ghel it is a different thing there; because it has been done for so many hundred years, starting on a religious basis, that the whole country becomes the guardian of a boarded-out patient; it is a most wonderful thing to see. At Liewrneux, where I went to, there is not any of that feeling at all; it seems to me that they were depending much more on their central accommodation; each has a headquarters to which patients can be at once removed. At Ghel it was much too primitive to have headquarters, but at Liewrneux they were making the most gorgeous and expensive building I have ever seen in connection with lunatics.

19,239. Do you think the housing difficulties are such in the rural quarters that there are not cottagers at the moment who could take in cases? We have the housing difficulty in Scotland also, and although the boarding-out system has a little diminished lately, there are still a large number of boarded-out cases with us in Scotland.

Earl Russell: In that class of house at the moment I think there are hardly any vacant beds.

19,240. Chairman: You think it is hardly practicable at the moment?—For the moment. We are trying to do it more for the mental deficiency cases than we have done for any other patients; of course, they are more easy to deal with than others, but it is most difficult to find anybody willing to become guardians, simply because they have not room for the people.

19,241. Earl Russell: The power might be worth having?—Yes.

19,242. Chairman: Subject to the difficulty of carrying it out in practice, the County Council is in favour of greater facilities for doing it, and we may, of course, have a happier time hereafter when there is more accommodation in the country?—Yes. There is no doubt that the lives lived by the people boarded out are infinitely happier than the lives lived by the people in the bigger institutions.

19,243. I think one must always recognise that the atmosphere of an institution, however well conducted, is distasteful?—(Mr. Sidney): One cannot get away from that fact.

19,244. Then you suggest that any boarded-out patients should remain on the books of the institution, and it will be necessary probably to have some special provision for supervision?—Yes.

19,245. It is done in Scotland by district sponsors. You make reference a little later in your précis to various abortive legislative efforts, and I should like to see the series of Bills that have been produced from time to time; they mark the progress of thought on the matter?—I will supply them.

19,246. You refer us, first of all, to an amending Lunacy Bill introduced in 1899 in the House of Lords which dealt with boarding-out; you give us a clause there, and possibly we might just put that clause on our note as it stands, in order that it may be available to us all. The clause is as follows:—

“8 (1) Notwithstanding anything in section fifty-seven, sub-sections one and two, of the principal Act (i.e., the Lunacy Act, 1890) contained, any two members of the visiting committee of an asylum may, without the approval required by that section of the board of guardians, local authority, or a justice, but subject to regulations made by that committee and approved by a Secretary of State, order a pauper lunatic to be delivered over to the custody of some person (not necessarily a relative or friend of the lunatic) who shall be willing to receive him, and who shall be considered by the visiting committee to be a fit and proper person to receive and properly care for the lunatic, and no such person shall have in his charge or custody more than two lunatics at any one time. The visiting committee may pay to the person to whom the lunatic is delivered

10 July, 1925.]

The Hon. WILLIAM SIDNEY, J.P., and
Mrs. ROSE DUNN GARDNER, J.P.

[Continued.]

such allowance as it thinks proper; but the guardians of the union to which the lunatic is chargeable or the local authority liable for his maintenance shall not pay to the committee in respect of the lunatic more than the sum which would have been payable by them if the lunatic had remained in the asylum. In any case, where the expense incurred by the visiting committee of an asylum in boarding-out a lunatic is greater than the amount received for his maintenance, the difference in cost shall be borne by the local authority to which the asylum belongs.

(2) The name of any lunatic who may be so boarded-out shall remain upon the books of the asylum from which he was removed, and a medical officer of that asylum shall visit him from time to time and report the result of the visit to the visiting committee. Two members of the committee may, at any time, order the lunatic to be brought back to the asylum.

(3) When any order has been made under the provisions of this section, notice thereof shall be sent to the clerk to the board of guardians or the local authority, as the case may be.

(4) Sub-section three of section fifty-seven of the principal Act shall apply in the case of any lunatic boarded out under the provisions of this section."

19,247. Chairman: That Bill with the clause quoted, passed the House of Lords in 1900, but failed in the House of Commons, and has not been again introduced, but the County Council is in favour of legislation on those lines, I take it?—Yes.

19,248. Now, the next topic is one of very great importance. I see that your County Council has been a pioneer in the matter of the provision of houses to which alleged lunatics could be taken in lieu of the workhouse?—Yes.

19,249. Have you been impressed with the undesirability of what one may call the workhouse stage in the treatment of insanity?—Yes. I do not think it is desirable.

19,250. You think that episode which is the preliminary of the admission of so many patients to your mental hospitals is undesirable, in that it involves passing through the workhouse stage, with the consequent pauperisation?—Yes. (Mrs. Dunn Gardner): And the ward may be one where there is no special expert doctor, where there is no expert nurse, no trained attendants, and no means of dealing with the cases.

19,251. Quite. At the very stage when possibly treatment might be most desirable, at the outset?—Absolutely so.

19,252. I suppose the removal of a patient to those surroundings when the patient is upset may just help to accentuate the symptoms?—(Mr. Sidney): And the undesirability of keeping them any length of time.

19,253. Is your Council's solution of that the provision of a new type of institution altogether?—Yes, that has been in the mind of the County Council for a very long time.

19,254. So I gather, and I see that so long ago as 1899 in the Council Minutes for the 10th October of that year, approval was given to the provision of such institutions?—Yes.

19,255. And you tell us that support was given to the proposal by the then Lord Chancellor, the Lunacy Commissioners, and the late Local Government Board, now the Ministry of Health. In 1903 you tell us a public Bill was introduced in the House of Lords which passed that House without amendment, but did not make progress in the Lower House for want of time. Attempts were made to reintroduce the Bill in 1904, 1906 and 1907, unsuccessfully. Then the Royal Commission on the Care and Control of the Feeble-minded meantime made recommendations for the provision of receiving houses on lines similar to those of your Bill; and in 1909 your Council again considered the proposal, but thought that the experiment might be limited to one receiving house. Then the Maudsley Hospital project was under discussion, and it was suggested that a receiving house might be established in connection with that hospital, and there the matter rests. But it is manifest, Mr. Sidney, that throughout, the London County Council has been alive to the disadvantages of the present system, and has been casting about for some solution?—That is so, and I think I may say that most of the boards of guardians have come to that conclusion also.

19,256. And the line on which you think the solution should be sought is the provision of approved institutions of the nature of receiving houses, interposed between the patient and the admission to the asylum?—Yes.

19,257. Let us pursue that a little further. The project included power to provide and maintain receiving houses and ambulance stations, and an ambulance service?—Yes.

19,258. We might just put on our note this summary of your scheme. It included "power to provide and maintain receiving houses and ambulance stations and an ambulance service ancillary thereto; the treatment of out-patients in an out-patient department at the receiving houses; the appointment of a sufficient number of medical practitioners as certifying officers; persons alleged to be of unsound mind were to be removed to the receiving house in place of the workhouse infirmary; justices of the peace were to follow the procedure of the Lunacy Acts when making reception orders, but were to employ the services of the specially appointed certifying doctor; a patient could be detained on the authority of the medical superintendent for three days, during which time the medical superintendent was to bring him before a justice and report to the justice whether the patient should be further detained in the receiving house or sent to an asylum, the justice could order the patient to be detained for treatment for not more than six weeks in the receiving house, and this period could be extended by a justice on the recommendation of two members of the receiving house committee for periods not exceeding three weeks at a time." Does that passage which I have read contain in summary form the procedure which the London County Council thinks desirable?—Yes. It might require amendments in detail, of course.

19,259. But that is the general outline?—Yes.

Sir Ernest Hiley: Might we have the title of the Bill, Mr. Chairman? It does not appear on the note at all.

Chairman: Have you the title of the Bill? There are several Bills, Sir Ernest. There was, first of all, the Bill of 1899, and then there was a Public Bill of 1903.

Mr. Snell: That was the same Bill throughout the years, was it, 1904, 1906, 1907?

Chairman: And then there was one in 1909.

19,260. Sir Ernest Hiley: I mean the Bill alluded to in paragraph 20?—The title is "Lunacy Act Amendment (Receiving House) London Bill."

Chairman: I would like, and I think my colleagues would like, to see those Bills which are referred to; but we can easily get them from the Government printers. I think we should see the whole of them, because they evidently represent the line of thought which the London County Council is pursuing.

19,261. Mr. Snell: Did the Council promote this Bill?—Yes, they did.

19,262. Sir Ernest Hiley: I understood it was a Public Bill?—Promoted by the Council I understand.

19,263. Chairman: Was it a private Members Bill, or a Government Bill, or was it adopted by the Government?—It was a Public Bill.

19,264. Then it must have been a Bill which was backed by the Government of the day?—The Lord Chancellor had approved of it.

16 July, 1925.]

The Hon. WILLIAM SIDNEY, J.P., and
Mrs. ROSE DUNN GARDNER, J.P.

[Continued.]

19,265. Sir Ernest Hiley: Who introduced it?—I do not know.

Chairman: I think we can get the history of this legislation investigated for us, without detaining Mr. Sidney; all the information is at our disposal. We will get a note on this chapter of legislation. It is new to me; I had not known of this series of Bills.

Earl Russell: I remember the receiving houses being mooted as long ago as 1899.

19,266. Chairman: We can get a record of them all. The fact that you have been interesting yourselves in these projects of reform shows, of course, that the London County Council is dissatisfied with the existing régime in this matter?—Yes.

19,267. And that objection, I think, still holds good?—Yes.

19,268. Earl Russell: I would like to ask Mr. Sidney on paragraph 20 whether he would approve of somewhat similar powers being given to the justice to make an order for extended observation in existing infirmary wards, pending the establishment of a receiving house, to ensure this interval before complete certification?—Yes.

19,269. Even if you have not got a receiving house you still may avoid complete certification by this method?—Yes. (Mrs. Dunn Gardner): For myself I think six weeks without treatment would be a most serious thing.

19,270. Are they necessarily without treatment in the bigger Poor Law infirmaries?—I mean to say expert treatment.

19,271. Of course we have had the other view, that it would be better if they went at once to the mental hospital?—But then you will have experts at the heads of the receiving houses, and I hope many of the people would not have to go to the mental hospitals at all, if they might stop for a time in the receiving houses.

19,272. Mr. Micklem: But in the receiving houses you contemplate that they will be certified?—Yes. The justice would give the power to detain them in the receiving house, but the patient would be saved from going to the mental hospital at all, because so many of them get well in so short a time.

19,273. Chairman: The patient would not be described as a certified patient at all; the patient would be described as a patient received into this institution for observation and treatment under a temporary order, with as little emphasis on the "order" side of it as possible. But that there will require to be in reserve some power of restraint is manifest?—Yes. The observation wards have padded rooms, of course.

19,274. But it would be under a different category from the certified patient?—Yes, and also they would never have been to the mental hospital.

19,275. And might never reach one?—Yes, that is so. (Mr. Sidney): I think on second thoughts it would not do; you would have to wait till you get your receiving houses.

19,276. Earl Russell: But we have had evidence that a great many of these cases, even although violent at first, may be discharged in a comparatively short time, and in that case they do avoid the asylum?—Of course a large number avoid the asylum in the present observation wards. Only about half of those go to asylums.

19,277. We have evidence which rather suggested that if the observation period could be extended, you might get better results. I will not press it?—No; that wants a good deal of consideration, I think.

19,278. Chairman: Now your Committee has interested itself in the matter of after care, Mr. Sidney, and you point to the existing system under which patients may be allowed out on trial, and receive, if paupers, a money allowance while they are on trial. That, as we have heard, is a very valuable provision, but these are still patients who are undischarged; they are still patients who are certified and on the books of the institution. After-care concerns itself rather with the patient who has ceased to be on the books of the institution and has been returned to ordinary civil life?—That is so.

19,279. And at present, I understand, that such after care is provided entirely by voluntary associations and private individuals?—Yes.

19,280. We have had the advantage of some evidence from the After Care Association which was very interesting, and satisfied us, I think, that very useful work could be done. Now in Lord Onslow's Bill it is proposed to authorize expenditure for the purpose of after care by local authorities. Has that your approval?—Yes.

19,281. There again, of course, there is this consideration that it is obviously a branch of philanthropic work that requires to be done with great tact, because many patients, I should imagine, particularly the fully recovered cases, desire to be dissociated as quickly as possible from that episode of life and forget it, not to feel that they are under supervision and investigation. On the other hand, there are many cases, although no longer proper to be detained as inmates, who find the stress of resuming life very severe. What kind of work can be done in the matter of after care when you bring it down to real life? Is it visiting or looking out for jobs for people or what is it?—(Mrs. Dunn Gardner): In the first place trying to deal with the awful feeling of loneliness of patients who go out of the institution to nobody, or to an old sister, and who may have been for years in the institution and have lost sight of all their friends, no character to go to an employment with, and with practically nothing but the workhouse before them; if they can be placed for a short time in a home, and in a little bit find their feet again before they try to get employment, then they can be helped to get employment.

19,282. You think that one branch of after care work would be the providing of what one might call convalescent homes or places of rest, between the asylum and the resumption of ordinary life?—Yes.

19,283. That I can see might be very useful work. Then visiting, I suppose, in the homes?—If they have got good homes they go home. A girl goes home and nobody knows what is a good thing to do with her, and they get her in a situation where she is at once worked so hard that she breaks down again. You do want a little supervision, I think, in that way.

19,284. Advice?—Yes, and looking at the situation from the point of view that the mother cannot perhaps appreciate, because she does not understand that her daughter is not just the same as she was when she went in.

19,285. That would be an organisation of visitors, tactful persons who could give advice and companionship possibly?—Yes, money is wanted too; for if you advise somebody who is accustomed to earn her own living to rest for a month or more, there is no income coming in; you want money help as well as the sympathetic help which they need; and with men it is just the same,—I mean they want caring for until they can get to a full day's work.

19,286. There is another aspect of it, the looking about for suitable employment, and inducing employers to take them?—Very much so, and that is done very much by the After Care Association.

19,287. These seem to represent the three main aspects of their work: the provision of a convalescent home, change of air, and so on; secondly, visiting and advising and giving a sense that they are still cared for; and, thirdly, the finding of suitable employment?—Yes, and tools and clothes; when they come in, the mental hospital can do that.

19,288. And not the least important and incidental to these is the providing of money?—Yes. When they go out on their four weeks' trial they can have an allowance from the hospital, and they are advised: "You can look for work at once," or "Do nothing for the next four weeks till we see you again."

19,289. Have you considered what organisation will be necessary for this work?—(Mr. Sidney): It will be necessary to work through the voluntary Association unless the work became too big.

10 July, 1925.]

The Hon. WILLIAM SIDNEY, J.P., and
Mrs. ROSE DUNN GARDNER, J.P.

[Continued.]

19,290 You contemplate that this should be done by utilising private effort which should be subsidised from private funds?—Yes, that is the idea.

19,291. Your County Council might make a grant to an approved After Care Association whose work you thought was satisfactory?—Yes.

19,292. You desire to eliminate the official element and make it as far as possible a voluntary effort?—Yes.

19,293. Earl Russell: At the moment you have no power to subscribe, have you?—No.

19,294. Miss Symons: What happens, Mrs. Dunn Gardner, in the case of the Maudsley. Does your lady almoner there keep in touch with patients after they leave to any extent?—(Mrs. Dunn Gardner:) I do not think she could have the time to. I do not know this, but I believe she tries to pass them on to some parish worker or club, in the case of a girl.

19,295. Chairman: It is quite manifest that this is an important part of the work, because the whole of the treatment may be undone by the patient being put into unsuitable circumstances or subjected to stresses and strains which he or she cannot bear?—Yes.

19,296. Then you tell us generally about the improvement which has taken place in methods of housing, and in the care and treatment of mental patients since your Council undertook the responsibility of the administration of asylums in 1889?—(Mr. Sidney): Yes.

19,297. Some of us have had the advantage of seeing a number of your institutions, and we have had evidence from medical superintendents and others on the subject. I do not think we should delay with details about this matter, but it is the case, I think, that the history of your administration shows progressive improvement in all those matters of dietary, clothing and medical treatment?—Undoubtedly.

19,298. Earl Russell: What is the cost per patient per week of your present diet?—Between 5s. and 6s.

19,299. For that you think the dietary is adequate?—(Mrs. Dunn Gardner): We have brought some of our menus along.

Chairman: We have had a print of the dietary that was approved by the London County Council, but we should rather like to see what the menu for to-day is.

19,300. Miss Symons: Are you satisfied with the arrangements by which in some of your institutions there is no evening meal?—That has been dealt with. Sitting up patients have evening meals now.

19,301. Everywhere do they?—(Mr. Sidney): In every case where they sit up; that has been passed by the Council.

19,302. Chairman: That is a very important reform; the interval was too long?—(Mrs. Dunn Gardner): Each month they have a menu for the whole month, quite different.

19,302A. Mr. Snell: They change from month to month?—They change from month to month—each four weeks they have something different again.

Miss Symons: How does the 5s. or 6s. a week compare with the amount of money spent on the staff diet?

19,303. Chairman: Of course, you cannot very well judge of a meal merely from the menu. There is roast beef and roast beef, and there are also methods of cooking roast beef. A good deal depends upon whether the supplies are satisfactory, and whether the cooking is satisfactory?—The Board of Control has laid down what they consider ought to be the amount of vitamins and calories, and all those sort of things, and all the menus contain more than the Board of Control have laid down.

19,304. Earl Russell: Do any of the patients ever complain?—(Mr. Sidney): No. We go round at dinner time; I have asked them constantly and we have never had any complaint whatever; in fact they express themselves perfectly satisfied with the food.

19,305. Chairman: The matter of course has been under investigation by a Departmental Committee of the Board of Control which has gone into the question of dietary, and I understand your dietary is rather more liberal than they recommended?—(Mrs. Dunn Gardner): Yes.

19,306. But it is a matter which has the attention of the London County Council; its importance is appreciated, I have no doubt?—Yes. Since they have had the so very varied dietary they have been much happier. (Mr. Sidney): I think both the quality and quantity are admirable.

19,307. I imagine in asylum life the meals must be great events in the day, and very important?—Yes.

19,308. Miss Symons: Does your new arrangement mean that where they sit up after seven o'clock at night they would have supper?—(Mrs. Dunn Gardner): Yes.

19,309. You feel, do you, that the patients who are up all day and go to bed at seven, in spite of the long interval between tea and breakfast next morning, do not need it?—(Mr. Sidney): I have asked the doctors and they say it is not necessary.

19,310. Mr. Snell: What is the attitude of those who are sent to bed early? Do not they wish to stay up and have supper?—No. Those really are not fit; they are in a very bad state. A very large number sit up now; it varies in the different wards.

19,311. It is what one may call the bed cases?—Yes.

19,312. Sir Ernest Hiley: You have overcome the kitchen difficulty. We were told the difficulty about having an evening meal was because the kitchen staff wanted to go off?—(Mrs. Dunn Gardner): They have a cold meal, except cocoa in the winter.

19,313. But you have overcome that difficulty? (Mr. Sidney): I think so; I have heard no complaints.

19,314. Earl Russell: They can warm cocoa in the wards?—(Mrs. Dunn Gardner): Yes, they have got their little kitchens.

19,315. Mr. Snell: Just cocoa and bread and butter?—Yes, it varies; we try not to have it always the same.

19,316. Sir Ernest Hiley: At Claybury difficulty was experienced about having supper because the kitchen staff wanted to go off?—(Mr. Sidney): Yes, but I do not think there is any difficulty about what we propose to give them now; I have heard of no difficulty with the kitchen staff.

19,317. Chairman: Then in the matter of clothing, I see you pay attention to what is another important matter in preserving the self-respect of patients. You are trying as far as possible to avoid institutional clothing?—Yes. The ladies of this Committee have had this in hand. In the last two or three years they have improved matters very much indeed. (Mrs. Dunn Gardner): They have a modern type of dress instead of the old one, but, in addition to the dress itself we have had little things like bright buttons and bright braid; they can embroider things for themselves; they can make their dresses different from the others; they take a great interest in those little things.

19,318. Miss Symons: What is the practice in your institutions about underclothes? I gathered in some places I visited, that though the patients were allowed to wear their own top clothes, where they have them, there have been difficulties about allowing them to wear their own underclothes?—That is so; it varies in different institutions. In some places they can only wear clothes of their own. It is very difficult when patients have to be moved from ward to ward, what happens to their clothes, and what nurses are responsible for them.

19,319. Where the underclothes are to be provided, are they to be produced on rather more modern patterns, because it struck me that I saw (not in one of your institutions) some kind of underclothes I had

10 July, 1925.]

The HON. WILLIAM SIDNEY, J.P., and
Mrs. ROSE DUNN GARDNER, J.P.

[Continued.]

never seen before. I wondered if they had been modernised?—We have taken great pains to modernise them, but to modernise clothes for a woman who has been 20 or 30 years in an institution—nothing would make her more angry.

19,320. Earl Russell: Then does not one find this practical difficulty that if they have any separate set of underclothes they get lost in the wards, or lost in the wash?—Yes. We have not succeeded in attaining to it in all institutions. Obviously it would be a satisfactory thing to do if one could.

19,321. To many an individual it would be very satisfactory?—Yes. I cannot say that we have managed it in every institution; we have in some.

19,322. Miss Symons: But they are being modernised?—The younger ones were modernised some time ago. There was one lady who took up the special subject of corsets and went into that for a long time. I did not do that myself.

19,323. How many women are there on your Committee?—We have the co-opted members as well as the members of the Council. I think we have ten. Then the co-opted members have more time than the others.

19,324. Earl Russell: And with regard to the men, are they allowed their own underclothes. Do they have their own shirts and things of that sort?—We have not gone into the question of men's underclothing. We have to take the things step by step, but they have much prettier patterns to their shirts.

19,325. Chairman: On the general question of clothing, one is glad to notice that you recognise the importance of that element in the self-respect of the patients?—(Mr. Sidney): Yes.

19,326. There is no doubt that it has a mental effect on men as well as on women; it is not a matter of sex entirely?—Particular attention has been paid to that during the last two or three years.

19,327. That helps further to get rid of the idea of the institutional aspect?—Yes.

19,328. You want them to remain individuals and not merely numbers?—(Mrs. Dunn Gardner): Yes, we try to.

19,329. Of course in all this you have to consider expense, Mr. Sidney, and perhaps it is as well that one should remember what a very large household you have to attend to. You bring out a very striking figure here: if you spend a penny a week on each patient does it represent over £4,000, a year?—Yes.

19,330. So that a recommendation that resulted even in London alone in one penny addition expenditure per patient per week would mean £4,000 a year?—Yes.

19,331. It is a very striking figure; therefore you have to look closely to your financial side?—Of course that is so.

19,332. Then on the matter of actual medical treatment, which is a very important thing, have you been able to increase the number of your medical officers in your mental hospitals of late?—Yes, we have increased them from seven to eight.

19,333. In the institutions with 2,000 or more patients, do you allow eight assistant medical officers in addition to the medical superintendent?—Yes.

19,334. And do you give every inducement to your young medical officers to qualify specially in psychological medicine?—Yes.

19,335. Have you lectures arranged for them?—Yes.

19,336. And they are given at the Maudsley Hospital?—Yes.

19,337. Then do you give study leave to your medical officers?—In addition to their going to Maudsley hospital?

19,338. Yes?—We do.

19,339. Or is that all done at Maudsley—do they get their leave for the purpose of studying at Maudsley?—(Mrs. Dunn Gardner) They have three months at Maudsley. (Mr. Sidney) They have a separate course.

19,340. Mr. Snell: Do they get any experience of treatment on the continent?—No.

19,341. Chairman: Do I take it that their leave is given to them to go to Maudsley where they are, so to speak, seconded for the time being?—Yes.

19,342. They get the advantage of seeing this very up-to-date establishment with its pathological laboratories, and so on?—Yes. (Mrs. Dunn Gardner): Four assistant medical officers are always at Maudsley now.

19,343. Each having a three months' course?—Yes.

19,344. And these are assistant medical officers drawn from your different institutions?—Yes.

19,345. And that enables them to qualify for the diploma in psychological medicine?—Yes.

19,346. Then, as we know, you have a very valuable pathological laboratory in connection with your mental hospitals at Maudsley under the directorship of Dr. Golla, formerly under the directorship of Sir Frederick Mott?—Yes.

19,347. Sir David Drummond: Do you anticipate that before long you will insist upon the medical officers holding the diploma?—(Mr. Sidney): We are making a point of that now when the question of promotion comes up.

19,348. That is to say you are promoting men specially who have obtained the psychological diploma?—Yes.

19,349. But you do not make it essential for admission to the service?—No, we could not do that, because they come in very young, they take the D.P.M. a year or two after they come in.

19,350. Chairman: But they recognise that the obtaining of the diploma is a passport to promotion?—That is so now. For the last year or two we have insisted upon that. We have impressed upon them the fact that we do not promote people who have not got the D.P.M., to a certain rank.

19,351. Then the pathological laboratory at Maudsley is really a central laboratory to which all the mental hospitals under your charge can resort for aid?—Yes.

19,352. In addition to that, each one has its own laboratory on a less elaborate scale?—We have just set them up; in some cases they have them and in some they have not. Now we are extending it so that every hospital has its own laboratory.

19,353. The central one is engaged in larger matters of research?—Yes. (Mrs. Dunn Gardner): Dr. Golla supervises the local ones as well as the big one at Maudsley, and often suggests work that the young medical officers shall do in their local laboratories. (Mr. Sidney): It prevents overlapping.

19,354. Now will you tell us a little about your experience in the matter of nurses. Has your County Council any view upon the desirability of the employment of female nurses on the male side of institutions—has that been before your Council, Mr. Sidney?—Yes, we are considering it.

19,355. Earl Russell: You have not got any female nurses on the male side, have you, at present?—(Mrs. Dunn Gardner): The difficulty in getting female nurses is so very much greater than the difficulty in getting male nurses that I do not think we should be likely for some time at any rate to make a change. We have found the greatest difficulty in getting suitable female nurses.

19,356. Mr. Snell: Have you arrived at any conclusion, supposing they were available, as to the advisability or otherwise of having female nurses on the male side?—(Mr. Sidney): In some of the hospital infirmaries the male patients are nursed by women already. (Mrs. Dunn Gardner): During the war we did that largely.

19,357. Sir David Drummond: That is only the infirmary ward?—(Mr. Sidney): Yes, only the infirmary ward; we have not thought of the others.

10 July, 1925.]

The Hon. WILLIAM SIDNEY, J.P., and
Mrs. ROSE DUNN GARDNER, J.P.

[Continued.]

Of course, the Maudsley staff are women, but you are alluding to the mental hospitals.

19,358. Chairman: Yes, because we have had some interesting evidence on the subject; and it has been thought by some that the nursing by women in the majority of cases had itself a therapeutic value and rather tended to induce the male patients to behave better and show more restraint. But you are not in a position to give us evidence about that?—No. There was a nursing conference the other day at which the matter was discussed.

19,359. You tell us that you have a great difficulty in getting an adequate supply of women nurses?—(Mrs. Dunn Gardner): Yes.

19,360. What is the reason of that, do you think?—This is only my own view, not the view of the London County Council. I think we rather forget that a mental hospital is not the same as another hospital, and very many wards of the mental hospitals are really not hospital wards at all. We expect all our female nurses to pass a very difficult examination now.

19,361. Earl Russell: Before you appoint them at all?—No, we appoint them, but it is known in quite a short time by those who have left school that they will be obliged to attend lectures and to pass a very stiff examination. A great many of the young women do not mind that at all, those who are very intelligent, and do it very well indeed. But there is another type of nurse who has the greatest difficulty in expressing herself on paper, and is not really capable of taking in hand subjects that she has to study, but I think some of those nurses are really those who most add to the happiness of the patients; the motherly, kindly, infinitely patient woman who treats her patients more as an ordinary nurse.

19,362. A sort of French "bonne" type?—Certainly who, if we go on and insist upon examinations will be excluded altogether. I think it is essential that we should have as highly trained nurses as we can get; but I think if we put those highly trained nurses into chronic wards where there is no true nursing to be done, but kindness, of course, and looking after very disagreeable cases, there is not enough to occupy the mind of those people, and they will not stop with us. We are by the examination cutting out the kind of women we got in the past.

Earl Russell: I think that is a very significant statement.

19,363. Sir David Drummond: Have you any observation to make on the question of the kind of examination which the nurses you are speaking of are submitted to—do you think it is too stiff?—I do not think it is too stiff for those who are going to be head nurses in charge of wards, but I think it is too stiff for the women who are just going to keep the patients clean and be kind to them.

19,364. There are some of them for whom the examination has gone beyond the proper limits?—Yes. I think the Medico-Psychological book is a very difficult book, and if they really do know it, then they are not going to settle down to be a children's nurse to grown-up people.

19,365. Chairman: Personally, I would rather have a nurse who was 90 per cent. kind than one who was 90 per cent. efficient in passing an examination?—Yes.

19,366. Mr. Snell: Are you suggesting there should be two grades of technical efficiency?—That is what I am suggesting myself. (Mr. Sidney): That is proposed by the Departmental Committee on Mental Nursing.

Earl Russell: That is the best-reasoned statement we have had yet from a nursing point of view.

19,367. Chairman: It is an admirable statement; but the fact remains, whether it is due to the conditions of service or not, you do find a difficulty in getting a supply of women nurses?—(Mr. Sidney): Very great.

19,368. Can you suggest any means by which women could be attracted? Is it a question of pay or the hours of work?—Not hours of work, because we have reduced it in London to 48 hours only.

19,369. Have you improved the conditions of your nurses?—Yes. I do not think the conditions of service are a deterrent. I think a considerable number leave just on the eve of examination.

19,370. Mr. Snell: Do you retire them on marriage?—Yes, they have to go if they are married.

19,371. That is a reason, I suppose?

19,372. Sir David Drummond: Do you only promote nurses if they have passed the examination?—(Mrs. Dunn Gardner): Practically they are promoted without being given the rank, as it were, because you must carry on your institution. They are made staff nurses and charge nurses, but they are not on the permanent staff of staff nurses and charge nurses. If anybody came who had passed, she would be promoted above the others.

19,373. Chairman: Now you have considered, I see, the question of whether the Board of Control should be authorised to set up and enforce standards in the matter of diets, clothing, and so on. At present as we know, they visit and inspect and make recommendations. Has the County Council any view as to whether a more effective sanction should be placed in the hands of the Board of Control enabling them to enforce these matters on a standard basis?—(Mr. Sidney): I think it is better to leave it to persuasion or recommendation. If you have the power of enforcing, it is a question of money; you force expenditure on a publicly elected body.

19,374. Of course you do not want, either, to remove the initiative from the local authority?—No. I should have thought it was sufficient if they recommended; I should think it gradually raises the standard.

19,375. Earl Russell: Of course it is always the backward local authorities who want stimulating, but preferably, no doubt, without force?—Preferably without force, I think, unless the central authority is going to find the money. It is interfering with the principles of local self-government, I should have thought.

19,376. Chairman: Now, I think, almost the last topic on which we should ask your views is the question of the size of the hospitals, and the position of the medical superintendents. Of course the size of hospitals is related to the question of the cost of hospitals, is it not?—Very largely.

19,377. And you have, I know, under your charge institutions of a very large size, 2,000 and upwards?—Yes.

19,378. There is a feeling that an asylum can be too large for effective administration?—Certainly.

19,379. On the other hand, I suppose that the smaller the institution, the greater the cost per head necessarily?—Necessarily, yes.

Earl Russell: That would not apply below 1,000, I suppose?

19,380. Chairman: Probably not. I should qualify that by saying 'within limits,' of course. It has been suggested that 1,000 ought to be the limit of accommodation, but you have many in excess of that number. Have you any view as to the future of such institutions?—(Mrs. Dunn Gardner): We are not contemplating building another one. (Mr. Sidney): I do not think it is likely that the County of London as at present constituted will require another one. We are finishing the West Park, which is the last one.

19,381. Why do you think there will not be any more?—The population in the County of London is falling, and the number of beds applied for last year fell by 300.

19,382. Earl Russell: So you have at last got to the top of your curve?—I think so, and we have been able to bring in all our out-county patients. We have very few boarded out, about 300. There were 800 or 900.

19,383. Chairman: But if you were not the inheritors of a past system, would you advocate institutions on so large a scale as those you have

10 July, 1925.]

The Hon. WILLIAM SIDNEY, J.P., and
Mrs. ROSE DUNN GARDNER, J.P.

[Continued.]

just now, apart from the financial aspect of it?—I do not think 2,000 is too large for a medical superintendent to keep proper supervision over.

19,384. The objection that has been taken, and to which you allude here, is that the medical superintendent in charge of such an institution cannot possibly know his individual patients, and also must have the distraction of a great deal of administrative work?—Yes. I do not think it is possible even with those 1,000 cases for a medical superintendent to know every case; but if he is properly served by his medical officers it is not necessary that he should know every case.

19,385. After all, the medical superintendent is the person who is primarily concerned with the detention and the discharge of the patient; he is actually responsible for the persons under his charge. Is it desirable that he should be a person who must rely entirely upon his subordinates for information as to the cases, when the fate of those patients is in his hands?—(Mrs. Dunn Gardner): He does not at all depend entirely upon his subordinates. He constantly visits the wards himself; he sees the subordinates every morning, and in the cases where the subordinates feel a little doubtful, the medical superintendent looks into them.

19,386. I put it a little too strongly. Let me put it in this way, that he depends upon his assistants to direct his attention to any particular cases?—He goes through the wards; he spends a good deal of time in his wards. (Mr. Sidney): I was very much astonished by the knowledge of the medical superintendent of the individual cases; I think it is quite wonderful. They seem to me to know all the cases.

19,387. Of course a great many of the cases he may not require to know but, on the other hand, the cases which cause most anxiety, of which there may be quite a large number, and which require consideration and reconsideration from time to time, ought to be under the eye of the medical superintendent, ought they not?—I think they are more or less. I suppose it is impossible for them to be entirely under the eye of one man.

19,388. We have had a good deal of evidence to the effect that the medical superintendent is seldom seen in the wards, and when he is seen he is there for so short a time that he has not much opportunity of studying individual cases. Of course it may vary in different institutions, but we have had a considerable body of evidence to that effect? If it was necessary for the medical superintendent to know every case you would have to have a very small asylum of only 200 or 300 virtually.

19,389. Then it is inseparable from the idea of a large institution that the medical superintendent must, to some extent, rely upon his subordinates for his attention to be directed to particular cases?—That is so.

19,390. Have you any view upon the question of the separation of the medical superintendent's medical duties from administration?—I do not think it is possible to separate them, they are so intermixed. I think he must have the control of everything.

19,391. We have heard all the pros and cons on that subject more or less, Mr. Sidney.

19,392. Mr. Snell: Do you hold the medical superintendent responsible for the administration of the place also?—Yes.

19,393. And that every report which comes to you must be on his responsibility; no subordinate officer reports directly to the Committee?—The medical superintendent is the supreme officer.

19,394. Earl Russell: There is this point on that, and on his administration. Would you regard the medical superintendent as the man to be praised or blamed if the asylum was run economically or non-economically?—I think so, yes; I think he takes the responsibility for everything.

19,395. Of course that does mean that he would have to give his whole time and his whole thought to administration; he cannot depute it to somebody else?—No.

19,396. Mr. Snell: He becomes an administrator rather than a mental specialist?—He is both; I think he must be both.

19,397. Earl Russell: Suppose that your beef or your butter or eggs were badly bought at a higher price than they should be, and sometimes the qualities were not good, would you hold him responsible for that?—No, that would be the stores department. That is centralised now. That was the case in old days.

19,398. He is free of that now?—He is quite free; the stores department supply everything.

19,399. The same remark would apply to clothing and that sort of thing?—Yes.

19,400. Sir David Drummond: About how many of the 2,000 patients do you suppose a medical superintendent can have any intimate knowledge of?—I think he has a general knowledge of all of them, and has an intimate knowledge of some.

19,401. Are you aware that no physician in this country in a general hospital deals with more than 40 or 50 patients, and, if he knows something about them, he does a great deal of work?—The medical superintendent cannot know every detail about them. He has got eight medical officers under him.

19,402. I know. I am speaking of the man who is the expert of the institution, whose knowledge is most valuable to the institution. He can only have an intimate knowledge of 40 or 50 at best?—(Mrs. Dunn Gardner): But he has the initial knowledge of the whole of them because it is he who has to see them in the first place; he sees them when they come in.

19,403. Earl Russell: He certainly has seen them at least once and probably more?—But he knows them quite intimately. (Mr. Sidney): I was very much struck by the medical superintendent's knowledge of the patients.

19,404. Chairman: If you go round with the medical superintendent you find him addressing a great many of them by name; but he has that difficulty that a man at the head of a large institution cannot have the same individual knowledge and must rely upon his subordinates to a considerable extent?—Yes, to a considerable extent.

19,405. In your later mental hospitals I gather that admission villas have been included where recent cases are dealt with?—Yes, and we are extending that.

19,406. That is to have a separate house or villa in which the newly arrived case is dealt with and not at once plunged into the asylum at large?—Yes, that is so. At Claybury and Colney Hatch we are building now.

19,407. And it gives an opportunity of classification, to which no doubt you attach importance?—Great importance, yes.

19,408. There was one matter Dr. Mapother referred to I think, either in evidence or in conversation with us, namely, that in London where you have a large number of institutions, you might distribute your patients among those institutions according to some system of classification. That is to say, you might devote one of your institutions to cases of one type and another to cases of another type, rather than having in each institution examples of all types?—(Mr. Sidney): What he calls a mixed population?

19,409. Yes. Whether you should have a population of one type, or whether you should have a mixed population in asylums, is an interesting question of policy to consider. Has the London County Council any views on that topic?—I think that at one time Banstead had chronic patients only, and that was not found to be successful.

19,410. Was it because the place became too depressing?—I think so. It is better from a medical

10 July, 1925.]

The Hon. WILLIAM SIDNEY, J.P., and
MRS. ROSE DUNN GARDNER, J.P.

[Continued.]

point of view, I think, to have all types of cases in each hospital because of course they vary very quickly. Sometimes a case is acute; sometimes it is not acute, and they are moved from ward to ward; you would have to move cases from one institution to another, which would be very inconvenient.

19,411. I have put to you, I think, all the matters arising in your précis. We are greatly indebted to the London County Council and to yourselves for coming here to-day. We have had most useful evidence from you.—Thank you for the way in which you have received us.

(The witnesses withdrew.)

(Adjourned to to-morrow at 10.30 o'clock.)

5, OLD PALACE YARD,
WESTMINSTER, S.W.1.

THIRTY-SEVENTH DAY.

Saturday, 11th July, 1925.

MEMBERS PRESENT :

THE RIGHT HON. H. P. MACMILLAN, K.C. (Chairman).

SIR ERNEST HILEY, K.B.E.

SIR DAVID DRUMMOND, C.B.E., M.D.

MR. W. A. JOWITT, K.C.

MR. NATHANIEL MICKLEM, K.C.

MR. H. SNELL, M.P.

MRS. C. J. MATHEW.

MISS MADELEINE SYMONS.

MR. P. BARTER (Secretary).

MR. W. FAIRLEY (Assistant Secretary).

Sir LEWIS BEARD, called and examined.

19,412. Chairman: We have with us this morning Sir Lewis Beard, Town Clerk of Blackburn, who is also Chairman of the Law Committee of the Association of Municipal Corporations, a Member of the Lancashire Asylums Board, and Vice-Chairman of the Visiting Committee of the Lancaster Mental Hospital.

Sir Lewis, you are good enough to attend this morning for the purpose of giving us the views of your Association, I take it?—If you please.

19,413. And the first topic to which you propose to refer is the matter of accommodation?—Yes.

19,414. You have a few interesting statistics which I think we might have from you?—These figures are official, I understand, and have been furnished to me by the Board of Control.

19,415. You might give us the figures which indicate the extent of the accommodation required and the growing demand upon accommodation?—The net yearly increase of patients requiring accommodation for the four years 1920 to 1923 was 3,565. The present vacant bed space in mental hospitals is 4,754. Taking those figures together it is quite evident that the demand is rapidly overtaking the supply.

19,416. May I ask, are these the figures for the whole of England? Do they include London?—I understand so.

19,417. Now if the demand will so shortly overtake the supply, what is the view of your Association as to how that problem is to be met?—The view of my Association is that at the present time it is impossible to deal with the problem in the way which of course would be indicated under the ordinary normal conditions, that is, by increasing the number of mental hospitals, or adding to the existing mental hospitals, because the cost of building is prohibitive. Not only that, but the cost of raising money is very high, and this would saddle the local authorities with an enormous debt which would I think utterly cripple their resources at the present time, conjoined with the other demands which they have upon them principally in connection with housing. Further than that, it would withdraw from housing a great deal of enterprise, money, labour, and material which is urgently needed there; and, taking the two demands together, I think the whole thing would break down.

19,418. What solution has occurred to your Association for this dilemma?—It is only a palliative, if they get over this temporary difficulty, until conditions are more favourable for building. Ultimately no doubt, if this increase goes on, we shall have to build; but at the moment the information in our possession shows that at many institutions which are maintained by the guardians there is vacant accommodation, which is not required for ordinary purposes, and which is quite suitable with a little fitting, and so forth, for this purpose, and subject to proper supervision, this might be used.

11 July, 1925.]

Sir LEWIS BEARD.

[Continued.]

19,419. Do you contemplate, Sir Lewis, that the strain upon the accommodation might be relieved in this way: in the asylums at present there are a large number of people who are really just in a chronic state, but whose physical and mental powers are abating simultaneously?—Certainly.

19,420. These people only require shelter and comfort until they die?—That is so.

19,421. And if these people were removed from the asylums to Poor Law institutions, accommodation would be rendered vacant and available for the really insane persons requiring treatment?—Yes.

19,422. It is an interesting aspect of the problem, because at present I take it that the mental hospitals throughout the country have a large permanent population of aged and demented persons?—I believe that is so. I have not any statistics, but from my own experience I know it is so in the case of Lancashire; and from general information, I get the impression that there are a great number of these people who are really occupying places which are more suitable for the general welfare of persons who require treatment. Of course there is a very highly skilled and highly trained staff at the mental hospitals, and their energies are really wasted in putting to bed poor old people who can do nothing but drowse away their time until the end comes.

19,423. Is it the practice at present where a person in a Poor Law institution becomes senile and certifiable, simply to have him removed to a mental hospital?—I am afraid I could not say what the general practice is.

19,424. I was wondering how these old people find their way to the mental hospital?—They come, I think, principally through the medium of the Poor Law administration. Many of them have been there a long time.

19,425. Your view would be that these people should not have been transferred from the Poor Law institution merely because they have become senile, but that they should rather be retained there?—Under present circumstances certainly they should be retained there. Whether at the time of their removal pressure upon the accommodation was so great, I do not know. There was at one time a strong inducement offered to the guardians to send their patients to the mental hospitals, in the shape of a grant which was commonly known as the 6s. grant; I think it was a 4s. grant to begin with; it became 6s. afterwards. At that time it was evidently the policy of Parliament, it was the desire of the Government to encourage that these people should all go into the mental hospitals as far as possible. I think experience has shown that that has been rather indiscriminately used.

19,426. Then co-incidentally with the anticipated overcrowding of the mental hospitals, you have a depletion of the Poor Law institutions and vacant accommodation there?—There is such accommodation I am assured by those who know. I have no personal knowledge of it.

19,427. We have had evidence from other witnesses that there is a good deal of accommodation in the Poor Law institutions. Have you also this in view—indeed you have already hinted at it—that you have a highly paid and skilled staff in the mental hospitals whose duty is to consider the cases of the patients, and to apply curative treatment to them, and that the time of such persons is largely diverted by the menial duties of attending to patients who cannot hope to be cured?—That is so.

19,428. I wonder if it is possible to get any statistics as to the extent to which the population of our mental hospitals consists of persons of that class?—I think there is no doubt that if the Commission thought proper to send round a questionnaire on that subject to selected institutions, they would get a large amount of valuable information.

19,429. Have you thought of the other alternative, and that is the aggregation of cases of that sort, cases of senile decay, in a single separate institution—not a Poor Law institution necessarily?—No, because one's mind was directed rather to meeting the immediate deficiency in the accommodation.

19,430. Rather than the question of additional accommodation?—Yes.

19,431. Your province is Lancashire, but I am thinking of the London problem, where there are a large number of institutions in one hand, whether it would be desirable to allocate one institution to one type, and another institution to another type, i.e., classify by institutions rather than within the institutions?—I have not thought of that. Of course, what I was dealing with was how we were to find accommodation for this growing population.

19,432. And your suggestion is that the practical solution, under the present economic conditions, is rather to remove some of the present resident population, and to release space for those who are the proper residents in mental hospitals?—That is it precisely.

19,433. And do you think that in that way a considerable amount of accommodation would be released?—I think so.

19,434. How do you think it would affect these old people themselves, not regarding them merely as pawns to be moved about, but looking at it from the point of view of their own welfare?—May I say that I am very desirous that the human side of this question should not be lost sight of. I do not think really it would affect them seriously. Of course, if there were any serious objection on anyone's part it would be taken into account; but I take it that the selection would be made by the medical staff who were alive to the circumstances of each case, and who would see that no case of hardship was brought about.

19,435. I notice that one of your suggestions points in that direction. You suggest that any arrangements made for the transfer of such cases should be in the hands of the medical superintendent of the mental hospital?—Yes.

19,436. And I suppose it would be necessary to see that this accommodation in the Poor Law institution was suitable, and that the patients would receive adequate attention and proper food and clothing, and so on?—Certainly.

19,437. Assuming that the Poor Law institution was approved for the purpose, you think that this would offer a solution of the immediate difficulty?—Yes. May I say, just following up what you were good enough to put to me with respect to individual hardship, it might very often be the means of mitigating the hardship which is now felt, which is that, owing to these institutions being so large, they are scattered about at great distances in order to command a sufficient area, and the relatives of the patients often have a long journey to take before they can visit them. If they could be removed to institutions which were nearer their own homes it would really be an alleviation to the relatives.

19,438. I wonder whether there is anything in this point: do you think that the relatives would prefer their aged parents, or whoever may be suffering in this way, to end their days rather in a Poor Law institution than in an institution for the insane?—I think your knowledge of human nature is equal to mine.

19,439. It does occur to one that to visit one of these old people in a Poor Law institution, might be a pleasanter experience than visiting them in an asylum?—I think the Poor Law institutions vary very much. I have seen some, and some of them are models; others are not quite so excellent, but they do vary very much, and that matter would be taken into consideration. But I think the question of distance, the expense of visiting, is a real question with many people.

11 July, 1925.]

Sir LEWIS BEARD.

[Continued.]

19,440. It does seem a little hard that an old person who is not suffering from any mental disorder, but is merely suffering from decline of mental powers, should be relegated to an institution for the insane?—Quite.

19,441. I can imagine that that would hurt the feelings of some people?—I think, if I may say so, that what is commonly referred to as the pauper taint, is not nearly so much felt by any of these people as the lunacy taint.

19,442. That was really in my mind?—Yes. My experience, and it is backed up by that of others, is that to go to an asylum puts a far blacker mark against a person than going to the workhouse.

Sir David Drummond: Has Sir Lewis contemplated the fact that it has been proposed, in order to augment the available accommodation for ordinary cases in our general hospitals, to utilise these Poor Law institutions, not for mental cases, but for cases of ordinary disease? That is one of the suggestions. There is a great shortage of beds in our general hospitals throughout the country. We have long waiting lists, and it has been suggested that some of our Poor Law institutions with available accommodation should be utilised for that purpose.

19,443. Chairman: There might be a competition for this vacant space by the mental hospitals on the one hand, and by the general hospitals on the other hand. Has that aspect of it occurred to you?—No, it had not, and I am not quite sure whether we are talking about the same vacant space. What I meant to suggest here was the vacant space in what might be called the ordinary wards of the workhouse.

19,444. Not the infirmary wards?—Not the infirmary space.

19,445. The residential wards?—Yes, because the point I want to make is that these cases, which I am suggesting might be transferred, are cases which are really not infirmary cases, not cases which require any regular medical supervision or treatment, but are merely to be waited upon, fed, and put to bed, and so forth.

19,446. Just like the old soul who sits in an arm-chair in a cottage and dodders away the remaining years of her life?—Precisely. Perhaps I might quote a case that I happened to come across where a man was brought up for certification on the ground that he was insane, and the justice before whom the case was brought said "I will visit this man." He found he was an old farmer, as you say, doddering about on his farm and his family were getting a little tired of him, but there was really no reason for sending him to an asylum; but if it had not been that that particular justice took a special interest in the case, he might have been sent to an asylum. And there are many cases which would become simply of that type.

Sir David Drummond: Are you not attaching too much importance to the senile phase of it? There are a great many chronic cases, but still the form of insanity is incurable, that are on all fours with the senile cases.

19,447. Chairman: I appreciate that, Sir David. There is, of course, the senile case which we have been specially dealing with, and of which there is a considerable proportion in our mental hospitals as we have seen from our visits; but there is another type, namely, the person who, though not suffering from senility, is suffering from some chronic or harmless form of insanity which is recognised as practically incurable. Would you contemplate the transference of that class also to the Poor Law institution?—I am afraid I could not give an opinion on that. It would be all subject to the discretion of the medical superintendent.

19,448. I think we may sum up your view in this sense, that it is not confined necessarily to the senile case, but that accommodation might be released in our mental hospitals by a review of the cases there, and the selection of a substantial number of those cases as appropriate for return to, or admission to, the Poor Law institution, where they would receive all that they require; and their room would be available for proper inmates of a mental hospital?—That it so.

19,449. Mr. Jowitt: May I just ask this: has it occurred to you that the present residents in the Poor Law institutions might dislike very much their new influx of visitors—I mean they might not like to have these people whose mental powers, at any rate, were obviously defective, associating with them?—My suggestion is not that they should be put into the common rooms with the others. There are many rooms which are empty.

19,450. You would keep them quite separate?—Yes, because I think they must always be regarded as mental patients, and there might conceivably—I do not know, I am not a medical man—be a relapse which would require their being returned.

19,451. Mr. Micklem: Have you any statistics of the accommodation vacant in the workhouses?—No, I have not.

Mr. Jowitt: It is a question not of beds; it is a question of wards under these hypotheses.

Chairman: Yes. It means also dormitory accommodation, but the accommodation is generally measured in terms of beds.

Mr. Jowitt: Unless you can clear a ward you can do nothing at all.

19,452. Chairman: No. We have had some evidence that there is a considerable amount of vacant space in Poor Law institutions which is not taken advantage of just now; and I can see the motive you have indicated for the transference of those cases from the Poor Law authority to the mental hospital, if there is a pecuniary inducement?—Yes.

19,453. We recognise the value of your suggestion upon that point. We may pass now to the treatment of the incipient voluntary case without certification. What is the view of the Association of Municipal Corporations on that topic?—They support the principle of the Mental Treatment Bill, but I must guard myself there, it is the principle they support; they might have many amendments of detail to suggest as to the machinery, but they are strongly of opinion that there ought to be provision made for the treatment of incipient cases without certification.

19,454. In that connection has your Association considered a suggestion that has been urged upon us from many quarters, that in connection with the treatment of cases before certification or in the hope of avoiding certification, there should be some intermediate observation institution or ward, where cases might be under observation for a period on some provisional or temporary order, during which the patient might be examined and possibly recover if the case is transitory, and so be discharged, or possibly be relegated ultimately to certification in a mental hospital? This conception of an intermediate stage has been advocated before us as a possible solution of many difficulties?—No. My Association has not considered that question. I may say that we have endeavoured in this evidence to avoid in any way trenching upon what might be called medical grounds, or, assuming to ourselves knowledge which we did not possess.

19,455. I appreciate your modesty, Sir Lewis, but this has a practical bearing because it might involve the provision of additional accommodation; and it has been suggested that there is a debit and credit side in this consideration, that you might again get some relief for the mental hospital accommodation, if you had an intermediate institution, where cases could be considered and observed for a period, with the consequence that many of them might recover and never find their way to a mental hospital at all. It might involve the provision of additional accommodation?—Yes.

19,456. But it might be accommodation which would be economic in this sense, that it would obviate the construction of large new mental hospitals, because it might diminish the number of those resorting ultimately to mental hospitals?—Yes.

11 July, 1925.]

Sir LEWIS BEARD.

[Continued.]

19,457. That topic has not been before you. I am looking at it from the purely financial point of view just now?—No, that suggestion has not been before the Association.

19,458. It is one that has some attractions from the point of view of avoiding difficulties in the way of certifying doubtful cases, by providing an interim period of observation?—Quite. Speaking for myself, if I might for a moment, it is a point that has great attractions for me, and I may say that I hope you will stop me if I am going beyond what I ought to say.

19,459. I think your personal view would be interesting to us. We quite understand you are not speaking for the moment on behalf of your Association?—If I might for a moment speak in that capacity, Mr. Chairman, I have been very much impressed with the ignorance that prevails with regard to the nature of mental disease. I do not mean from a medical point of view particularly, but as to the many aspects of mental disease which force themselves even upon a layman who has anything to do with its administration, and the horror which many people have of seeing their relatives confined to an asylum as we call it now, the fear that possesses them as to the meaning of this taint which they have discovered. They are so afraid of it that they will not tackle it properly.

19,460. They prefer to shut their eyes to it as long as they possibly can?—That is exactly what it amounts to. It is the same with regard to tuberculosis. We have in Blackburn (if I may speak for a moment of that town), started health work in the nature of health education, trying to teach the people what health means, that it does not mean simply waiting till they are ill and sending for the doctor, but living healthy lives so as to avoid the incidence of disease. We have contemplated including lectures and propaganda on mental health, but we have not yet been able to do that successfully; it is very difficult to do, but it may be within the knowledge of the Commission, that a deputation of medical officers of health recently waited upon Mr. Neville Chamberlain on the very subject of educating the public in matters of health, and that he gave them a very favourable reply. It did occur to me, as one who has thought a great deal about this thing, and discussed it with medical officers and others, whether the Commission would consider the desirability of recommending that some effort should be made to spread among the public a better knowledge of what insanity means, and the possibility of its treatment. The public do not know as a rule that many cases of insanity are curable, that many cases recover. They regard the lunatic as a person apt to break out into violence without warning, and as being something apart from human nature almost. I do think that if anything could be done to spread better knowledge of the subject, it would be an immense benefit.

19,461. That is a most interesting suggestion, Sir Lewis. I wonder if you have considered whether powers should be given to local authorities to spend money upon the propaganda in these health matters, or, at any rate, upon instruction in health matters?—Certainly.

19,462. Take this effort you are making just now in Blackburn, how is that financed—is that voluntary effort entirely?—No, we are putting it upon the rates without sanction.

19,463. I admire your courage, if I may say so; you regard that as public health administration?—We do.

19,464. But while you are doing it without sanction perhaps you would prefer that sanction should be given, if possible?—It would give us a much freer hand, if we felt that we had not only the sanction but the encouragement which sanction implies. We can only do a little bit in our corner.

19,465. On this topic of treatment without certification which we were discussing, I see you are in favour of such cases being under the control of the present lunacy authorities, rather than under the control of the ordinary local authority, I gather?—Well, that is a difficult question, but it would require a great deal of re-adjustment and legislation to transfer it.

19,466. The reason why I am raising the point with you is this—it really arises out of what you have been speaking of recently. These health lectures that you speak of, and this propaganda with the object of informing the public mind on insanity, as well as other ailments, would be in the hands of the local authority, and the expense of it would be charged to the public health rate?—Yes.

19,467. On the other hand, this new method of treatment which is proposed without certification for incipient cases, you suggest should be in the hands of the existing lunacy authorities. Has it occurred to you to consider whether, in order to dissociate as far as possible in the public mind the idea that these incipient cases are really cases of insanity, they should be dealt with by the public health authority under the Minister of Health, in the same way, for example, as tuberculosis is now dealt with, or venereal diseases? I want to know whether you favour the idea of having a new branch of public health dealing with incipient cases of insanity, or would you rather contemplate an extension of the existing lunacy organisation. That is a practical problem; it could be dealt with in two ways, either independently of the lunacy authorities or in association with them. I gather your Association thinks it would be better to use the existing lunacy organisation?—I do not think we have applied our minds to that, and, as a matter of fact, this suggestion I have made now is not my Association's suggestion.

19,468. I follow. But the point you put to me is a very interesting one, if I may say so, and a very difficult one; but I would like to remind you that tuberculosis is not in the hands of the health authorities, but of the county councils and county borough councils, and so is venereal disease; and although no doubt in a county borough it does not matter because we are all one authority, it would make a difference to the county as to the authority to be entrusted with it. Generally speaking, where a matter requires large institutional treatment it goes into the hands of the large authorities as a matter of convenience of administration: therefore the county councils would have to continue, I think, the mental hospital authorities; but whether the actual work that I have suggested should be in their hands, or in the hands of the health authorities, I think is a difficult question, and I should like further time to consider it. But there is no reason why it should not be in the hands of the Ministry of Health; it should be in the hands of the Ministry of Health. Now, of course, the whole question of mental hospitals is subject to the general control of the Ministry of Health. The Board of Control is a branch of the Ministry of Health technically.

19,469. It has an independent jurisdiction though?—Yes, but the Ministry of Health is responsible to Parliament for it.

19,470. And one can see a drawback from the administrative point of view of having two authorities in charge of one department, because it might lead to duplication, where you have a staff of skilled persons already at work on this subject; and there is no real distinction between the incipient case and the confirmed case in one sense—it is the same illness in different phases. However, we cannot pursue that topic, because, as you say, you are not speaking for your Association on it; but your Association's view is that this matter of the treatment of incipient cases should be under the control of the present lunacy authorities?—So far as they have gone, they support the principle of the Bill. Whether when they come to close quarters with it, which they have not yet

11 July, 1925.]

Sir LEWIS BEARD.

[Continued.]

done, they will recommend that the power should be given to the health authorities, I do not know.

19,471. Then passing to the visiting committee which is at present really the body in charge of these institutions, I notice that you propose that its name should be changed to that of Mental Hospital Committee?—Yes. I am not wedded particularly to the form of the name, but I think the word "visiting" does mischief.

19,472. There is a great deal in a name, of course?—Very often.

19,473. And the name suggests that these are more or less transient persons who go from time to time and look round and go away again. In point of fact they are the persons by statute really responsible?—Not altogether, because the statute itself gives some duties to the medical superintendent if I am not mistaken, and I do not want to interfere with that; but in practice they are responsible for finance and administration.

19,474. They are more than visitors, in short?—Oh yes, a great deal more.

19,475. They are, so far as the local authority is concerned, the managers on behalf of the local authority, and entrusted with powers which are much larger than mere visiting powers?—Yes, but there again, if I might interpose for a moment, the powers are given by the statute to any two or any three members of a visiting committee, and it is curious that it is not necessary for the committee to meet for these powers to be exercised. It is more than the name, really the substance is there. I mean under certain circumstances the three members of the visiting committee—in fact I think under any circumstances three members of the visiting committee may discharge a patient.

19,476. Against the wishes of the medical superintendent?—Quite.

19,477. Two can do it with his concurrence?—Yes. I venture to suggest that is not really the way things should be administered. There should be a corporate responsibility for the exercise of any duty. If it is thought that a patient should be discharged, when the medical superintendent certifies him "You are recovered," then let them say so, let it be automatic on certificate of the superintendent. But if the committee is to exercise jurisdiction and take responsibility, it should be at a meeting properly called and with due deliberation.

19,478. You object to what one may call the apparently casual character of the machinery?—Two members of the committee act; the medical superintendent says "I think so and so might be discharged" and they sign a certificate, and they sign it simply on his recommendation. Really he takes the responsibility, then let him take it.

19,479. But if the visiting committee is to function, you think it should function with more responsibility and in a corporate capacity?—In a corporate capacity, and after everybody having had a chance of expressing his views.

19,480. Sir David Drummond: Do you approve of three members of a visiting committee, independent of the medical superintendent, being able to discharge a patient?—No, I do not approve of it.

19,481. Chairman: It is a curious provision of the statute; we have heard that it is not often exercised?—No. I know that in the case of the asylum with which I am connected, the practice is that the medical superintendent certifies A, B, C and D, and he certifies them to the full committee at a meeting, as recovered cases; thereupon an order is drawn up, or rather it is a printed form of order, and it is signed by three members of the committee.

19,482. There is no decision of the committee on the case, is there?—Yes, always.

19,483. The committee passes upon it?—The committee passes upon it, but it is purely formal. I mean to say the Chairman says "The medical superintendent has certified these patients recovered; is it your pleasure that they should be discharged?" They all hold up their hands, of course—I mean they are only too glad to discharge a patient.

19,484. Sir David Drummond: But they do not act independently of the superintendent?—I may say we act independently of the superintendent in other cases where the relatives or friends come and ask to have the patient released to them, a non-recovered patient. We have the power to discharge a patient to the custody of his relatives or friends. We get a report from the medical superintendent; if the medical superintendent recommends the discharge we always grant it; if not, we hear the patient's friends; they come before the committee, and they state their case, and they are questioned by members of the committee. They are told what the medical superintendent's report on the case is, and they are asked how they propose to deal with the difficulties which are suggested by that report, and then the committee weigh the matter up, and they decide one way or the other, but they decide on their own responsibility.

19,485. Chairman: This is diverging a little from your presence this morning as the representative of the Association, but I venture, having you here, to ask you this question as Vice-Chairman of the Visiting Committee of the Lancaster Mental Hospital and as a Member of the Lancashire Asylums Board. I can understand a case coming before your visiting committee with the medical superintendent's report in favour of discharge. Of course I can see that, very naturally, that is practically dealt with automatically?—Yes.

19,486. But does the visiting committee ever of its own initiative, in consequence of receiving letters from relatives or from the patient himself, set on foot enquiries, as to whether a case should be discharged?—Yes.

19,487. I mean not where it is put before you by the medical superintendent but where the enquiry initiates from the side of the visiting committee?—Certainly.

19,488. I would like to know how you do that because that is an important feature?—We have a rota of visitors, that is to say, in the interval between the monthly meetings of the visiting committee certain members of the committee visit the institution and they go through it.

19,489. I have no doubt you yourself have visited frequently?—Frequently, yes. The practice is this: if there is any case brought before the committee at the monthly meeting by relatives or friends which seems to have any substance in it, or indeed even if it has not, it is referred to the visitors for that month. They go into the case; they see the patient; they discuss it with the medical officer of the institution, and they make a report to the committee at the next meeting.

19,490. So that quite apart from the medical superintendent's normal applications for discharge, you do investigate cases on your own initiative?—Oh clearly.

19,491. Have you found instances in which you thought it proper to discharge cases which have been brought to your knowledge, apart from the medical superintendent's initiative?—Yes, not as overriding him in any sense, but it would be a question of the judgment of the committee as to the convenience and the probabilities of the case, based partly upon the medical superintendent's report as to the condition of the patient.

19,492. Yes, but the important feature at this stage is that you have found that there have been cases which have not been brought to your knowledge by the medical superintendent, but which, being brought to your knowledge from other sources, you have thought proper to discharge?—Yes.

19,493. Has that often happened?—No.

19,494. But it has in some cases?—It has happened.

19,495. Now may we come back to the recommendations of your Association. Passing to the question of certification I see you do not desire to deal with the question of the distinction between paupers and non-paupers. You have nothing to say upon that subject, I take it?—No.

11 July, 1925.]

Sir LEWIS BEARD.

[Continued.]

19,496. We have heard much about that from others. You draw attention to the different forms of procedure under which patients are certified, and find their way into the mental hospitals?—Yes.

19,497. Would you just give us the points to which you wish to allude in this connection?—In the first place, I should like to call the attention of the Commission to the fact that in consequence of recent legislation the distinction between a justice who is a judicial authority, and a justice who is not, has disappeared. I think I may put that broadly as a proposition.

19,498. In some cases, of course, the whole bench of justices have been appointed judicial authorities, and that obliterates any distinction?—And Parliament has sanctioned that practice, so that Parliament has gone back from the position that it originally took up, that there was to be a distinction between the justice who is a judicial authority, and another. However, that being the case, I think we must take it that all justices are to be considered as potentially empowered to exercise all these powers, and what I wanted to put before the Commission on behalf of my Association is this, without criticising anybody, that it is not right that the newest justice on the bench, without any experience of these cases at all, should have this very great power over the liberty of the subject. In the exercise of his ordinary judicial duties he has the advantage of sitting with a colleague, and he may sit on many occasions on the bench and hear cases dealt with before he ventures to take part in the jurisdiction of the bench itself. But with respect to lunacy he may simply have a relieving officer come to his office one morning and present him with a certificate and say "Will you sign this?" And apart from anything else, the man's inexperience will lead him to do what he is asked to do. He has no other judgment to guide him; he has an independent judgment to exercise. It appears to my Association that that is a state of things that ought not to be. In an ordinary case where a man is to be sent to gaol for six weeks, it takes two justices and a clerk and a hearing, before he is sent away. I am putting it perhaps rather strongly, but a man may be sent away to confinement for life without any of the formalities which are thought necessary in the case where a man has committed a crime.

19,499. Then you do favour the reversion to the idea of having justices appointed ad hoc for the purpose of administering this jurisdiction?—I am afraid there might be some inconveniences about it.

19,500. That is what I am going to follow up with you, but let us hear your view generally?—My view generally is that there should be a more stable jurisdiction in this matter. Here is the justice and he can do these things. That, of course, was the old state of things under the general law before the Summary Jurisdiction Acts. A justice sitting in his own room, as we have read in many works, simply exercised jurisdiction without any formality and without any publicity, without anything of that kind. At the present time all that is altered, and my Association suggests that the time has come when this jurisdiction, which has a very important effect upon the future of an individual, should be exercised under something like the safeguards which appertain in the case of other jurisdiction.

19,501. Of course it is a different jurisdiction, Sir Lewis, from the ordinary jurisdiction in criminal or petty civil matters, because it is a case in which the justice must to a very large extent depend upon expert evidence in the shape of a medical certificate. I mean he can weigh, no doubt, the value of the certificate, but he is not a competent judge in the same way as he is when he hears a case before him with general evidence, the value of which he is really in a position as a citizen to assess?—I appreciate that, if I may say so; but I would call attention to the fact that the question which the justice has to determine is whether the lunatic is a proper person to be detained. He has not got to decide whether he is a lunatic or not.

19,502. No; the medical question of his suffering from the disease of insanity is determined by the expert, namely, the doctor?—That is so.

19,503. But then the question of the suitability of the case for detention depends again upon the medical diagnosis, because a layman may see a patient in a state of mind when he thinks he is a fairly safe person, and there is no reason why he should be detained, but the medical man knows that such a person at other moments may be very dangerous to himself and to others. How is he to judge?—Of course he has got to judge to a large extent upon the medical evidence; but what I want to put forward is that the medical evidence is material on which the justice has to determine. The medical evidence as to whether he is insane or not has to be accepted, the conclusion has to be accepted. In the one case the medical man has to conclude as well as examine; in the other case he has to submit to the justice certain matters upon which he is to come to a conclusion. What I suggest is that this is such an important point, as to whether a man is to be detained or not, that there should be a more, what shall I say—a more formal method of dealing with it than there is now; that it should not be simply a question of a man in his own house, or in his own office, signing a certificate. I do not know how often it is resorted to, but it is perfectly open under the present law; a man may sign a certificate anywhere, and he need not even see the patient in many cases; but I suggest in all cases the patient should be seen, and that the matter should be dealt with formally, and the clerk to the justices should be present, not only in order that he may advise the justice as to what his jurisdiction is, but also that he may keep a record.

Mr. Micklem: He must be seen if it is one certificate.

19,504. Chairman: The pauper case must be seen; the private patient need not be, there being two certificates there?—That is so.

19,505. But you concur with a large body of evidence we have had, that in all cases the order of certification should be preceded by the justice actually seeing the patient?—Oh clearly, yes.

19,506. One always thinks of these things in practical terms, Sir Lewis; and if one were dealing with a case of that sort, however formally, with the clerk and so on in attendance, in the end of the day it would still be very difficult to get away from the medical evidence of the case. I am thinking of myself, as a layman with a patient brought to me with medical certificates of unsoundness of mind; it would be very difficult to judge on my responsibility whether that person needed to be detained or not; I could be very easily hoodwinked, if I may so put it, as a layman on a subject of that sort?—Possibly.

19,507. I think it is a very difficult jurisdiction for a justice, is it not?—It is a very difficult jurisdiction; that is why I desire to fence it round with safeguards.

Sir David Drummond: Do I understand that Sir Lewis suggests that the justice's clerk should be present in every case?

Chairman: Yes, he does.

19,508. Sir David Drummond: Do you think that is feasible?—Yes; I except in my evidence and my proof, cases of great urgency.

19,509. Chairman: The emergency certificate?—The emergency certificate. Then I suggest that the emergency certificate should not last for more than a certain time, it should be quite a short date certificate, and before that expires, then there should be the formal procedure.

19,510. Of course we all recognise there must be some means of dealing instantly with urgency cases, and you are not so concerned with them. You are thinking of what may be called the permanent sentence of detention?—And the emergency case at the present time ceases to be an emergency case as soon as the certificate is signed.

11 July, 1925.]

Sir LEWIS BEARD.

[Continued.]

19,511. How far would you carry this, Sir Lewis? It is manifest that you cannot convert the matter into an ordinary judicial investigation—I mean, to require that would be obviously undesirable, but how far would you wish additional formalities? You say the presence of a clerk is desirable who would be there to advise the justice?—Yes.

19,512. Secondly, he would be able to keep a record of the proceedings?—Yes.

19,513. Have you carried the matter further in your mind—have you considered the question of the proceedings being in public?—No, I do not think they should be in public.

19,514. But you do consider that the patient should always be there?—Yes.

19,515. Have you considered further whether relatives of the patient should be present?—I have not.

19,516. Or a representative of the patient? You may recall that in the case of the private patient provision is made for the attendance, if desired, of someone who represents the patient?—I think there might be (I have not any instructions on this point) power in the justice, if he thought fit, to adjourn the case and send for the relatives, but what I rather had in mind was this: at the present time the whole thing is too apt to become a mere formality. Now I think the attention of the justice should be drawn to the fact that he is exercising a jurisdiction, and that the points are so-and-so, and so-and-so. Then on the question which is the real question for him to decide, whether the case is one for permanent detention or not, there I think it would be well to have a trained mind like that of the clerk, perusing the certificate “On this certificate had you not better ask the doctor whether this case could not be dealt with without permanent detention?”

19,517. On that do you propose the doctor should be present?—If the justice requires him, if he is not satisfied with the certificate.

19,518. That he should be at liberty to call for the doctor's attendance?—Yes.

19,519. Then you further suggest that he should be entitled to call for the attendance of the relatives or guardian, if there be any available, to inform his mind further on the circumstances of the case?—I think if he is not fully satisfied, he must either call for further evidence or discharge the certificate.

19,520. Mr. Micklem: In the ordinary case of a magistrate making an order does not he, in fact, see the doctor as well as the relieving officer?—I am afraid I cannot answer that question.

19,521. I mean, I have a very small experience, but I should have thought, speaking generally, the justice of the peace would never have made an order without consulting the doctor?—That may very well be so, and I am not disputing it for a moment. What I am venturing to suggest is I am looking at the Act of Parliament and the possibilities of the Act of Parliament, and it seems to me that the possibilities are rather serious. The procedure is unnecessarily loose, and I want it tightened up. Possibly what you have suggested is the normal procedure, and what one rather wants is to make it the normal procedure, but while at the present time it may be the normal procedure it is not the universal procedure, and it is not necessarily the procedure under the Act.

Mr. Micklem: But I should have thought the justices found this a very difficult jurisdiction to exercise, and that almost always, if not quite always, they saw the doctor and made every possible enquiry before making an order.

Chairman: I am afraid not, Mr. Micklem. We have had evidence of cases being certified, simply on being brought in a taxicab to the justice's house.

Mr. Micklem: They were raving cases.

19,522. Sir Ernest Hiley: Do you suggest that the patient should be present at every stage of this enquiry?—Not necessarily. I think the justice certainly ought to see him, but it would be for the justice to decide whether he wanted to see him all the time.

19,523. Chairman: Now, just to carry this a little further, are you in favour of any justice being entitled to exercise this jurisdiction, or should it be delegated to specially selected justices?—If the jurisdiction is fenced by the safeguards I have suggested, I do not think it is necessary to restrict it to any particular body of justices.

Chairman: We have had evidence of this sort; Sir John Barnsley, for example, gave us evidence at Question 1805: “Is the medical practitioner present when you are interviewing the patient?—Not as a rule.” Of course, in other cases Mr. Micklem has had other experience, but it is not required, I understand.

Mr. Micklem: Yes, he was speaking there of violent emergency cases.

19,524. Chairman: No, I think there is a good deal of evidence of that sort. The difficult point is that we are dealing with sick people, and therefore one has to see that we do not import formalities which are unnecessary?—Quite.

19,525. And which may be distressing?—Quite.

19,526. At the same time we want the safeguards to be adequate. It is the accommodation of these two considerations which is the real problem?—Yes.

19,527. In Scotland, as you probably know, the certificates are all granted by what one would call the county court judge, the sheriff, who is a professional man of standing?—Yes.

19,528. And in England provision is made for a county court judge performing this work, but I understand he has never done it?—I understand not.

Mr. Jowitt: He has not got time.

Chairman: He has not got time, and the statute contemplates that he need not undertake it?—As a matter of fact I understand that the reason urged for making this the duty of all justices, is that it is desirable to have someone, especially in country areas, who is within reach. I quite appreciate the force of that.

19,529. Mr. Jowitt: That is why I ventured to hesitate as to your idea about the clerk to the justices. If that is a part of the necessary formality, it may sometimes be very difficult to get hold of him?—I agree, but they appoint so many justices nowadays that I should have thought it would not have always been difficult.

19,530. Chairman: Take Mr. Jowitt's point: suppose you have a case occurring in a more or less remote country village; you have a justice of the peace there, but the clerk of the justices is probably resident in the county town, possibly 30 or 40 miles away; it might be very difficult and expensive too to bring him along for the purpose of participating in this ceremony?—I should make two comments upon that, if I may.

19,531. If you please?—The first is, that it would be possible in those cases for the justice to make an emergency order, just to detain the patient pending further investigation. After all any system will have difficulties, and this difficulty would have to give way to the greater good of the greater number. It is for the Commission to weigh the advantages and disadvantages, I think.

19,532. Now you suggest also, I observe, that this jurisdiction should be exercised by two justices with the clerk?—Yes.

19,533. You are making it even more difficult?—Quite.

19,534. Because one justice has first to be sought, then you need to get another, and then you need to get the clerk. That could only be for the formal certification, not for emergency orders?—Not for the emergency orders. Perhaps I was thinking in terms of my own district where there are plenty of justices

11 July, 1925.]

Sir LEWIS BEARD.

[Continued.]

who sit every day. One naturally thinks in terms of one's own surroundings, and one has to be corrected.

19,535. We have had a lot of evidence from the London area where facilities exist on a larger scale still, and similarly from large areas like your own; but when one is considering the case of the rural districts, it is not so easy to have machinery that will function as you suggest?—I quite appreciate that, and perhaps, speaking on behalf of the Association of urban authorities, I have not dealt with that case particularly. One has rather to think in terms of the conditions one knows, but one had in mind that the Commission would have evidence from other people who are more experienced in those things, and one did not want to tread upon ground one was not familiar with.

Sir David Drummond: Has Sir Lewis had any experience of abuses under this system which has led him to insist upon more strict formalities?

19,536. Chairman: Are your suggestions, Sir Lewis, for reform of the procedure based on any abuses which have occurred in your experience, or are they based rather upon the desirability of appeasing public anxiety—on which do you lay emphasis?—I would point out, in the first instance, that this is not only my evidence, but the evidence of the Association of Municipal Corporations. This proof was submitted to, and was amended by, the Committee of that Association, and there was amongst the members of that Committee, a very experienced justice's clerk, and he stiffened it very much on this point. He had experience which he gave me (it is secondhand); I have no personal experience because I am not in contact with this thing at all personally, but it has been told me by people who have been in contact, and whom I can trust, and they have cited instances which were rather serious.

19,537. You have drawn attention to what your Association regards as the casual nature of the procedure?—Yes.

19,538. And what one rather wanted to know was whether the casualness of the procedure had led to irregularity in the instances under your own notice?—Not under my own notice; they would not come under my notice.

19,539. I follow. Sometimes you know a casual system works in practice all right, but nevertheless it may be undesirable to continue it because of the risks?—Yes.

19,540. Then all this which your Association recommends is apart from the emergency case with regard to which you give your approval to certification by a single medical practitioner, as at present, with one justice?—Yes.

19,541. But any such order should not be valid beyond a short period, and thereafter formal certification?—Yes.

19,542. Of course if the suggestions that have been made for an intermediate stage of observation were adopted, the temporary order might be extended in order to allow of that period of observation intervening before formal certification?—Precisely.

19,543. I take it your recommendations for stiffening the procedure apply to formal certification, at whatever stage it takes place?—Yes.

19,544. Whether it is postponed for some period of observation or otherwise?—Precisely.

19,545. Then even in the emergency case where the justice would be functioning without his clerk, you recommend that the clerk should be notified at once in order that a record may be kept of the emergency order having been pronounced, and of the circumstances under which it was made?—Yes.

19,546. Then there is one other topic which is not referred to in your précis, upon which I want to ask your views. It has been suggested that the powers of the Board of Control in the matter of the regulation of mental hospitals might be strengthened. At present, as you know, the Board of Control visit the institutions and enter recommendations in the book for the purpose, which come before the visiting committee and are considered, and no doubt, where thought proper, given effect to. It has been suggested in some quarters that with a view to attaining a standard, a more or less regular standard throughout the mental hospitals of the country, some sanction should be attached to the Board of Control's recommendations; that they should be empowered to set a standard, and to enforce a standard in such matters as diet and clothing, and so on, of general application, or to make rules which would be obligatory in particular districts, because one can conceive that in certain districts you might have to modify your rules. What is the view of your Association, if they have considered it, of the relations of the visiting committee's vis-à-vis of the Board of Control on this point?—My Association have not had that point before them.

19,547. The real reason why I am asking you this question is this, that you represent and voice the feelings of the Municipal Corporations who are charged with these important duties, and what one rather wanted to know was whether your Association would resent in any way further power being vested in the Board of Control in the matter of directing, as distinguished from merely recommending standards?—The general view that my Association take with respect to such questions is that as far as possible local authorities should have freedom of action in matters of detail; and that is all to the good because it leads to experiment, and from experiment to experiment we gradually improve. There are many things (if I may digress for a moment) which have been introduced into public legislation simply by that method. Notification of births, of course, was an experiment at Huddersfield. The late Mr. Broadbent, who died the other day, was the originator of that. Notification of infectious disease was also an experiment; it was optional at first, and ultimately made obligatory. The regular course of legislation in local government has been of that kind. One authority promotes a Bill in Parliament to get certain powers; those powers are looked upon by Parliament askance, the first time they come up—I have had that fate myself.

19,548. I have promoted many of them personally.—No doubt you have, Sir. After a time the thing does not look as formidable as it looked at first, and the Ministry of Health, or the Local Government Board, are persuaded that there is something in it, and then it is tried and it works. Then it is put in an optional Bill like the Public Health Acts Amendment Act, 1890, or the Public Health Act of 1907, and it becomes within the power of the local authority to adopt that by order of the Ministry of Health, or by simple regulation subject to certain formalities; and at the end of a certain period it is put in a general Bill. At the present moment my Association is engaged, in conjunction with the Ministry of Health and other bodies, in consolidating the Public Health Acts, the Act of 1875, which was itself a consolidation, the Act of 1890, the Act of 1907, and a number of provisions which have been enacted in local Acts of Parliament since that date. These are all being now consolidated. We shall have a fresh Public Health Act which consolidates everything, and then we shall start making experiments beyond that.

19,549. I am very familiar with the process by which local legislation ultimately crystallises; but do you think it is better to leave to the local authorities in this matter of lunacy administration as much autonomy as possible, just because of the value of experiments in such work?—Yes. Even in such a matter as diet I think the practice and experience of medical superintendents is exceedingly valuable in seeing the effect of diet on various patients, what is the best standard diet, and what you can get economically.

19,550. You in no way resent the powers which reside in the Board of Control to make recommendations. In your own experience have you found that the recommendations of the Board of Control were worth considering?—Yes.

11 July, 1925.]

Sir LEWIS BEARD.

[Continued.]

19,551. And have you given effect to them from time to time?—I could not say to all of them, but to many of them undoubtedly. They very often represent the experience of other mental hospitals, and so on, but they are always backed with the weight of the Board of Control and primâ facie one would adopt them. One has to go into the question of cost and advisability, and get the report of the medical superintendent upon them. He is the man to whom we ultimately look for our advice on recommendations.

19,552. I take it your Association would prefer that the existing system of advice and recommendation by the Board of Control be continued, rather than that the Board of Control's views should be enforceable by them?—I am sure they would.

19,553. Has your Association considered the advisability of fostering research in connection with this branch of medical science?—No.

19,554. One of the provisions of the Mental Treatment Bill was a clause to enable local authorities to contribute to research?—Yes.

19,555. Is that one of the clauses that has the approval of the Association you represent?—All I can say is that they approved the principle of the Bill. They had not gone into clauses.

19,556. A possible charge on local funds is suggested there to aid research. It would at present be ultra vires to make grants for that purpose, and an enabling clause was inserted, but your Association has not considered the desirability of that?—No. We do carry on research work at the asylum of which I am Vice-Chairman, but I do not know how we pay for it.

19,557. You have a pathological laboratory I have no doubt there?—Yes.

19,558. Then, I think, Sir Lewis, as far as I am concerned we have covered the ground in your précis, but perhaps some of my colleagues would like to put some questions to you.

19,559. Mr. Micklem: I should like to ask you this question on certification. Do you think in every case, except the urgency cases, there should be a petition presented?—No, I do not think it necessary.

19,560. You would not put the private and pauper patients upon exactly the same footing in that respect?—No, I should not.

19,561. Do you think if you had the provision that the justices should sit in a quasi-court with their clerk that the further formality of a petition might be disregarded?—Yes.

19,562. Miss Symons: Sir Lewis, does your Association approve the principle embodied in the Mental Treatment Bill, providing for a certain number of women on visiting committees?—That is a clause point again, if I may say so. I do not see why they should object to it.

19,563. Chairman: Have you any ladies on your visiting committee?—No, there is no woman on it, not the visiting committee I am a member of. We have some ladies on the mental deficiency committee of the Asylums Board.

19,564. Miss Symons: Do not you think, in view of the very large proportion of women in mental hospitals, it is advisable to make some fresh provision?—I do not see any objection to it. I think it is probably desirable if only for the purpose of appeasing public opinion. I have not had very much experience of committees of mixed ladies and gentlemen; I do not know much about it.

19,565. Mrs. Mathew: I only just want to ask, Sir Lewis, would not the short date certificates cover that difficulty of collecting the clerk and the justices, because presumably even in the most rural districts that would give sufficient time to collect the justices and clerk and to bring the mental patient before them?—That was the idea which lay behind it, that you could carry over cases, where you could not get a full court at the time.

Chairman: Then, Sir Lewis, it only remains for me to thank you for your attendance here this morning, and for your valuable contribution to our deliberations.

(The Witness withdrew.)

(Adjourned.)

5, OLD PALACE YARD,
WESTMINSTER, S.W.1.

THIRTY-EIGHTH DAY.

Tuesday, 20th October, 1925.

MEMBERS PRESENT :

THE RIGHT HON. H. P. MACMILLAN, K.C. (Chairman.)

THE EARL RUSSELL.

SIR HUMPHRY ROLLESTON, BART., K.C.B., M.D.

SIR ERNEST HILEY, K.B.E.

SIR DAVID DRUMMOND, C.B.E., M.D.

MR. W. A. JOWITT, K.C.

MR. N. MICKLEM, K.C.

MR. H. SNELL, M.P.

MRS. C. J. MATHEW.

MISS MADELEINE SYMONS.

MR. P. BARTER, Secretary.

MR. W. FAIRLEY, Assistant Secretary.

EVIDENCE TAKEN IN PRIVATE.

Miss H. called and examined.

19,566. Chairman: I understand you are here this morning to give us some account of your experiences while you were a mental nurse at C. Mental Hospital?—Yes.

19,567. What we should like to have from you, Miss H., is as short an account as you can give us of your actual experiences when you were there. I understand that you had in view the idea of becoming a professional mental nurse?—Yes; I thought perhaps I could get along and take private cases on my own afterwards; that was my intention.

19,568. And with that object you thought it would be a good plan to go to one of the public institutions for training?—Yes.

19,569. Was that in 1921?—It was that very hot summer. I cannot tell you whether it was 1921 or 1922.

19,570. I understand that you went to C. on the 3rd August, 1921—is that right?—Yes, that is right.

19,571. And you naturally, of course, started as a probationer?—Yes.

19,572. Had you had any previous training at all?—Not in mental nursing. I had done quite a lot of nursing at other times, home nursing and in schools.

19,573. Had you had any training in any institution before?—None whatever. I was told none was necessary, for one thing.

19,574. Perhaps, if you do not mind, you might tell us how old you were when you started on this work?—I was getting on for my 28th year—28 in the following March.

19,575. How did you make your application?—I got a list of the whole thing; they are advertised in the papers, and I chose C. because I had friends out that way at B. They send you a form that you have to fill in. They want to know whether your voice is contralto or soprano, and those kind of things. That is on the form. I mention that because I wish to mention afterwards the different things they did not think it necessary to find out about you. They did not think it necessary to find out whether your references were correct or not, but they sent up your birth certificate for confirmation.

19,576. Did they ask for references?—They asked for references. I sent them two. I got two ladies to give me references and they did not take them up; but they kept back the birth certificate for quite a long time. When I asked what had happened to it, they said they had sent it up for confirmation. It seems to me much more necessary to find out where a person has grown up rather than when she was born.

19,577. I gather that in your view more searching inquiries should be made?—Most decidedly. If you only saw the class of nurses on their own there—what type of people are there to look after them! The block I was put in to sleep was called White-chapel, because the language was so bad. That scarcely was bad enough to describe it. The first night I was there a lot of them came in considerably the worse for drink. It had been their pay day, and they had all been down in the town and they came back using obscene and blasphemous language.

19,578. You made your application, and it was accepted I understand, and you entered on your duties?—Yes. You have to be examined by the doctor before you enter. They put you to bed in a little side room off one of the wards. You see the matron first of all. She gave me a belt and scissors and keys. She did not tell me anything about my duties; nobody ever told me what my duties would be. She told me that I should have to work under girls who were not so well educated as myself.

19,579. Were you furnished with any book of rules, or were there any books of rules?—No; that I must explain. It was about three days after I was there I had to go to the office—that is when I demanded my birth certificate. They gave me a paper to sign in three or four different places. I naturally insisted on reading the paper before signing. One of the things I had to sign was that I had read and would do my best to keep this book of rules. I had not had a book of rules, so I was not going to sign it. In two or three days the matron brought me a book of rules. Some of the nurses had been there since March and had never seen the book of rules, but they had all signed a paper to say that they would keep them.

19,580. If you had no instructions as to your duties, how did you start to do your work?—That is just

20 October, 1925.]

Miss H.

[Continued.]

it, you are left. You are told to report on such and such a duty in such and such a ward; when you get there you are told off to do this and do the other—take this patient that, and; this patient something else, but you are not explained anything at all.

19,581. Of course you must be given a bedroom or something of that kind?—You are given a cubicle.

19,582. And I suppose you took your things there and settled in?—Yes. Two patients were told off to carry my trunk up to the place where this cubicle was, in South Block B, I believe it is called. As I say, it was known as Whitechapel.

19,583. Do you get a cubicle to yourself?—You get a cubicle to yourself, but every nurse's key fits the door, and also the charge nurse has a key that fits every door. But one drawer you are allowed a private key for.

19,584. You got your cubicle assigned to you and took in your possessions, and you say you were assigned a certain ward to go to?—Yes. I can tell you the ward I went to first of all—4th August. First of all, I would just like to mention that the nurses were talking (I know you will say this is only gossip) the first evening I was there, about a woman having a miscarriage in the courtyard; no one knew she was pregnant. I saw her the next day; she was just a little bit abnormal, like people get at the pregnant time, and she told me she had come there in March; she became pregnant in February, and no one knew she was pregnant even.

19,585. Have you got her name?—I cannot give you her name; I did not hear it because I was moved about from ward to ward.

19,586. What was the date?—It was 4th August.

19,587. It was the first day you started your work?—Yes; so I suppose it happened the day before. It must have happened either on 3rd August, or 4th August.

19,588. Earl Russell: Had the woman herself not mentioned that she was pregnant?—I suppose not; I do not know. She told me she always became funny at times when she was pregnant, and that her husband knew it. I should know the woman again if I saw her but I am sorry I cannot give you her name.

19,589. Chairman: You say she had been admitted in March?—Yes. She became pregnant in February she told me, and this you will see is August when she had this miscarriage.

19,590. That is what you heard from some of the other nurses?—I had heard she had had a miscarriage. I saw the woman next day, and she told me she always became abnormal when she was pregnant. She was in the infirmary ward, you see; that is where I went on the 4th.

19,591. Did she describe this incident to you?—No. She was really rather amused because the nurses would not believe it was her. When they found this in the yard they naturally started looking round to find who it was from; and when she said it was from her, they would not believe her at first until they got her in and got the doctor to her, and then she was put in the infirmary ward.

19,592. We will now turn to your own actual experiences. First of all I think you wished to tell us about the type of nurses whom you found in this ward. I would like to know your impression of them?—My impression of them is that they are of the very lowest factory girl type; they are certainly not the kind of girl you would trust to do anything out of your sight.

19,593. How did you get on with them?—One does not get on with them. One does not talk to them any more than one can help. I was moved about from ward to ward. You are not properly warded until you have been there three months.

19,594. Sir David Drummond: What is the charge in connection with the case of the woman becoming pregnant and having a miscarriage?—Insufficient examination by the doctor when the patients go in.

19,595. You mean the doctor had not discovered she was pregnant?—Decidedly.

19,596. I am afraid that is a very frequent event in ordinary practice.—From March until August the woman was under their care and they did not discover she was pregnant.

19,597. Chairman: Then you were not in any particular ward?—No, I was moved about; I was sometimes in three or four wards during the day.

19,598. Your duties were what you might call general duties?—General factotum I should call it, moved about from one ward to another. When they wanted an extra one in a ward for the dinner hour, I went there. When I was in the T.B. ward, they were mostly bed patients; I was sent next to another ward for the meal hour, and I was not allowed disinfectant to wash my hands before going from the enteric and tubercular ward to help with their food.

19,599. Earl Russell: Did you ask for it?—I asked for it, decidedly; cleanliness demands that much, anyway.

19,600. Chairman: Then your first comment is that the class of nurses whom you found engaged in C. were in many instances unsuitable persons?—Decidedly. They might have been all right if they had been under proper control, but they certainly should not have authority and opportunity to behave as they did. For instance—this is not on one occasion, but I have frequently seen them tease helpless bed patients in an obscene manner for their own amusement. There was one unfortunate woman who was paralysed, and her bed was just inside the door of one ward, and there were several nurses that made it a practice to pull up her bed clothes and tease her in an obscene manner when they went by her, on purpose to hear her squeak. Is that the kind of woman you would expect to be a nurse?

19,601. Did you see that yourself?—I saw that myself on very many occasions. Another practice with the same nurses there—one's name was Nurse H.—I cannot tell you the names of the others—was to tell patients she had mixed cats' filth in their soup that she was feeding them with, and that kind of thing, and using the vilest words you could imagine to describe these things she was mixing with the stuff. That I heard myself.

19,602. I see you say that bad language was commonly used—is that so?—Decidedly, not only bad, but the lowest vile words.

19,603. By the women?—By the nurses; I never spoke to a male attendant while I was there; I never saw them except outside cuddling the nurses when I came in at night.

19,604. Was bad language common among all the nurses?—No, not amongst all of them; amongst a great many. I was not put into the very worst wards, because I was rather small.

19,605. What was the occasion of using bad language?—It was their common talk.

19,606. Do you mean among themselves?—Among themselves. It was worse, if anything, up in the cubicles than it was down in the wards; the vilest obscenities. I could not possibly bring myself to describe them to you any more than that, that they are the lowest words I have ever heard anywhere.

19,607. Did they use that language in addressing the patients?—Always when no charge nurse was about. There was a Nurse H. in one ward; she did not mind what her nurses said to their patients because she screamed at them all day herself; she was well on the way to becoming mental herself.

19,608. Did the charge nurse in the wards you were in control the nurses at all?—The best ones of them contented themselves with not doing the thing themselves; it is no small proposition to be up against a bunch of girls like that. Some of the charge nurses did their duty in the best way they could—in the easiest way they could. I know there are two or three very able charge nurses. There is a Nurse C. in Villa 2—that is the receiving ward; the only thing I have against her is that with patients who were

20 October, 1925.]

Miss H.

[Continued.]

useful in doing the work she had her own means of retarding discharge; their discharge would be kept back a week or two because they were useful to her. In that ward they did their own cooking. But otherwise she was kind and fair to every one there; she would always give you advice if you asked her about things.

19,609. Do you say the use of bad language was universal among the nurses?—Among all the nurses I came into contact with.

19,610. Universal?—I cannot tell you that every one used bad language, but it was the general practice.

19,611. Earl Russell: Did you ever hear anyone protest about the language?—No. If I mentioned anything at all I was told not to be a "soft," and then a nice kind of word, and to mind my own business, so I gave up protesting.

19,612. Sir Humphry Rolleston: I suppose you cannot suggest any means by which that can be detected or controlled?—One could suggest a means by which those kinds of things could be stopped, and that is by having a properly trained nurse to watch over these people all the time; and that these people should be merely servants to the patients, not be in charge of them, and not be in authority over them as if they were some great Eastern potentate. As it is, they have absolute control over them. They should not be allowed to. They should be told they were there as servants and attendants, and there was someone in control to look after them. Half of those nurses there, even the charge nurses, have no hospital training in the T.B. ward and the enteric ward.

19,613. Chairman: Apart from the language which you have described, I would like to know further from you what was the conduct of the nurses generally to the patients whom you saw?—Extremely brutal. For instance, a lot of the patients had very bad bed sores; some of them you could put your thumb into; and the general method of treating those was with a lighted candle. They light a candle and drop the hot grease into the sores; they do not explain or do anything to the patients; if they dare to wriggle or protest at all, they are just banged about. That was both in the infirmary ward and in the T.B. and enteric ward.

19,614. How many patients did you see treated in that fashion?—I cannot tell you how many. One was a dying one; she had the worst bed sores I saw on any of them.

19,615. Sir Humphry Rolleston: I think I ought to say that this "amberine" treatment was recognised during the war as a treatment for burns—I mean dropping hot wax on the wound at first sight sounds a brutal proceeding?—It is brutal.

19,616. But it was recognised as a form of treatment for burns, which is very much the same thing?—Yes, but treating the men during the war is different from treating those helpless patients; and when it comes to treating a foreign dying patient, you cannot understand one word of the language, anyway; she is pulled round by her hair and that kind of thing, and there is the dabbing at these sores and dropping this hot grease on. This was the enteric patient who died while I was in the ward; she was put down as an enteric patient. Then they went to the next patient; I do not know what was the matter with her; they would take a little drop of water and wash the body of M.B.; they go to the next patient and they attempt to wash her face with the same water and the same filthy bit of rag; she naturally protests and there is a free fight. That is a usual occurrence amongst them; they wash anything from 12 patients upwards in the same drop of water.

19,617. Sir David Drummond: Did the nurses drag this patient about, knowing she was suffering from enteric fever?—I suppose so, Sir; it was the enteric ward.

19,618. Sir Humphry Rolleston: You have got to draw a distinction between treatment and the way it is carried out?—Yes. If the rules were kept it would be all right, but no one takes the trouble to keep them. Fancy a decent girl being told that she is not to use strong and intemperate language to the patients. There is another one about not putting a patient's head under water to punish them. Those things are insults to decent girls.

19,619. Chairman: Have you got a copy of the rules?—I have copied out some of them; you are not allowed to bring the rules out of the hospital.

19,620. We can get a copy of that?—It is rule 22—"the attendant shall on no account use coarse, violent or intemperate language."

19,621. That seems a necessary rule?—Yes, but why necessary? If you got in a nurse for your child or wife who was ill would you tell her she was not to use coarse or intemperate language to her? About putting the head under water, "under no pretence whatever is a patient's head to be under water"—that is rule 79, under the bathing of patients.

19,622. I cannot see anything wrong with a rule of that sort?—No, but my point is that that shows what class of girl they expect to get in, that would torture a helpless patient by putting her head under water to punish her.

19,623. Mr. Snell: Is your point that there may have been cases of this kind reported, and the rule is made in order to prevent its repetition?—My case is that it must have happened so frequently there that they made the rule.

19,624. Sir David Drummond: Would you tell us a little more in detail about pulling this typhoid patient about? What did they do actually?—The best way I can explain is by just telling you I was told off to help first of all, but I was not rough enough. They come along, pull down the bed clothes and catch hold of her shoulders or hair, and turn her over on her face, and pull these rags off her that are on her back.

19,625. There was washing going on, I suppose?—I should not call it washing, myself. This water had already been used on other patients. They just pull the rags off and jab them like this with a rough towel.

19,626. My point is they did not pull her about for the fun of it?—No, they went there on that occasion to wash her, not to pull her about.

19,627. And they turned her over?—It is not turning, they simply pulled and hauled.

19,628. Chairman: Your point is that in performing their duties they did it too roughly?—They did it brutally. They would not treat an animal like it because the animal would bite.

19,629. Mr. Snell: Do you suggest that this was habitual—it was not done in a moment of excitement?—I do; it was habitual.

19,630. Chairman: And you say this was the kind of conduct on the part of all the nurses—all except the head nurse?—No, not all the nurses, but a great many of them, the majority whom I came in contact with.

19,631. Did you ever protest yourself?—To the charge nurses, and I was always told not to be a soft —, or to mind my own something, something business.

19,632. Earl Russell: Did you ever protest to any of the doctors?—I never saw a doctor but three times there, and then he was wandering round talking to someone. I once saw a doctor come on the verandah, when a patient's arm had been badly bruised; she showed her arm to the doctor.

19,633. You might have drawn his attention to that too?—I was inside with a few others; this was on the verandah. If I had drawn attention to it, the result would not have been what I wanted anyway.

19,634. Mrs. Mathew: How long were you there?—Six weeks.

Earl Russell: Only a month according to your présis.

19,635. Chairman: It is four weeks you see, Miss H.?—No, I left on the 7th or 9th; I am not quite sure which it is. But I want to tell you this. The last week I was there I had given my notice, and everyone was much more careful; they knew I was going, and they were much more careful.

20 October, 1925.]

Miss H.

[Continued.]

19,636. You tell us you left on the 3rd September, 1921—is that accurate?—In my diary I have the 7th.

19,637. Did you keep a diary all the time you were there?—No, not all the time. I generally keep a diary when I go to a new job. The medical superintendent suggested to me the first time I saw him that, if I cared to stay on after the three months, I might get a post as interpreter there on the female side. I rather liked the idea; and then when I saw how things were, I thought I would keep a detailed account, and I might be able to do something about things if I got a post like that. I could do nothing but protest, and that did nothing at all.

19,638. Mr. Snell: Did you go to the hospital with any other motive in your mind than to make yourself a competent nurse?—No; I wanted to take up mental nursing.

19,639. You have not any charges against the institution?—No, I have no charges against it.

19,640. And your prejudice grew from what you saw?—Yes, it did. I have heard many thing about private institutions that were pretty dreadful, but I did not believe them.

19,641. Chairman: From whom have you heard them?—From various people. There were some people of mine—not precisely people of mine—but distant relatives of my mother; the lady had been in and she had had her thumb bitten off in an asylum, and there were dreadful stories. I remember hearing about that, but that was a private place. Then also one of the other witnesses, the one whose lawyer I am going to, told me, but I did not think it was true, it sounded too dreadful; and that is one reason why I chose a County Council place in preference to a private place.

19,642. Sir Humphry Rolleston: The thumb was bitten off by another patient, I suppose?—That I do not remember distinctly, except that her ribs were broken and that her thumb was bitten off. I could get details of that from my mother, if necessary.

19,643. Chairman: You heard all these stories before you went to this institution?—I heard that ages ago.

19,644. I should have thought it would have rendered the profession rather repugnant to you?—I could not believe them.

19,645. Did you go to see if they were true?—No, I did not. I wanted to take up nursing seriously, and I had known a nurse who was a private mental nurse; she had a very good time, and she went about all over the world with a patient, and I did not see any reason why I should not get a similar place.

19,646. I can quite understand there may be some undesirable persons in the ordinary class of nurses that are employed, but the picture which you draw of this institution is much more serious than that. You suggest that practically all the nurses except those in charge were given to using bad language, to treating patients brutally, and generally to showing complete want of consideration. It is a very strong accusation against an entire institution, remember?—I did not say nearly all of them; I said the majority with whom I came into contact. There are 400 nurses.

19,647. How many did you come into contact with?—I could count up and tell you.

19,648. Earl Russell: Would it be 60, or that kind of thing?—Yes, I suppose about that.

19,649. Mrs. Mathew: You met the nurses in the mess room?—Very seldom; even at mess time their language was so revolting as to put you off your food very often. You are not going to carry on a conversation with those kind of people.

19,650. Chairman: Suppose you did come into contact with about 60, as you suggest, how many of those behaved in this fashion?—It is difficult to say, because being in a ward for about a couple of hours you would see three or four nurses behaving brutally.

Then you are sent to another ward and see the same kind of thing.

19,651. Earl Russell: Were you ever in any ward where they did not behave brutally?—Yes; for instance, in Villa 2, where Nurse C. was, that is the receiving ward; there was no brutality there; it was the one ward in the place where they did their own cooking, everything was spotlessly clean, everything was hygienic and splendidly carried out. Then there was another villa, Villa 6 I believe it is, the convalescent place, I suppose you would call it. There were 30 patients there who stayed all day; there were about another 30 who came in to sleep. There was nothing wrong there at all. The nurses and the charge nurse there were all very nice.

19,652. Mr. Snell: Were you in this particular ward?—I was over there for a while.

19,653. So you had opportunities of seeing that things were properly carried on?—Yes, they were properly carried on. The heads of the institution, I believe, did all they possibly could under the existing circumstances to keep things proper. The matron, I believe, came in March—I never knew her name, because she was always called “the old —” or “the old cat”; she was disliked because she turned up unexpectedly at places. They have a system whenever a nurse or doctor moves to telephone from ward to ward, and so on; but the matron would start off for one ward and change when she got behind the shrubs. She evidently knew what to expect.

19,654. Chairman: What do you mean by changing behind the shrubs?—Changing her direction. I have been several times in a ward when they have said the matron is coming, and the matron has not arrived; she went to so-and-so and caught them on the hop. She was not liked, naturally.

19,655. Sir David Drummond: Is it your contention that the conduct you are explaining to us now was carried out in the spirit of cruelty rather than just a rough method of carrying out their duties? Do you mean they would actually shake a patient and irritate and cruelly treat a patient independently altogether of any nursing duties?—Yes. There are some patients that the nurses are afraid of; the nurse dare not vent her spite on that patient.

19,656. You have not answered my question.—This is my way of answering it, please—so they go to other patients who are helpless and vent their spite on them deliberately.

19,657. Sir Humphry Rolleston: I gather really that a good deal of it is due to callousness and poor education?—And a lack of understanding. A lot of those girls go there quite young, I suppose about 18; they are given no directions; they are not told what a mad person is; they are given the idea that any patient may become homicidal at any moment, therefore it is their duty to keep them cowed. They go into a ward, nothing is told them; they see the nurses treating the patients in that way, and they do the same kind of thing, and it very quickly becomes a habit.

19,658. Are there not lectures given?—There are, but you are not forced to go to them unless you are going to start for your preliminary examination. They do not expect you to go until you have been there three months. I do not think you are allowed to go until you have been warded.

19,659. Earl Russell: For a different reason the method you have been describing is not unlike the way in which parents treat their own children?—If only you saw them!

19,660. We have heard of children being caught by the hair or arms and pulled along to be washed?—That is gentle compared with the way the nurses treated these patients.

19,661. Chairman: You say it was not merely callousness, but it was done from spite?—It very often was, not always. That nurse who told the patient she mixed the cat's filth in her food, that same one, I have seen deliberately tease patients and get them in a temper.

20 October, 1925.]

Miss H.

[Continued.]

19,662. What was the object of that?—Because there was a girl called J. in that ward that every one was afraid of, she always annoyed the nurses; she was supposed to have attacked the medical superintendent at one time; she was a drug fiend; she was in that ward simply because she was a "carrier" of some description, enteric, I believe; otherwise she would have been put in the refractory ward. She used to help the nurses give out the drugs in the evening to patients, until they found she drank most of them herself.

19,663. Mr. Snell: I am very anxious to get from you your careful judgment on this point. Is this charge that you are making one against the institution as an institution, or against the staff employed?—It is against the staff employed, and it is against the institution in this way, that they do not look to see that their rules are carried out; their rules are excellent. It is a case of laissez faire.

19,664. Sir Humphry Rolleston: The matron on the other hand, did take steps?—The matron was trained, and she was fairly new. Poor soul, she was up against 400 nurses of that class.

19,665. Earl Russell: Is not the other step they can take to have a charge nurse always present in a ward?—The charge nurse is usually there, but she turns her back when things are going on that she does not want to see. They ought also to have a hospital nurse.

19,666. Mr. Micklem: Why do you lay stress on that?—Because a lot of them are ill in other ways besides mentally ill. For instance, there is no need for all those patients to have got bed sores, if they had been properly nursed. For instance, there was not one patient who had not bed sores in the infirmary. Of course a lot of them were only in there for a little while, like that woman who had a miscarriage; but those who stayed in, those who were habitual bed patients were mostly people that went in either through mishaps, or because they got battered about by the nurses; but in the T.B. and the enteric ward—that is where I had my biggest experience of bed patients—they had all got these bed sores. It was quite unnecessary.

19,667. Earl Russell: Did the doctor never look at them on his rounds?—I never saw a doctor coming his rounds there, so I could not tell you.

19,668. What time did he come in the day?—I could not tell you.

19,669. Sir Ernest Hiley: How long were you in either the enteric or the T.B. ward?—Sometimes I was there the whole of my half day, a p.m. duty or a.m. duty. Sometimes I was sent away to another ward to help, and then back again.

19,670. But you were in this asylum for four or five weeks; how long were you nursing in the enteric ward out of that period?—I have not added it up; I should have to go right through my diary.

19,671. About a fortnight?—No, not a fortnight right off. I suppose I was there possibly on six occasions for my half-day duty. I could not tell you for sure without adding it up.

19,672. Chairman: A half-day on each occasion?—Yes, what they call an a.m. or p.m. duty.

19,673. Earl Russell: What I want to get at is this: between them did you cover the whole day, so that if the doctors had come at any time you ought to have seen them?—No. If you are on a.m. duty you are off duty p.m. and vice versa.

19,674. But still you were there both mornings and evenings?—Not on the same days.

19,675. No, on different days; and you never saw a doctor either morning or evening?—No, because I was moved about so frequently; I may just have been sent from one ward to another when the doctor arrived there. I cannot say anything about that except when I noticed that girl with her arms all bruised. Dr. A. was back from his holidays, and all the nurses said, "We shall have to take care now because he keeps his eyes open." Another thing I know about Dr. M. who left the week I went there—he condemned the meat they had been given to eat, and he was always doing those kind of things, according to the nurses, so he was sure not to stop.

Mr. Snell: I should like, Sir, to ask about the visiting committee.

19,676. Chairman: You have told us about the matron and the doctor. While you were there were there any visits by the visiting committee?—I could not tell you; I never say anything.

19,677. Earl Russell: Did you never see any outside stranger at all in the wards?—Yes, because they have their visiting days, and patients that were very ill were allowed to have visitors at other times, but the nurses were not allowed to speak to visitors; they were not allowed to answer any question that visitors put to them.

19,678. Chairman: I would like to follow that up. You say that relatives and friends of the patients came on certain days, did they?—Yes; I am not sure whether it was every Sunday now—Sundays and some Mondays.

19,679. And the nurses were told not to speak to the visitors?—I was told; so I suppose the others were.

19,680. So these people saw their relatives or friends who were in the institution, and who therefore would have an opportunity of saying if they were ill-treated in any way?—Yes. The thing is that they very often did, but the people would not believe it.

19,681. How do you know they very often did?—Because I have heard them sometimes.

19,682. The visitors?—No; I have heard the patients complaining. For instance I have heard a visitor go up to the charge nurse and say, "My daughter, or sister, has complained that so-and-so has happened." She is told it is a delusion. Or, "She has complained that she has not had those eggs I brought her." The nurse says she has given them in her milk. I know it is true the nurses take most of the stuff that is brought in for the patients.

19,683. You are drawing a very serious picture. They are not only brutal and spiteful, but they are also thieves.—They are thieves. They attempted to break open my box, after the first pay day there. All the nurses were complaining that there were a lot of petty thefts when they bought their face creams and powders.

19,684. Now you might tell us about the arrangements for bathing and washing, which is one of the matters on which you have certain observations to make?—It is dreadful. They have those shower baths, and they will put one, two or three under the same shower bath when there is not room for one, and they will turn on the hot water before the cold. The patients are afraid to come out; the nurses go for them. Some of those patients are all covered with sores. It is very awful for a nude patient to be pushed up against a patient all covered with sores.

19,685. Did you see that?—Yes, I saw that, and it is very dreadful. They would put two or three in the same lot of water, one in after the other, and some of those patients are in a dreadful state. I conclude it is venereal disease—I do not know, but it looks like it.

19,686. Without changing the water?—Without changing the water. They say, "Oh, you old so-and-so, you cause me a lot of trouble," and under they go. There are not enough towels to dry them. It is almost too revolting to describe the whole arrangement down there.

19,687. Was that so in all the wards you had to do with?—I was only in the bath once.

19,688. Sir David Drummond: Was a charge nurse ever present?—Head attendant; a charge nurse was always present, and I believe a head attendant was supposed to be present also; I am not sure, but sometimes there was one. Although I was not the bath nurse very often, I frequently met the parties coming out, and I sometimes saw a head attendant with them.

20 October, 1925.]

Miss H.

[Continued.]

19,689. Chairman: Now will you tell us about the clothing that you saw?—It was very often in a very dreadful state. For instance, there was a dreadful thing; it is rather awkward to speak about. In most of the wards they were not allowed to use sanitary towels; the result was very revolting; neither was there any lavatory paper; so when they were wearing these filthy things it was revolting. The clothes did not fit them at all, and sometimes a patient was given two boots for the same foot, with brads sticking up, and all that kind of thing.

19,690. Earl Russell: Did they ever ask for sanitary towels?—I suppose they did; I do not know.

19,691. Did you see any in the wards at all?—No. On one occasion, in Villa 2, a patient came in from another hospital. She was wearing a sanitary towel at the time, and it was taken away from her.

19,692. Miss Madeleine Symons: You are quite sure they were not provided and available?—Quite sure. I went to a charge nurse in one place and told her that someone was needing one, and she said she was not allowed to have them.

19,693. Chairman: Supposing patients were going to the lavatory, could not they get any paper?—No, there was none to be found anywhere.

19,694. Was there none supplied?—I cannot say. It is like brushes and combs; they are supplied, but they are not used. Every night you will find on a radiator a whole row of clean brushes and combs, but they are never used; they are put away. It is too much trouble to the nurses to use them. They will take two or three little scraps of broken comb and haul it through a patient's hair. I never saw a hair brush used the whole time I was there, but every night I was on p.m. duty I found all these brushes put out for the head attendant to inspect. It is possibly the same with the lavatory paper; I cannot say.

19,695. You have described the clothing of the patients. I suppose if we visit the institution we will see the clothing such as you have described?—You will in the wards where you are pleased to be taken. If you visit the institution and ask to see such a ward you will most probably see it. If you were to go and demand to go into the courts of the old building at airing time, you will find in these tiny places three or four wards exercising at the same time, and all these patients with their filthy stained clothes on, rolling about on the ground, or sitting in corners like so many poor caged animals.

19,696. Sir David Drummond: Do you suppose that what you are describing is going on at present, as far as you know?—I do not know; I know nothing whatsoever of what they are doing at present. This change probably has been made. While I was there you only got hot water twice in the week; of course, that makes a vast difference to cleanliness. I have been told since that that was only a war-time arrangement, because of the coal scarcity or something like that. They probably have the water every day now, and that makes a vast difference in washing out odds and ends of clothing, and so on.

19,697. Chairman: You tell us that you have been told that since. Have you been in communication with anybody from the asylum?—I went to a newspaper and got them to publish a little statement made some time since, and they told me that there was a Mrs. S., I believe the name was, who said when she was there they had hot water every day; so I concluded that what happened while I was there was merely the effect of the war-time shortage of coal, and that it is probably over by now; I do not know.

19,698. Earl Russell: Are you the nurse whose experiences were published in those two numbers of the paper?—Yes.

19,699. Chairman: How did you come into contact with them?—Mrs. G. knew him, and I said I felt so strongly about it, could not I do something? She said probably if I wrote it up, Mr. B. might take it, and he did.

19,700. Were you paid for the article?—Yes.

19,701. Now another matter that we are interested in is the food. Will you tell us about the food; first of all, the nurses' food, and then the patients' food?—The nurses' food was very bad. Did you want to have the detailed dieting?

19,702. I should like you to tell us what you thought of the food.—It was dreadfully bad. The nurses' food was bad, and the patients' food was worse. The bread was always very stale, and frequently sour.

19,703. Was it made on the premises?—That I could not tell you. I believe it was, but I am not sure about it.

19,704. Was the food sufficient?—For the nurses there was sufficient at that time, but there was this awkward arrangement about the nurses' meals. You had to book your meals two days in advance, but if you were in the institution at meal times, and had not booked them, you could not get them, but you would be charged for them.

19,705. What do you mean by having to book your meals two days beforehand?—There is a paper put up two days in advance. On Monday you would find Wednesday's paper put up, and you have to sign your name. If you do not sign your name there, in two days' time, that is, on the Wednesday, you could not get that meal, but if you were in the institution at that meal time you would be charged for it, because you had not clocked off.

19,706. Does that enable the cooking department to know how many meals to provide?—I suppose it does.

19,707. Was there anything very wrong about it?—Only this: One day I was too unwell to go out; I was in for both the dinner and the tea time, but I could not get any meals, not even a drop of milk, yet I had to pay for both that dinner and tea, which I could not get.

19,708. Did you see the doctor?—No. I had just got a very bad attack of diarrhoea. It was not necessary to see the doctor, but I could not go out, you see.

19,709. Did you speak to the charge nurse?—I spoke to one of the nurses.

19,710. Did she not get you some hot milk?—No; she did not get me anything at all.

19,711. Mr. Mickle: How did you get charged for these meals which you did not take? I do not follow it?—It is all put down and deducted out of your monthly wage.

19,712. But your name was not on the rota for the food?—No, but I had not clocked off. All those who have not clocked off are considered to be in the institution; therefore they are considered to be having a meal. There was no notice put up to that effect for some time. The notice about being charged for meals if you were not in was put up on the 12th. On one occasion I was out about five minutes after the dinner hour; I was in about ten minutes before the tea hour. Therefore I was charged for those two meals, although I did not have them there, and though I had not booked for them. I mean, those kinds of things frequently happen when they are trying to arrange things beautifully.

19,713. Miss Madeleine Symons: Do you mean that if you were actually in your sleeping quarters you would be counted as not having clocked off?—Yes, because you would only be clocked off when you went out of the building.

19,714. Chairman: And if you had not booked for one of these meals, was it charged to you if you were in the building?—Yes, that is so. The nurses explained that to me at first, and I laughed at it. However, after a bit the notice went up to that effect, so I found it was perfectly correct.

19,715. It is rather an odd way of arranging things?—I do not know. Once you get to know of it, you can look out for that kind of thing. There is another point about the nurses' food. You sometimes do a 9-10 duty. You have four wards to look after entirely on your own. The patients are in bed. You have to go round with each nurse of that ward and look at each patient, and the nurse signs a paper to say that she has handed over those patients to you, and you sign a paper to say that you have received them. Then you have to go round once or twice in between, alone, and clock on in each ward to show that you have been round. Then at 10 the night nurses come for each of the wards, and you go through the same formula of signing papers. That nurse is supposed to go with you to the same patients and see that you are not handing one over dead to her, and so on. Then you go down to the visiting room and say you have handed over these wards, and it is too late to go out and get anything; you really need something. There ought to be a canteen or something like that, where you could buy stuff.

20 October, 1925.]

Miss H.

[Continued.]

19,716. Sir David Drummond: Do I gather that you were yourself in charge of four wards?—Yes, for the 9-10 duty.

19,717. You had just gone to the place; you had no experience; and you were in sole charge of four wards?—Yes, for just over the hour.

19,718. Was a charge nurse or some other experienced person within your call?—No, I did not see another nurse at all, until the night nurses turned up.

19,719. Chairman: Were the four wards all together?—No. You went from one to the other, and to get to the other one you had to go along a corridor and up some stairs.

19,720. Were they all in bed?—Yes, they were all in bed. There were side rooms, padded rooms and half-pads and that kind of thing.

19,721. And you were in charge of the whole four were you?—Yes, just for the hour.

19,722. Did anything happen?—No. It is very eerie, and it is very worrying. You have to go through twice during that hour, with the lights down very low, and the patients were all jabbering; some of them were shrieking, and some were bumping at the side doors to come out. You are supposed to look at every one to see that they are all right. They take their bed clothes off.

19,723. Had any of them done that?—Yes.

19,724. What did you do, if you were single-handed, with patients with their clothes off?—If you coax them, most of them will do what you want them to. There was one I did not go in to see; she was bumping about so furiously at her door that I was afraid to open it on my own, because I could not have done anything if she had attacked me, so I did not open her door.

19,725. I should like to follow this a little further. For just over an hour's interval between the day and night turns you say you were in charge of four wards?—I can give you the numbers of the wards, if you wish them.

19,726. It might be as well?—I do not quite know where to put my hand on them, but I know I did put them down here somewhere.

19,727. You say that these four wards contained a number of patients who were shrieking, shouting and getting out of bed and so on. How did you possibly manage to control that large number of people in that state?—A lot of them did not need controlling.

19,728. But even supposing there were only two or three, how did you deal with them simultaneously?—By treating them like children. If you say: "Come along, dear; get into bed; you will get so cold," most of them submit to that kind of treatment.

19,729. Earl Russell: You alone, with your entire absence of training, had to prevent these people from committing suicide or fighting?—I do not think they were liable to commit suicide, but they might have fought.

19,730. Miss Madeleine Symons: Could you have got help quickly?—I do not know, because I did not see another nurse the whole time.

19,731. Earl Russell: Were you told there was any bell you could ring if you wanted any assistance?—No. I did not know that I had got the 9-10 duty until about five minutes beforehand.

19,732. Chairman: Who gave you this task?—One of the head attendants; I cannot tell you which. I had not the remotest idea what the duty was.

19,733. Did you ask?—She went off and left me to the charge nurse, and I asked the charge nurse what it was, and she told me, but that did not quite explain what it was.

19,734. Did she go away?—Not immediately; she just went round with me. There are a lot of patients one knows it is unnecessary to look to in that way. There are a lot marked down as "wet" patients, or suicidal. You are supposed to look at all those kinds of cases, but she did not give me very much time. Then of course I got to the next ward, and the charge nurse came along and said, "H., you are late."

19,735. How often were you on this special duty?—I only did that 9-10 duty once. I think you are supposed to do it once a month.

19,736. I see you have got a book there. Is that your diary?—Yes.

19,737. When did you write it?—When I was there.

19,738. Day by day?—Yes, or night by night.

19,739. Do you mind my looking at it?—No, you can have it with pleasure. I cannot find which day it was I did the 9-10 duty; it was the sports day. I would like you to look at that; when I was left entirely alone in the ward. (Handing diary to the Chairman.)

19,740. Earl Russell: Did other nurses with as little experience as you get put on to this 9-10 duty?—I could not tell you, Sir.

19,741. Sir Ernest Hiley: I understand you were only on that duty once?—I was only on once, but I was only there just over a month. Each nurse once a month is picked out for the 9-10 duty.

19,742. Sir David Drummond: Were they epileptic patients and bed-ridden patients?—I do not know about that. I cannot tell you what they all were there. There were no epileptics when I was doing 9-10 duty.

19,743. I suppose bed pans would be required occasionally?—I never saw one in the whole place. There are commodes at the sides of the beds; and I have frequently seen a patient stark naked pulled out of bed, and sat there for about an hour, after she has fouled her nightdress.

19,744. Earl Russell: Are the patients not able to get back into bed by themselves?—They dare not; they would be knocked about if they did.

19,745. Chairman: How could you see them sitting there for an hour, if your duty was only for one hour?—I do not mean the 9-10 duty; I mean at any time. This is it: "I did my first 9-10 to-night, 22 sections, that comprises wards 24, 26, 27 and E.2."

19,746. Sir Humphry Rolleston: Were those chronic wards; could you say what kind of patients those were?—No, I could not, because I had not been into those wards before, except 24 once to help with meals.

19,747. For one nurse to look after four wards, if they contain at all acute or dangerous cases, is rather different from being in charge if they are chronic imbeciles?—I cannot tell you that, but you could easily find out the patients they have in wards 24, 26, 27 and E.2.

19,748. Chairman: But you told us these were wards with padded rooms and half-padded rooms, and that violent conduct was going on?—Yes. There are padded or half-padded rooms to every ward; the refractory wards are nearly all padded, I believe. I was not allowed to go into the padded wards, because I was under-size. The date is 20th August.

19,749. Sir David Drummond: Did it never occur to you to pull a blanket off and put it over this patient who was sitting naked for an hour?—Some of the wards are "T" shaped, like that (describing). I have been in here and saw it happening in there.

20 October, 1925.]

Miss H.

[Continued.]

I am not allowed to go in there when anything happens, nor may I put something round a patient. If it were my own patient who got out of bed, I would attend to her properly and get her back as soon as possible.

19,750. Mrs. Mathew: What was the other ward you were in?—I have only got 26, 27 and E.2. What was the fourth?—The Chairman has got my diary. I cannot tell offhand. I do not mind admitting that I was rather frightened. In fact I was too frightened to open the side door of the one that was bumping about so. I could not have done anything, had she attacked me.

19,751. Mr. Snell: Had you had any previous nursing training before you went to this place?—No, no training. I had been at S.'s School at W.

19,752. So you were quite untrained, to all intents and purposes?—I was quite untrained.

19,753. Have you any reason to believe that the conditions which you have described were the same on the male side as on the female side?—No. I know nothing about the male side, whatsoever. I did not speak to an attendant the whole time. The only thing I saw on the male side was a cricket match once, where the patients were waiting on the attendants.

19,754. Sir David Drummond: You have described the dirty state in which these patients were, their filthy clothes, and so on. The matron would see that, I suppose, when she came round?—One supposed she would, but the thing she seemed to notice most was whether some of the nurses had their hair bobbed. I heard her frequently making remarks such as, "You are wearing dark blue stockings, nurse. You should wear black."

19,755. Chairman: Miss H., why did you keep this diary?—In the first place, I usually keep a diary, and after the medical superintendent suggested that I might get this post as interpreter I thought it would be very useful to keep the data.

19,756. Earl Russell: That was another question I was going to ask you. When you spoke about the diary, you said, "I generally keep a diary when I go to a new job"?—Yes, I do. I have been a nursery governess, and I have been a nurse, and I have been an assistant matron, and that kind of thing. I have earned my living since I was 14.

19,757. Chairman: I am bound to say that from a glance at this diary it looks as if you had from the very start decided to keep a record of everything you saw, as if you thought it proper to do so?—I thought it proper. You cannot learn if you do not keep a diary of things.

19,758. But the type of thing you record is not what your duties are so much as things which you saw, of which you are telling us to-day?—Things which terrified me.

19,759. Sir Ernest Hiley: What sort of diary did you keep when you were a governess?—The usual kind of thing—my various duties, and how the children got on.

19,760. Chairman: This is a special diary which begins at this time?—No, I had not kept a diary for quite a bit.

19,761. What was written on the first page that is torn off?—The same thing as is there now. I cut it out because my pen inked all over the place.

19,762. I do not think you could have copied here exactly what was on the first page?—Not absolutely. I wrote it on the same day. I cut that out.

19,763. Something different has been written out?—I do not suppose it was word for word the same for a moment.

19,764. Why did you cut out the passage you wrote first?—There was this manuscript also; I was writing up this because I was getting out leaflets for the Lunacy Reform people.

19,765. Had you been in contact with the Lunacy Reform Society before you went into the institution?—No. It was possibly a year after I came out that I knew anything of them; it was some considerable time after I had seen the newspaper people, anyway.

19,766. May we keep these documents for a little, and return them to you afterwards?—Certainly.

19,767. Earl Russell: You were not in communication with the newspaper before you went there?—No. I had seen Mr. B. once before I went there.

19,768. Had there been any discussion about keeping observation or anything?—No. That was the only time I had seen Mr. B. before.

19,769. Chairman: Had Mrs. G. talked to you about abuses in these institutions?—She had before, but I thought she had exaggerated. I did not think they could possibly happen, and I asked her if it were a thing anyone could take up properly. She said any lady could take it up; it would be better if they did. So I picked out the County Council places, because I thought: "Well, if there is any truth in those statements at all, it could not happen in a place with proper rules."

19,770. Was your object in going there to train yourself for nursing work, or was your object to find out whether the stories you had heard were true?—My object was to train myself for nursing work.

19,771. Because your diary suggests that you were more interested in finding out whether those abuses actually occurred, than in learning your profession?—If you have time to read it properly, you will see that it is not so. Things are so horrid that no one would willingly believe them; I would not willingly believe them; one would much rather not believe them; I would much rather believe they were not true.

19,772. I quite agree that the story you have told us is a most revolting story.—And yet I considered going back, and then I could not.

19,773. Just tell us the circumstances under which you left?—My mother was ill, and my sister came home from India, ill.

19,774. As a probationer, had you not to stay for a certain length of time?—No. If you stay over the three months, you have to; I think that is at the root of a great deal of the trouble. A lot of these girls go there, they do three months, and after a time they have to say whether they are likely to stop. Then I believe they are given more instruction, and they have to attend lectures.

19,775. When you left, did you go to the matron and say that for family reasons you had to leave?—I gave her the letter my sister wrote me.

19,776. What did the matron say?—She was very vexed; she had had excellent reports of me. The medical superintendent had said before that they wanted more people of my class. Then I asked him if I could come back again when things were settled up.

19,777. You contemplated going back?—I did contemplate going back, because I wanted to try for that interpreting job; I thought it would be rather a nice job.

19,778. Earl Russell: From whom did they get the excellent reports—not from your fellow nurses, I suppose?—From the charge nurses, I suppose. I suppose they keep a certain watch over you.

19,779. Mr. Snell: There is one very important point which emerges from what you have said. Were most of these nurses, about whose conduct you complain, probationers of under three months?—No; some of them were; but there was one nurse, a nurse named S.—I believe you will find she was in Villa 4 there—she was a fiend. I never had a row with that nurse, because I had not really much to do with her; she had been there for ages.

19,780. Could you give me your general view? How many of them do you think were people who had passed their three months' probation, and then had chosen this as a vocation?—I think it was mostly on their own part. The other was a different kind of ill-treatment—furtive jabs, and a slap in the face. It was different, somehow, to the way the other nurses went about it.

19,781. Chairman: Why did you contemplate going back? Because it seems to me that after what you have described as the condition of affairs there, you would have been very reluctant to go back to the institution?—I thought the interpreting job would be quite a good job. I have to earn my living, you see. Evidently the medical superintendent wanted people who would try to do their duty.

20 October, 1925.]

Miss H.

[Continued.]

19,782. How soon after you left the institution did you communicate with the newspaper?—Some months afterwards; it was when my sister started getting better, and I left home again. I cannot tell you the date.

19,783. Sir Humphry Rolleston: Have you done any journalistic work, besides that for this paper?—No, except the small effort which the Chairman has there, which I was going to try and get out in leaflets.

19,784. Earl Russell: Did you communicate with the paper in writing, or verbally?—In writing.

19,785. There were letters?—Yes.

19,786. You would not mind our having them, if the newspaper would let us have them?—Please do. Then you will find the dates.

19,787. Chairman: In point of fact you did not go back?—No, I just could not bring myself to it when it came to doing so.

19,788. Would it be discourteous to ask you what you are doing now?—At the moment I am trying to get a job as a stewardess.

19,789. How have you been employed since 1921?—In various ways; odd jobs; domestic work and that kind of thing. At the present moment I am helping some people do some printing.

19,790. When did you come into contact with the National Society for Lunacy Reform?—I cannot tell you what the date was, and I cannot tell you who put me on to them; I believe they wrote to me after the articles came out in the newspaper.

19,791. Had you many communications with the Society or with their officials?—I went up a good many times; I did not like them very much; I do not think they are very useful.

19,792. Who took a statement from you?—I believe it was a Mrs. A. G.; I am not sure. They wrote to me to know could they publish the articles which were in the newspaper as leaflets, and I said: "It is nothing to do with me, because I got paid for them as articles, and you must apply to Mr. B."

19,793. You gave a statement to someone to send in to us?—Yes, I suppose I did. Was it from the Lunacy Reform people? I do not know. I was going to come in with those people at first.

19,794. It came to us, I am told, from a firm of solicitors in town?—Yes, that is so. I was going to go in through the Lunacy Reform Society, and I came to the conclusion they were rather futile, so Mrs. G. offered me the services of her lawyers.

19,795. Did you give them the statement which has been written down and sent in to us?—Yes, I saw a barrister—Mr. P., I believe he was.

19,796. Well, Miss H., we will give every consideration to what you have said. We will keep these books for a short period, and send them back to you, if we may?—Would you like this, also? It is a copy of some of the rules (handing in the document). Will you also get the book of rules?

Chairman: If you please.

19,797. Earl Russell: In paragraph 10 of your précis you say that you reported these matters often to the charge nurses. What did the charge nurses do when you reported them?—I would just go up to them and tell them, and they would say, "Oh, well"; "Oh, perhaps"; "Oh, you go and do so-and-so"—that kind of thing.

19,798. Mrs. Mathew: What languages do you speak?—Only French, you know.

(The Witness withdrew.)

Mr. M., called and examined.

19,812. Chairman: You are Mr. M.?—Yes.

19,813. You have come this morning to give us some evidence about your experiences as an attendant at N.?—Quite so.

19,799. Of course, there are a lot of aliens at C. are there not?—Yes. I do not know who it was told me. I had spoken French to some of the patients who could not speak English. Their interpreter was away at the moment. The superintendent said there was no such appointment as female interpreter, but he did not see why there should not be one, and as soon as I could tell him whether I was going to stay on he would put it to the Committee that they should make the post of female interpreter, and offer it to me, and then this other interpreter would teach me other languages. It was rather an opening for anyone who had to earn their living, and that was the only thing that made me consider going back again.

19,800. The probationers begin there at about the age of 18, do they not?—Yes, about that.

19,801. Are they left in charge of the wards, as you were?—On the 9-10 duty?

19,802. Yes?—I suppose so. I never spoke to one about it, but I suppose they were.

19,803. You think that does happen?—I never troubled to think about it one way or the other. It happened to me.

19,804. Of course, you had had a little experience, had you not; you were not absolutely without experience?—I cannot tell you what they chose me for, but I had had no experience of mental nursing other than during the time I was there, and I really was frightened when I found what it really did comprise, though I only knew of it two or three minutes before.

19,805. Were you ever on night duty?—No. I usually finished at eight, when I was doing p.m. duty; and somewhere about two, when doing a.m. duty.

19,806. Are those the usual hours of the people under three months there, do you suppose?—Yes. I do not know about the 9-10 duty, but they were the recognised hours for the a.m. duty and the p.m. duty. As regards the 9-10 duty, I do not know, except that I did it that once, and was not keen on doing it again.

19,807. Sir Ernest Hiley: Miss H., when you left C., you had a little conversation with the matron before you went, did you not?—Yes. I do not know if it was on the last day, or when I gave in my notice.

19,808. Did you say anything to her about your experiences in the asylum?—No, I did not. She was very annoyed with me because I was going. At the same time I made the complaint about someone attempting to force my box after pay day. She said she would have it looked into, but I think it rather upset her. Someone came along almost immediately, and she sent me off. I was very worried about my mother. My sister had written me a very worrying letter, and I was anxious to get home as soon as I could to her; and then, with my sister coming home from India, I did not know where I was—on my head or my heels.

19,809. You did not tell her you had been keeping a diary, and offer her the diary to look at?—No, it did not occur to me; she could have had it if she wanted it.

19,810. I suppose she did not know you had been keeping it?—She did not ask me. If she had asked me I would have told her, but she did not have any conversation with me. In any case, it was up in my room, and since any of the head nurses or nurses had a key that fitted all the drawers except one, and it was not in that, they could easily have seen it; frequently I left it on the chest of drawers.

19,811. Chairman: Thank you, Miss H. We are obliged to you for coming to us this morning.—I wish I could do something to help matters, because I think they are dreadful.

19,814. We have been favoured with a statement of what you are going to tell us this morning. Does that represent your evidence?—Yes. I should like you to refresh my memory as to the statement I gave

20 October, 1925.]

Mr. M.

[Continued.]

to Mr. C., who is secretary of the Lunacy Reform Society, 12 months ago; because since that time I have not been notified, and I thought the thing was falling through. There are several points I deal with in that paper, when he visited me at N., particularly with regard to ill-treatment.

19,815. Did you give a statement to the Lunacy Reform Society?—Yes, I did, to Mr. C.

19,816. Did you see the statement after it was prepared?—I gave him the fullest particulars, and he put them down in my statement.

19,817. I mean since it was written out, have you not seen it?—No, I have not seen it.

19,818. However, you told him what you were going to say?—Yes, I did.

19,819. That is how it has come to us, I suppose?—That is quite true.

19,820. Was it in 1908 that you joined the staff of N.?—Quite so.

19,821. And did you intend to adopt mental nursing as a profession?—I did.

19,822. I suppose you went in as a probationer?—Yes.

19,823. And passed through various stages until, in 1914, you reached the grade of third charge attendant?—Yes.

19,824. Then in 1914 you served in the War, and were away from N. until 1919?—Yes.

19,825. Then you returned, and remained till 1921, when you resigned?—Yes.

19,826. So that you were, in all, just over seven years. I take it, at N.?—Somewhere thereabouts, yes.

19,827. Now you can, I think, best assist us by telling us what are the matters, which came under your personal observation while you were an attendant at N., which you think call for remedy; matters which you thought were undesirable or improper, and which came under your own notice?—I think when people put their patients in those sort of places, they should have their pay, that is to say, when they pay fees for a special attendant, which I have been to the deceased Mr. T., brother-in-law of Mr. Justice C. I think first of all, if I may state it, that I was an eligible person to get that pay, which those people paid for an attendant to look after the patient. Furthermore, the food is very inferior. I, for one, during my service there made complaints, which it was my duty to do when I was special attendant, and I was absolutely put down as a marked man for a length of time.

19,828. Will you tell us this, Mr. M. Is N. a licensed house?—It is a mental institution—very large.

19,829. Is it a licensed house, or a registered hospital?—If I may say so, I should say from what I have seen, from my experience there, it is a money-making place.

19,830. Yes, but you know there are various types of institutions. There are public asylums, licensed houses, registered hospitals?—I think it is a private asylum.

19,831. That is what is called a licensed house or a registered hospital; do you not know which it is?—I do not know that.

19,832. Were all the patients there private patients?—Yes, private patients.

19,833. That is to say, they were all paying patients?—Yes. If there have been patients, while I was there, who have got no money, they have been in there for some time, and they have transferred them as pauper patients.

19,834. Mr. Micklem: To some other institution, of course?—Yes. I remember two, during my time, who were removed from that place because they had no money.

19,835. Chairman: Now the first point that you have made to us this morning is that patients, on whose behalf special attendance was being paid for, did not get the attendance. Is that it?—They got the attendance.

19,836. But the attendant did not get the pay?—The attendant did not get the pay. That is what I told their relatives when they interviewed me. I was surprised at their paying the fee to the accountant, and the attendant not getting it, though giving them the best of his attention.

19,837. If you were told off to be a special attendant upon a patient, you did not get any special pay?—No, none whatsoever.

19,838. Is that your point?—That is the point.

19,839. That is a grievance about yourself rather than about the patients?—Very good. When you go to that place, you dare not say anything, and I thought I should like to bring the matter before you now for the benefit of the others in the institution.

19,840. But the point is that when you were told off to be a special attendant upon a patient, you did not get any special pay?—That is so.

19,841. What was your contract when you went there?—I went there, so far as the contract was concerned, on a certain wage, as a probationer. Then as you go up the scale, I was under the impression that I should get more money as I went along.

19,842. Why should you be specially paid if you are a special attendant?—You are in special and sole charge of a patient, and the patient's people pay two, three or four guineas extra fee for the special attendant to have the money, which he does not get.

19,843. But the patient got the benefit of your attendance?—Quite so; I gave him the best attention while I was there.

19,844. But, of course, as long as you were in special attendance upon that particular patient, you would not be available for general duties in the hospital?—There were things that want remedying. When you are paid to look after a special gentleman, you should give that special gentleman the best of your care from the time he rises in the morning till you hand him over to the man on night duty. At times you are taken away from that, and are doing all sorts of work. The patient wants you, and you have to push the patient aside and go away, which is not a proper thing in the institution. You should give the patient every minute of your care.

19,845. That is one matter. Will you tell us next anything else which you would like to bring to our notice?—I should like to bring this matter before you, as regards people paying specially for a patient. There was a man of the name of S., a highly educated man from Oxford. I used to pay attention to that man, and at times he used to tell me things, when his mind came back. He wanted to know when he was going out for drives. As he got along, that patient's drives used to fade away. His relations used to pay those people for that patient on specified days to go out for those drives, which he did not get, for the simple reason that the man did not know whether it was Monday or Tuesday. When some visitors came to N. they asked to see Mr. S.'s special room. I think it was a sort of a guardian, if I remember rightly. Now Mr. S. did not sleep in that very room that this gentleman was shown. The gentleman was taken into the hospital ward and shown this special room, but it was not the room that Mr. S. slept in. I had to take that very man to bed, and he had to go into an observation ward. He wanted to know why he was not going into the room that was prepared for him.

19,846. Was he never in that room?—I never knew him go into that room.

19,847. Who occupied the room?—Some other patient.

19,848. Do you say that, although he was paying for a special room, and although that special room was shown to his relatives as being his room, he did not occupy it?—He did not occupy that room.

19,849. He never occupied it?—I took him up to the observation ward upstairs.

19,850. Were you his special attendant?—No, I do not think he had a special attendant.

20 October, 1925.]

Mr. M.

[Continued.]

19,851. When you were acting as special attendant to any patient, did that patient have a separate room?—Certainly; I saw that he had it.

19,852. How was it that Mr. S.'s special attendant, if he had one, did not see that he had his room, too?—Of course, that is a matter for the officials.

19,853. That is the next point. Is there anything else you would like to bring before our notice?—Yes. Again, I do not think it is right that patients should sit down to Sunday dinner and have poultry come through, and not issued out to the patients; it is absolutely taken right away. The patients did not have it. I was one who wanted to strike against that. Those things were taken away from those patients, and that is a sort of thing I do not think ought to be allowed. There ought to be a strict rule that patients under all circumstances who are insane, or whatever they may be, should have the food that comes through. I should expect it if I was at home.

19,854. What do you mean by "the food that comes through"?—That is to say, the food is put through a sort of open space. It is put on the table, and the charge of the ward is supposed to cut that poultry up and issue it out to those patients who can use knives and forks; the others have it cut up in a sort of mince. But it is not issued out to them; it is all taken away.

19,855. Do you suggest that the things are brought on to the sideboard and then that somebody goes through the motions of carving up portions, and the portions, having been carved up, are removed and not given to the patients?—They are not given to the patients; or perhaps they have not carved the chicken up at all.

19,856. It is just exhibited?—I do not think they show the patients. It is a thing that wants remedying. When the patients sit there and are expecting their ordinary course which is put through, that is a thing which wants absolutely remedying.

19,857. Earl Russell: Where did he get the mince that he substituted for the chicken?—There is so much mince comes in in a tureen, and they make that mince do for the patients.

19,858. Mr. Micklem: What happens to the chickens, do you say?—They are taken out of the building.

19,859. Chairman: By the attendants?—By the attendants.

19,860. By your fellow attendants?—My so-called fellow attendants. I reported that. That was one of the things I mentioned to Mr. C.

19,861. If you reported that, was it stopped?—Again, Sir, there I was under an obligation.

19,862. You were there for quite a number of years. You saw things going on, and you should have reported them?—When I reported it to the charge and the chief attendant, it would get so far, and would not get any farther. If I did say anything about that, I knew very well I should be checked in very many ways there.

19,863. Was the attendant in charge, that is to say, the head attendant, sharing in the plunder?—The head attendant of the ward was sharing in the plunder and taking those special things out.

19,864. Did he live out?—He lived out.

19,865. Did he take these things home?—I know he took them out of the place; that is all I can say.

19,866. Earl Russell: I understand you to say in your proof that he shared the plunder. Did he take it all?—He might have shared it outside. I could not say that.

19,867. Chairman: You never got any?—No.

19,868. Did you live out?—I was a single man inside.

19,869. Was this the food of the patients?—That was the food of the patients.

19,870. Did none of the patients themselves complain?—Well, you see, one particular patient named Mr. S. knew right from wrong, and he was put back towards that table. He was given one leg of that chicken. When I was asked who the other was to be issued out to, it was all rushed out and taken through a side door, and the other patients got a sort of a mince.

19,871. Was this known to the doctors?—I think, as far as my experience is concerned, birds of a feather flock together.

19,872. Do you mean by that that the doctors did know?—I should say so. I think, if I remember rightly, when I interviewed Dr. L. I told him that particular thing, and he said, "That is a recognised thing in places of that description," so I let the matter drop.

19,873. Now this point may be summarised in this way: You say that the food which was purchased, cooked and intended for the patients, did not reach the patients?—Everything was prepared, and it did not reach the patients. It was put on to the table. I saw it myself on various occasions; it happened many times, until I was removed from the ward.

19,874. I would rather like to understand the ceremony. The chickens are cooked and brought in and put on the sideboard?—Yes.

19,875. Then did somebody carve them up?—Yes, the charge of the ward.

19,876. In the sight of the patients, who were expecting to get a share?—Those who knew enough.

19,877. Then the chickens, having been carved up, I understand, were removed, and some other dish was brought in?—That is quite right, Sir.

19,878. What was the use of going through this idle ceremony of carving the chickens in the presence of the patients, if something else was brought in?—I should say it was to suit their purpose—if anyone should come in.

19,879. But if they were all "birds of a feather," as you described, what would it have mattered if the chief charge had come in, or if even the doctor (according to you) had come in?—I think as far as I could see it was a sort of line worked in with them. It has been done, and if the chief charge or the doctor comes through, which is once in a dozen times, it is cut up; and as soon as ever they know that the man has gone through, they go and do that sort of thing; or they do it before he comes, and he will come and say, "Is everything all right?" and they say, "Yes."

19,880. It only happens when chickens are on the menu?—They do not have a menu.

19,881. I mean to say, when chickens were the meal of the day. Did it only happen when there were chickens?—It happened with meat as well.

19,882. Earl Russell: And what was substituted for the meat; the mince in the tureen?—Yes, a sort of mince in the tureen.

19,883. Chairman: Were you the only one who did not share?—I do not know about the only one. There was a friend of mine who worked there, and who left about twelve months ago, and he and I used to be the two who were marked men.

19,884. Although you were marked men, you stayed there no less than seven or eight years?—This happened since the war. Before the war I did not take any steps in that direction, as the third charge there. I did what you may term the manual work.

19,885. What other things happened at this institution which you think we ought to know about?—A patient of the name of Mr. T. was knocked about by an attendant named S., who was discharged from there.

19,886. The attendant was?—Yes.

19,887. How did he come to be discharged?—Because he liked his drink, and he was not a fit man for the work in a place of that description. I think complaints did get to the medical superintendent, if I remember rightly, and he got discharged.

19,888. He was not a suitable person?—That is it.

19,889. With regard to this assault that took place on Mr. T., did it take place in your presence?—Yes, in my presence, in the bathroom of the hospital ward.

20 October, 1925.]

Mr. M.

[Continued.]

19,890. Will you please describe what you saw?—All that I saw of the incident with S. was this: the patient did not know whether he was to get into the bath or not, but S. got so impatient that he hit the patient, and the patient swerved from the bath; and there was a sort of gas fixture on the bath, and a kettle, and the patient's head caught the spout of the kettle.

19,891. Did he give him a shove, in other words?—A shove or a push. There was not much in it, because he went with such a force, and he lost himself.

19,892. Earl Russell: Was it a shove or a push or a blow?—I should say it was a blow, because just as I was going in he hit the patient like that—(describing). The patient was knocked right off the bath, and he caught his head against the spout of the kettle. I remember that we had to call Dr. P.'s attention to that case.

19,893. Chairman: What was told to the doctor, and what did the doctor do?—This attendant sent me round to fetch Dr. P.

19,894. The same attendant who had given him the blow asked you to fetch the doctor?—Yes, because of the blood. The charge attendant was nowhere about. I went to fetch the doctor, and when I came back the charge attendant was there and the door was closed. You are not allowed, unless the charge attendant authorises you, to speak to the doctor. He took my arm and said: "You are to keep there and you are to say nothing."

19,895. You got the doctor. First of all, was S. the man's name?—Yes.

19,896. Did you hear S. giving an account of what had happened?—The only thing that S. said was that the patient had slipped when he got into the bath. I heard S. say that.

19,897. Are you quite sure he did not slip?—I know that patient never slipped from that bath.

19,898. Was he a difficult patient to manage?—He was and he was not. He was rather difficult to get into the bath, admitted.

19,899. How could you get a man into a bath if he would not go into it?—With their stupidity, they put one foot in, and you have to lift the other up. But I do not remember this patient ever doing that sort of thing, because he would go straight into the bath.

19,900. Had he refused to go into the bath that morning?—I do not think he refused at all.

19,901. Then what was the object of S.'s behaviour?—I expect he lost himself.

19,902. Why?—I should say he was under the influence of drink.

19,903. You think he was drunk that morning?—I should say he was, because that is the particular point I think those men got their discharge for.

19,904. If he was drunk, it was rather odd of him to ask you to send for the doctor?—To put that into a nutshell, as regards "drunk," I think he would drink a vat of beer.

19,905. He did ask you to get the doctor, and, of course, the doctor would see that he was drunk?—I should say that he ought to have done so, but whether he did or not I do not know. I did not ask Dr. P. that.

19,906. Was it soon after that that the attendant was dismissed?—No; he ran on for some considerable time.

19,907. For how long?—This happened before the war; he served through the war, and came back after the war, and that is when he got discharged.

19,908. Mr. Jowitt: Did this happen in the morning?—No; evening time.

19,909. Chairman: Do you think that Mr. T. had refused to go into his bath on this occasion?—As I said before, I do not think Mr. T. did refuse to get into the bath, from the way in which he behaved when I bathed the patient myself.

19,910. How near were you when the incident happened?—I should say about as far as I am from you.

19,911. Two or three yards, shall we say?—Yes, somewhere thereabouts.

19,912. That was an incident that happened before the war?—Yes.

19,913. Did you make any comment or report upon it?—As I said before, being a probationer I had to see things and close my eyes for the simple reason of my berth.

19,914. Suppose there had not been this kettle there on the bath, would the patient have been hurt at all?—No, I do not think he would; he would perhaps have fallen against the wall. If the kettle had not been there, there was a probability of his striking the gas fixture.

19,915. That is what caused the cut, I suppose?—It was the kettle; he bled very, very much.

19,916. That is an incident which happened before 1914. Are there any other things which you wish to put on record?—Yes, there is another case of ill-treatment, to a patient named N. They tell me in the institution—where rumours will go round—that he is a very, very wealthy man; he is in the refractory ward, and to see that patient you would never think he was a wealthy man. Again they say that this patient is so wealthy that he should have a special attendant, or they would pay for a special attendant. He is rather an awkward patient, admitted; very awkward; but let him have his way. When he goes to bed, he would walk a certain distance and back again; I do not think he would do any harm. He is at times mischievous, but I have seen attendants hit him on the back of the neck, and hit him very much indeed.

19,917. Why did they do that?—I suppose the attendant found that the patient was obstinate, as you might term it; he had the most irritating way of going to the door and back again, and I expect the attendant wanted to get him to bed. That has sometimes happened in the daytime, and I have seen the attendant hit the patient on the back of the neck.

19,918. Why did they strike him, do you think?—I do not know; I should say again that they lost themselves; I do not think it is a right thing.

19,919. You mean the patient's conduct was irritating?—He did not irritate the patients; he irritated the attendant, and that is what made him strike him.

19,920. Did that happen often?—Once in the bedroom, or twice in the bedroom, if I remember rightly, and I might say a third time in the bedroom; and at other times I have seen him downstairs, but it was done when there was no one about.

19,921. Did you interfere?—No, not at all.

19,922. Did you ever strike him?—No, no.

19,923. Who was it that struck him in the way that you have indicated—do you remember the name of the person?—I think the two persons are there now: one is attendant T. and the other attendant R.

19,924. What sort of men were they?—If I had my way as a medical superintendent, I should check them in all sorts of ways, and tell them to do all sorts of things myself; but they told me they were not engaged there as attendants, but that they were engaged as athletes, and that just suits the medical superintendent.

19,925. I am afraid we do not quite understand that answer. My question was, what sort of men were they? I gather from you that you think they ought not to be there any longer?—I should not think so, Sir.

19,926. What was wrong with them? Were they cruel, or were they negligent?—I do not think they should do that sort of thing. They are not engaged there to knock a man about; they are engaged to do their work, the same as other men. If they were all alike in N. it would be a jolly good place.

19,927. Did they strike any other patients?—No, I have never seen them do so.

19,928. Mr. Mickle: What was it that irritated them in this case, Mr. M.?—I should say that the man lost himself on the spur of the moment.

20 October, 1925.]

Mr. M.

[Continued.]

19,929. I mean what was irritating them?—As I said before, he would walk to the bed and then walk back again. As you took the patients upstairs to bed, you took them up there like a flock of sheep.

19,930. And he would come back?—He would come back; he would walk up four or five stairs, and then come back again, but if you let the man alone he would be all right. He so irritated these attendants, because he did not go straight to his bed, that they struck the patient.

19,931. Earl Russell: What do you mean by your last remark, "engaged as athletes"? That is quite beyond me.—It may be that after the war these things have changed altogether, but during my time there these attendants, R. and T., were in a ward where I was, and I was taking then a post as second charge. When the charge was off duty I took the post of assistant charge, and these men talk to you in various parts of the institution; they do not care. Dr. R. knew that these men were very good at hockey; I could be the same myself, if I had the practice. These men say: "We are not attendants; we are here as athletes."

19,932. Chairman: A sort of games master?—That is quite so, and the patients are neglected. I have been in a ward when the bell has rung. I cannot go and answer that bell, because it is not my place to leave 30 patients there. If anything happens to those patients, what am I to do?

19,933. But when you became deputy charge, you then had direct access to the doctor, had you not?—Quite so.

19,934. If you saw anything going wrong, did you not tell the doctor?—I did.

19,935. And what happened?—He said he would see the chief attendant about it. Whether he did so or not, of course, I do not know.

19,936. Mr. Jowitt: What did you tell the doctor?—I told the doctor that I was here alone, and it was not a proper thing to leave a nurse in an institution like that alone. Those men who should have been in the ward, perhaps three or four of them, would be up on the cricket ground, if it was the cricket season.

19,937. Did you make any complaint to the doctor about these men?—I did not say that. You see, you are under rather a funny restriction—very, very funny.

19,938. Chairman: Do you mean to say that when they ought to have been in attendance in the wards they were away in the playing fields?—To put that more clearly, they were detailed off for it; they did not go on their own orders.

19,939. Mr. Snell: That is to say, they were playing with patients?—I do not think there would be many patients playing there.

19,940. Chairman: Still, that was their duty, to be on the playing fields?—Yes.

19,941. Your complaint is that under the arrangements of this place you were left alone while the attendants were away on the playing fields?—That is so.

19,942. How many people had you under your charge when you were left alone?—Sometimes 20 or 30, and sometimes, in the hospital, 20.

19,943. One ward?—One ward. The hospital ward is a ward where there are dormitories.

19,944. How long would you be in sole charge?—From half-past two to five o'clock or half-past five, or when they thought fit to come in.

19,945. Had you any assistants under you?—No. They were my assistants, supposed to be under me.

19,946. But they had been detailed off to the playing fields?—Quite so.

19,947. If you had wanted assistance could you have got it?—There were no bells to ring for anyone else. You would have to open a door, and, as you saw them pass by, tell them.

19,948. Now, in the whole period you were there, about seven or eight years, are the incidents you have told us about—Mr. T. and the bathroom, and Mr. N. when he would not go to bed—the only cases of ill-usage you can recall, or can you remember any others that we should know about?—No, I do not think I can; only one minor one, in self-defence.

19,949. Is it worth going into?—Well, I do not think I need go into it, because it was a sort of protection on the charge's part.

19,950. You mean he was assaulted, was he?—When the patient was well he was very nice, but when he had these attacks he did go for attendant T., and attendant T. retaliated; that is the only other one.

19,951. Of course, you will agree that it is not proper for an attendant to retaliate at all, but he must protect himself?—That is so.

19,952. Do you say he did more than was necessary to protect himself?—Yes, I think he did.

19,953. Now, apart from these three matters, because we will call that a third, what would you say was the character and conduct of the attendants in this institution, those that you saw yourself and that you associated with?—As regards their conduct, the only misconduct is what I have seen them do, knock the patients about. As regards anything else, I have never seen them do it.

19,954. Then, when you talk of knocking the patients about, are you still referring to the incidents in regard to Mr. T. and Mr. N.?—Quite so.

19,955. At other times, apart from those occasions, were they kind to the patients?—Yes. As regards S., I do not think he had a kind act in him at all, but the others did kindnesses to the patients at times.

19,956. Now, may we pass to something else. Have you any other matters to refer to—for instance, what about the food?—The food is very inferior.

19,957. Of course, that may mean a good deal. Some people talk about food in hotels being inferior, which is very much better than we get at home?—I might say, Mr. Chairman, that if I paid the money as a patient in an institution like N., I should expect different food from what the patients got there. I looked after a Mr. W., a man who made a massive sum of money over photography, and that particular man would not have anyone else but me to look after him. I was always going up to the steward and complaining about his food, because it was not proper food to put before him. I was his special attendant, and I used to go out of the hospital, by his permission, and fetch bread in, because the bread was very, very bad bread. I told him myself when in his private room that he must pull himself together and tell the doctor himself. He did so, and afterwards they took notice of it. I used to go every day at half-past two round to the bakery and get a little loaf, and that satisfied Mr. W.; I worked out his menu in a book myself, and by doing that he got jolly good food, but before that he did not. Other patients who paid as much money as Mr. W. did not get such good food as I used to fetch from the lift on the tray.

19,958. Had you to pay for that food which you got, or was it included in his weekly charge?—It came into his weekly charge.

19,959. Sir David Drummond: Do you know what this particular gentleman paid?—Roughly I should say somewhere about—I think his brother who lives in Ireland told me when he came to see him—eight to nine or ten guineas a week. That would be including the special attendant. I do not think that I ever asked about it, really. My big friend, Mr. B., of N., had 19 years' experience in the hospital. He was a devoted servant of those people, and he himself has told me more, since he got pushed out of the hospital within half an hour's time, than I ever did know while I was there. He was the chief charge there for many, many years.

19,960. Sir Humphry Rolleston: Why was he turned out? What was the reason of his being ejected?—That was the time when there was a dispute with the hospital. The matron is a most beautiful woman, and Mr. B. is a most beautiful man for the patients; and they both got pushed out; they were jolly good at their work. It is the same in these institutions as it is when you are in a home: if you have got a man you like, it helps to build the patients up. It was just the same with the matron there, and Mr. B., the chief attendant. There was some sort of mysterious thing going on with the medical superintendent, and Mr. B. was discharged in a very short time.

20 October, 1925.]

Mr. M.

[Continued.]

19,961. Mr. Jowitt: Did you ever hear why these two beautiful people were pushed out in half an hour's time?—Because they linked in Dr. M., who was the assistant superintendent. Dr. R. was the superintendent, and while he was away Dr. M., if I remember rightly what Mr. B. said, was putting forward the rights of the patients as regards money; and I expect, owing to their own affairs, they fell out; and Dr. M. got up a paper, which was a round robin, and I ran round the ward with it, and it was carried, and those men were instantly dismissed. It was a big thing that Dr. L. wanted to get hold of, if I remember rightly. It was somewhere about four years ago.

19,962. Chairman: Now in the case of those patients whom you saw not getting sufficient food, did their relatives or friends come and see them at any time?—The only case I know of was that of Mr. W. I mentioned it to his son, and he said to me: "Will you see to it for me? I cannot go into it," so I carried it out. As regards Mr. T., Mr. Justice C. came when I was his special attendant, and Mr. Justice C. said that Mr. T. had told him that he had been knocked about. I asked Mr. T. in the presence of Mr. Justice C. whether I was the man who had knocked him about, and he said "No." He would not tell them who had knocked him about. If it had been done, it must have been done during the night, when he was in an observation ward. Mr. Justice C. asked me if there were any other things that I wanted to complain about, and I said, "Yes; Mr. T. keeps complaining about the food," and he said, "I am going shooting, and I will send him a brace of pheasants." Of course, Mr. T. at that time did say things which Mr. Justice C. listened to, but there was no truth in them. He himself at times did have good food, but it was immaterial to him whether it was good or bad.

19,963. Do you mean to say that this patient in your hearing made complaints which were quite unfounded?—Yes, at times.

19,964. And you knew the things he was saying were not true?—Yes. His food was quite all right, in the condition in which the patient was.

19,965. Mr. Jowitt: Did he ever complain about you?—No. They are rather complicated gentlemen in those places. I was with him for 16 or 18 months, or longer than that—two years. Of course, he passed away.

19,966. Chairman: Were there any visits by visiting justices, or the house committee or the Commissioners while you were at N.?—Yes, the Commissioners came.

19,967. Will you tell us about the visits?—When B.W. notified N., everything was all prepared, and the patients were put in their best clothes, and washed, and everything was all kept calm. That is the time that I remarked to the charge attendant: "Oh! The food has come through all right now the Commissioners are here."

19,968. How did you know the Commissioners were coming?—Because the chief charge attendant's duty is to come round and put the wards on guard.

19,969. Mr. Snell: His duty? Is he ordered to do it?—Yes, by the medical superintendent.

19,970. Chairman: What sort of order is given?—The order is that if things go on in the usual way, and they did not notify them, patients would be out in the yards, and things would be neglected, but when they knew the Commissioners were coming, no parole patient was allowed to go out, and everybody was kept in the ward; everything worked in a nice, smooth manner until the Commissioners had gone.

19,971. I thought one of the objects of the Commissioners coming was to see all the patients; and therefore it would be quite proper to arrange that they were not away?—They do see all the patients, but they allow them so much time. They have about three or four doctors at the side of the chief attendant, and the patients want to say a lot to the Commissioners. What happens is they do not get near enough to listen; but when they have gone the patients say: "I wish they had let me say that, and I wish they had let me say this." They allow them a certain time, and there have been occasions when they have given them five or ten minutes' interview, but not many.

19,972. Sir Humphry Rolleston: What warning did you get of the approach of the Commissioners—was it the evening before?—I think they did know about some of the visits the evening before, but we should know somewhere about ten o'clock. They may know before us, but the wards are never notified much before half-past ten or eleven. I have known the patients to be out in the courts and gardens, and to be all fetched in.

19,973. Chairman: What was the nature of the order? Was the order this: "The Commissioners are coming, and you must have all the patients ready and in proper order to show the Commissioners," or was it a sinister order that you were to get things arranged in a way they were never in at any other time, in order to deceive the Commissioners?—That is it.

19,974. Who gave the orders to deceive the Commissioners?—That comes through the fountain head—through the medical superintendent.

19,975. You understand what I am putting to you? It is one thing to issue an order saying that the Commissioners are coming round, and the patients are to be produced. It is another thing to try and give an impression of matters that does not exist at ordinary times. Do you suggest that the instructions you got were to try and deceive the Commissioners as to the true state of your wards?—I should say that would be so.

19,976. Why do you say that?—Because at other times things do not go on that way. I have put a man at a certain place, and that man would be there the whole of the time till the Commissioners came through. At other times you would be away from that ward, and the patients would be wanting to know why you cannot keep them amused; you have got to keep on with some domestic duty. That is the way I look at it, as regards the Commissioners coming.

19,977. But when the Commissioners came were the patients dressed differently from what they were when the Commissioners were not there?—Yes, a good many of them in the various wards; refractory ward patients and hospital ward patients. No. 1 patients, of course, are what they call the gentlemen patients. They dress themselves and put on their own clothes; but the refractory ward and the hospital ward patients do not.

19,978. Mr. Snell: Were they specially washed?—Again with a routine like that a No. 1 ward patient would have a bath every day. A refractory ward or hospital ward patient would have a bath only once a week.

19,979. Chairman: Apparently as regards most of the patients it made no difference whether the Commissioners were coming or not, but you say that some of the patients got a bath and were specially dressed because the Commissioners were coming?—Yes.

19,980. Mr. Jowitt: They must have had a bath in the middle of the day, then?—No. If they knew the Commissioners were coming in the morning, and there was a patient who had been neglected during

20 October, 1925.]

Mr. M.

[Continued.]

other times, they would give that patient a special bath.

19,981. At what time, though?—They would do it while the Commissioners came through the ward.

19,982. At what time of day did you know it done?—Sometimes they used to visit the ladies in the morning—

19,983. What time of day did you know a patient given a special bath?—Three o'clock and eleven o'clock.

19,984. Chairman: It must have been rather difficult to have got a lot of them bathed at the same time?—They would not bath them all; they would bath two or three; the others would have to get a sponge and sponge round their faces, and brush their hair.

19,985. There was not anything very wrong about that, was there?—No, but if they do it one day, they should do it every day.

19,986. Then you suggest that patients were being neglected in this institution?—Yes.

19,987. What was the nature of the neglect?—I think it is more hygienic to give the patients a bath every morning. There are three baths in the hospital ward. A patient asks for a bath, and if I asked the charge attendant about it, he tells me to mind my own business and get on with my own work; and the patient is given a sort of dab with a sponge, and they have not perhaps been accustomed to it.

19,988. Have you any observations to make about the detention of persons in N. who, in your opinion, should not have been there?—Well, I should like to bring one man's name forward, a Mr. B.

19,989. Is that the only name you want to bring forward?—I do not think I can think of any other.

19,990. When did you last see Mr. B.?—I have left there now this last 3½ years.

19,991. Did you think he was quite sane?—I should think so, from what I had seen of him.

19,992. Were you able to judge?—Well, I am not a medical superintendent, but I do not think Mr. B. ought to have been in there.

19,993. Sir Ernest Hiley: Is he in there now?—Yes, he has been in there for years. He is a man with a memory, and can talk to you about matters, and can tell you all the news.

19,994. Chairman: What was he said to be suffering from?—I did not notice the diagnosis of the man, but when Dr. R. came in he got very, very excited.

19,995. Why?—Because he has been there so long—he gets that way. When he is by himself with the attendant he is all right, but whenever he sees the medical superintendent or the Commissioners come in he gets rather highly excited.

19,996. Was he under your charge?—I have had him under my charge down in Wales.

19,997. Was that on leave?—No, that is their summer place.

19,998. Did you bring his case before the medical superintendent?—Well, you see, again Sir, the medical superintendent never asked me; they never ask you those things.

19,999. But if you think that a patient is quite sane, and he is under your charge, do you not say to somebody in authority: "This man has recovered now; he ought to get out"?—But that is a thing they do not allow you to say. They never asked me, all the time I was at N. or down in Wales, about the patient at all.

20,000. How do the patients ever come to be released, then?—That is when the relatives interview the patients, and in discussion with the doctor.

20,001. Had Mr. B. no relatives?—I do not think he has now. He did have when he was put in. He was put in at P. Asylum, and then he was transferred from there to N.

20,002. Is that the only case you came across in your experience of a man who you thought should not be there?—I do not know of any others.

20,003. Sir David Drummond: I suppose you cannot tell us what was the nature of his mental trouble?—No.

20,004. He was not classified?—I think they gave him a classification, but I do not know what he was.

20,005. Was he depressed?—No; he was a very bright man.

20,006. In what state was he when he became excited, when the superintendent came in?—He said: "Why was he put there? Why could not he go and work for his living?" and all this, that and the other. I used to hear him say that to the medical superintendent.

20,007. Chairman: Did you ever see his case book?—He never had a case book while I was there.

20,008. Are there any other matters that you would like to bring before our notice in regard to neglect of patients that you observed yourself?—No, I do not think there is. I think I might say that there was a suicidal case, and that was negligence. The reason I bring that up is because I say it was negligence on their part. This man had a razor, and if the man had done his work as he ought to have done (what has become of him I do not know; he went abroad), that patient would have been alive now, I should say, but it was absolutely negligence on the attendant's part—letting things lie about; but since that time they have remedied that. All the attendants have to go down and shave in a special place, and keep their razors locked up. What made me bring that case up before you is this. I was attending upon Mr. T., and I had to go before the medical superintendent. He knew I was a special attendant, and could not be in two places at once, so I was washed out of that case; but if the attendants were to do their work a little better, and the medical superintendent were more strict, I do not think that would have happened, but they have remedied things like this.

20,009. Now, Mr. M., you have come here this morning as an attendant who has had considerable experience. We are anxious to have from you all you wish to tell us. Is there anything else you would like to tell us, beyond what you have already told us this morning, which you think we ought to know?—No, I do not think there is.

20,010. Earl Russell: I want to ask you, Mr. M., a little more about Mr. B. I understand that you do not know anything about what his illness was?—No, I do not.

20,011. You have not seen his case book or heard anything about it?—No.

20,012. But what you say is that in your opinion he is kept there because he knows too much about the place—not because he is insane?—Well, I have talked to the man in the garden and I have found him a man in whom I could not see any difference at all. He has asked me "Why am I kept here?" and I have said: "I do not know why you are kept here." He is a man whom they do not allow to see things, because he would expose them.

20,013. You are a responsible man, Mr. M., are you not?—Since I have left there. As regards notification of a case, I think all nurses should be notified of the conditions of a case.

20,014. Do not you think it is a very serious thing to take it upon yourself to say, when you really know nothing about his mental condition, that he is kept there simply because, if he were let out, he would say too much about the place? You are taking upon yourself a great responsibility in saying that, are you not?—I might be, as far as that is concerned, but he is a well-behaved man, keeps himself clean and everything.

20,015. You go on in the same paragraph of your précis to say: "He always behaves in a thoroughly sane and rational manner." Did you ever say this, that he was kept there simply because he would know too much, and not because he was insane—did you say that?—I would not say that he was not insane. He knows a lot about the place.

20 October, 1925.]

Mr. M.

[Continued.]

20,016. Chairman: Did you ever say to any person outside this institution that that man was there because he knew too much, and was not allowed to be out?—I did say that.

20,017. To whom?—I do not know whether I told Mr. C. that.

20,018. Earl Russell: Anyhow, you say in your précis that he behaves in a thoroughly sane and rational manner; and do you remember that a short time ago you told us whenever he saw the doctor he got excited?—That is the only point about him.

Earl Russell: That is unfortunate, is it not?

20,019. Mrs. Mathew: I just want to ask you this, Mr. M. You say in paragraph 56: "Amongst others who were there when I left I would name Messrs. B., M., McE., C., B., W., H., and several others," and in the paragraph before that you say: "In my opinion there are a number of patients detained at N. who should long since have been given their discharge." Are these others dead, or why do you not say that they are now wrongfully detained?—Would you mention those names again, please?

20,020. Perhaps you would like to read them, would you (handing précis to witness)?—Thank you. Mr. M. has gone out, Mr. C. has gone out, Mr. B. has gone out, Mr. W. has gone out, Mr. McE. is still there. If I have put Mr. McE. in, that man is quite all right; he is a nice old gentleman; I see no difference in the man. I myself think that he ought to be given a chance in a home, to see if he could be trusted there to go back to his people. That is why I state that case. The same with Mr. M.; I saw Mr. M. some months ago; he is out of N. Mr. H.—that is Captain H.—is also out. That only leaves Mr. B.

20,021. Where are they?—They are all discharged from the hospital.

20,022. How did you happen to see them all?—I have not seen them all. The two men I have seen are Mr. M. and Mr. C.

20,023. Is Mr. M. leading an ordinary life now?—Yes.

20,024. And Mr. C.?—And Mr. C. He was the Mayor of B., and he has gone back to B.

20,025. Chairman: These people have all left since you were an attendant there?—Since I made this statement.

20,026. How do you know what befalls them, after you have ceased to be an attendant?—The reason I know that is because a companion of mine goes to my friend at E. B. and tells him all the news. I was over there a week ago, and he told me that these men were discharged from N.

20,027. Did you ask about these men?—Mr. B. told me all about them. He said to me: "Do you know that Mr. M. has been discharged?"

20,028. How does Mr. B., whose services were dispensed with, continue his interest in the institution?—Of course, as regards taking an interest in it, this companion goes over there and tells him.

20,029. Sir Humphry Rolleston: You resigned, did you not?—I resigned.

20,030. Did you get a testimonial when you left?—Yes, I did. I do not know whether I have got it here. If I had not given in my resignation, I should perhaps have got served the same as the others. I wanted a character. That is what Dr. R. gave me (handing document to Sir Humphry Rolleston).

20,031. Mr. Jowitt: What have you done since you left?—Most unfortunately, I cannot get any stationary berth at all.

20,032. Have you had any temporary work?—Only at times. Mr. B. has got a nursing home, and I am relieving him for this week with a case.

20,033. Is that all you have done?—I have had several private cases.

20,034. You look after cases?—Yes.

20,035. Chairman: Why did you resign, Mr. M.?—When I came back from my holidays, all this disturbance happened, rather unawares to me; and several of the attendants said in my presence that I was a marked man, and I wanted to know why I was a marked man; and since Mr. B. left and I have left, Mr. B. has said that Dr. R. said he had no use for little men in there; I was too popular with the patients.

20,036. But Dr. R. gives you a very good certificate there?—Yes, that is the most extraordinary part about it.

20,037. Mr. B. told you this after he had been discharged?—Yes.

20,038. Mr. Jowitt: May I just ask about these certificates? Are these copies of the certificates?—Yes, that is a copy.

Chairman: Thank you, Mr. M. I do not think we need detain you any further.

(The Witness withdrew.) •

(After a short adjournment.)

Mr. O., called and examined.

20,039. Chairman: Are you Mr. O.?—Yes.

20,040. I understand that you are here this afternoon to give us some of your experience while you were a mental patient?—Yes.

20,041. First of all, I should like a little account of yourself. Were you storeman for a builder's merchant at B.?—That is right.

20,042. And was it in July, 1920, that you had a nervous breakdown?—Yes, that is right.

20,043. Did you see your doctor?—Yes.

20,044. Was he your panel doctor?—Yes.

20,045. And what were you advised?—When I saw the panel doctor?

20,046. Yes?—He informed my wife that it would be advisable for me to go away for a rest and change.

20,047. Were you able to do that?—I went to C. Infirmary.

20,048. That is near B., is it?—Yes, that is the B. guardians' infirmary.

20,049. Did you go there of your own free will, Mr. O.?—Yes.

20,050. For treatment?—To the infirmary?

20,051. Yes?—Well, there was nothing much to complain about the treatment there.

20,052. Did you go there for treatment?—I went there for rest. I do know exactly what I went there for. I did not stay long enough to have any treatment.

20,053. What did you think was wrong with you at the time?—A nervous breakdown—low-spirited. I had no strength and was very low.

20,054. Then it was on your application that you went to the infirmary?—Yes.

20,055. Now will you tell us about the infirmary? What ward were you put in there?—I was put in an isolated ward alone when I was first put there. I was restless and kept getting out of bed, and they had some difficulty in keeping me in bed. They put the porter of the infirmary to watch me and look after me; and after I had been there some little time, and I would not stay in bed, he tied me in bed one night, and he sat down by the fire, put his cloak round him and almost went to sleep, and told me, "You will find yourself somewhere else in a very short time," and I then went to F.

20,056. How long were you at C. Infirmary?—From the Wednesday to the Tuesday.

20,057. Just inside a week?—Yes.

20 October, 1925.]

Mr. O.

[Continued.]

20,058. Earl Russell: Did he tie you unkindly at all, or just simply enough to hold you down?—Not particularly unkindly; of course, he was very rough; he tied my hand each side of the bed to stop me from getting out of bed.

20,059. Chairman: Would you say you had any cause to complain of the treatment you got at C.?—No.

20,060. Now from C. where did you go?—To F.

20,061. And that is at S.?—Yes.

20,062. That is a mental hospital?—Yes.

20,063. How did you come to go there?—Somebody certified me as insane; I do not know who it was.

20,064. Did you not see a doctor?—As far as I know, there was a doctor came in to see me. Three gentlemen came in; I could not say whether they were doctors or not; they came in to see me and asked me a few questions. I could not remember exactly the questions now. That is all that I can tell you.

20,065. As you know, Mr. O., you cannot be taken away to a mental hospital unless you have been seen by a doctor who gives a certificate?—Yes.

20,066. Now some doctor must have seen you, surely. Do not you remember any interview with a doctor?—No, I do not remember any interview with a doctor at all, no more than on the Sunday three gentlemen came in together, while I was lying in the bed in the infirmary.

20,067. Were you able to talk intelligently to them, do you think?—Yes; I was never in a state but what I could talk intelligently and knew everything that was going on.

20,068. Did these gentlemen speak to you?—Yes, they spoke as they came through, but I cannot remember the conversation now.

20,069. Do you remember seeing a doctor called Dr. D.?—No, not to my knowledge, not to know his name.

20,070. Do you remember what you said to the doctor?—No, I do not.

20,071. You see we have got the medical certificate before us, and the medical certificate says that you stated that you had committed a sin against God. Do you remember saying that?—Not in the infirmary, Sir.

20,072. And that you imagined that milk which was offered to you was poisoned?—Yes, that is right.

20,073. Did you say that?—That was my idea. By the taste of it I thought there was something wrong with it any way.

20,074. Do you know who those three gentlemen were?—No, I do not know; I could not say.

20,075. Do you know that one of them was a doctor?—No, I do not know. I do not remember seeing them afterwards.

20,076. Looking back on it, Mr. O., do you think you were fit to be at large at this time?—Yes, Sir.

20,077. How were you taken to F.?—In a taxicab with the porter of the workhouse with me, and I understood the other gentleman who went with me was a magistrate, a magistrate of C.

20,078. Did they tell you where you were going?—No, they did not.

20,079. Then where did you think you were going?—I guessed where I was going by what the porter said to me; and I might say that my wife, after she knew I was going (she was not acquainted that they were going to take me with them), made enquiries as to who certified me insane, but they would never inform her who it was. The chairman of the guardians told her he dare not divulge the name of the person who certified me insane.

20,080. If you knew where you were going, and you thought the gentleman who was with you was a magistrate, did you make any complaint to him about your being taken to this place?—No, Sir; in fact, I was so low at that time that I was not very particular what they did with me.

20,081. You did not care, I suppose?—No.

20,082. When you arrived at F. how were you received, and what was done with you?—I was taken to F., and they took away my clothes and put me in a cot bed.

20,083. That seems quite a sensible thing?—Yes, that is right.

20,084. Where did they put you to bed; in what ward?—In the infirmary ward.

20,085. Now we would like very much to know what sort of people you found yourself amongst there—can you remember?—Well, there were some very epileptic cases there who had fits at almost all times of the day and night; and there were about 32 or 34 beds, I suppose, in the ward.

20,086. Did you find that disturbing?—No, it did not disturb me particularly, because my complaint was that I could not sleep at all. I might say I was put in bed there, and, of course, I was restless, and I got out of bed there the same as I did at C.

20,087. But if you were suffering from sleeplessness did you not find it trying to be in a ward where there were epileptics?—Well, I did not find it very helpful.

20,088. Were there any noisy patients in the ward?—Rather, Sir; there was one especially who used to come from another ward. It was supposed to be an observation ward, and there were several patients put in there from another ward; and one in particular used to swear and was shouting and swearing almost up to nine or sometimes ten o'clock at night, a man they called by the name of R.

20,089. Did you not find it rather trying?—Yes, I found it rather trying.

20,090. Because if you were suffering from sleeplessness, I should have thought you wanted some quiet?—Of course, I did. I should never have been put in a place like that; in fact, the superintendent at F. told my wife that he did not know why I was sent there. A man by the name of H. told my wife, and had a conversation with my wife several times, and the superintendent there told her at different times that if I could only pull myself together I could go home, but he said he could not let me go home without the guardians' permission.

20,091. For the moment I want to find out a little more about your time in the infirmary ward. You say there were epileptic patients and noisy patients there. Did you complain about being placed with them?—No.

20,092. Why not?—Well, I do not know why not. There was no other place to put us; there was only one place there.

20,093. Do you think you would have recovered sooner if you had been put in a quieter place?—I could not say.

20,094. Is it the case that at this time you were really so ill that you did not care what was happening to you?—Yes, that was to a large extent my feeling.

20,095. Then you did not really resent being put in this ward?—No.

20,096. However, it was a noisy ward?—It was a noisy ward. There was one man particularly, in the next bed to me, who used to have fits of laughing, and who would keep on laughing almost the whole night.

20,097. Have you any complaint to make about the treatment you yourself got in the infirmary ward?—No, I have no particular complaint; the attendants there were very good to me. As far as I was concerned, they allowed me practically to do as I liked.

20,098. What about the food you got?—The food was very very thin—very bad.

20,099. What was wrong with it? Just tell us. We really want to know, Mr. O., how you fared when you were there?—In the first place, when I was in the bed, they fed me with an apology for milk sop, which was nothing more or less than a little margarine with some water put to it—an apology for milk. That did not taste very agreeable; and they threatened me that if I did not take it they would forcibly feed me with it, and, of course, I managed to get through part of it sometimes, but not very much.

20 October, 1925.]

Mr. O.

[Continued.]

20,100. Did you think it was poison?—No. I had no idea about it being poison.

20,101. What else did you get to eat?—A thick slice of bread and margarine. Mine at the time was cut in two slices—margarine for breakfast. For dinner—well, I do not know how to explain what the dinner was. Two days a week the dinner was what they called potato pie, some potato stuff, rind and all mixed together, and a bit of crust put along the top. S. pie they called it there; that was the dinner for two days a week. Another day, on Friday, it was as a rule fish, supposed to be fish, which generally amounted to one fresh herring. On another day a kind of thick soup with bacon rind, and various other comestibles in it which I hardly ever used to eat, just a mouthful of bread sometimes. I used to dip the bread in it and manage to get it down that way.

20,102. What was wrong with it; was it bad food?—It was not very tasty at any rate. There were perhaps three potatoes, and two of them were bad. I do not know whether you remember, but, of course, that year potatoes were very scarce. I hardly ever ate what they brought me at that time; but a Jap that was there used to wait at the side of my bed, and as soon as I finished, what I had put back, he would come and “scoff” the lot and eat it up.

20,103. How long were you in the infirmary ward at F.?—I was there all the time, except for just a little while when they put me upstairs to sleep, but I was in there practically the whole time.

20,104. Were you in bed all the time you were there?—No, I was not in bed all the time. As far as I remember, I was somewhere about six weeks or two months in bed before they gave me clothes, so that I could get up.

20,105. I think you were altogether at F. just over a year, from the 2nd November, 1920, to 17th November, 1921?—Yes, I went there on 2nd November and stayed there till 17th November.

20,106. Now, you were in the infirmary ward which you have described to us at first; and were you in the general wards of the institution later on, or were you in the infirmary ward the whole time?—I suppose to a certain extent I was privileged; they allowed me to stay in the infirmary ward practically all the time.

20,107. Now, Mr. O., you are a person who has had experience of this establishment, and we are anxious to know exactly what you have to report to us. What is your impression of the treatment which you got while you were there. What do you think of it?—Apart from the fact that the food was of very inferior quality, I do not know that I have got very much to complain of. As I say I was in such a state that I was not very particular what happened to me.

20,108. That is with regard to yourself. So far as you yourself were concerned, you really cannot say, apart from the food, that there was anything that you could complain of?—No.

20,109. But was there anything in the conduct of the establishment which you saw which you think we should hear about from you—anything which you think was wrong?—There was one thing which I think was wrong. The place was never inspected properly. The second night I was there, as I told you, I was restless, and I got out of bed and walked down the ward to the place where the night watchman was on duty, and he hustled me back to bed; and when the night watchman who walked round from ward to ward came in, they brought me a sleeping draught to drink, and because I would not swallow the sleeping draught, the attendant who was on duty struck me in the breast and I had a pain in the chest for several weeks afterwards.

20,110. If you were restless and wanted to wander about, was it not a good idea to give you a sleeping draught?—I suppose it was.

20,111. Why did you spit it out?—Because it was nasty, it scented the whole place.

20,112. When you spat it out, do you say the attendant struck you?—Yes.

20,113. How did he strike you?—He struck me with his fist in the chest.

20,114. Were you sitting up in bed at the time?—Yes.

20,115. Why do you think he struck you?—His temper, I suppose, Sir.

20,116. Because you would not take the sleeping draught?—That is right.

20,117. Did he strike you hard?—Fairly hard; I felt the pain there for several days afterwards.

20,118. Did you report it to the doctor?—No.

20,119. Why not?—I do not know. I did not see much use in it.

20,120. When did you next see the doctor after that?—The next day.

20,121. And did you not tell the doctor you had had a blow from one of the attendants?—No.

Earl Russell: How did you know it was not much use, if you never tried?

20,122. Chairman: What makes you say that?—I do not know at all, Sir.

20,123. Was the doctor sympathetic?—He was a very good doctor; he tried to buck me up, told me to look on the bright side, and all that sort of thing.

20,124. If he was talking to you in that encouraging way why did you not say “One of the men there struck me last night”?—I do not know why I did not.

20,125. Was there any mark on you?—No, I do not think there was any mark.

20,126. Was it with his open hand, or with his fist that he struck you?—With his fist.

20,127. Did he clench his fist and strike you?—Yes, a very severe blow.

20,128. Earl Russell: Do you mean to say it did not bruise at all?—I did not see any bruise at all.

Earl Russell: I should have thought a hard blow such as you have described would have bruised you.

20,129. Chairman: Were you in a nightshirt at the time?—Yes.

20,130. If he struck you at all you would expect some kind of bruise to show, would you not?—Yes, I suppose there would have been if it was actually hard.

20,131. Was there any other occasion while you were at F. that anybody struck you, or tried to strike you?—No.

20,132. That is the only incident?—That is the only one.

20,133. And it took place when you were spitting out this sleeping draught?—That is right.

20,134. Did you see anything else at F.—anything done to any of the other patients?—I saw several patients struck there. I might say that this particular attendant was not there so very long afterwards. There was an old doctor that was put in bed there, and there was a complaint made against the attendant; the patient was put in bed at night and the next morning he died. The doctor came and asked me a question as to whether I heard anything because they knew I was awake all night, and I said: “Well, I heard some smacking going on.” It was some distance from me down the room, in fact, eight or ten beds from where I was. There was an inquiry held, and he had notice.

20,135. Was it the same attendant?—The same attendant.

20,136. And that attendant was dismissed, was he?—Yes, that is right.

20,137. How long after he had struck you was it?—I could not say how long it was after he had struck me; some little time.

20,138. Apart from that attendant who was subsequently dismissed, did you see anything wrong on the part of any of the other attendants?—No, I did not. There was a night attendant who took his place, who came on duty; I saw him strike a patient.

20,139. Under what circumstances?—Because he struck another patient. This patient R. was sitting in the bed and kept shouting and swearing and using obscene language, and the patient in the next bed to him got out of bed and struck him, and then the night attendant deliberately came and struck this patient. His name was M. C. I saw him distinctly, because I was only about two beds from him; he struck him in the face, struck him in the eye. I might say that this man was restless and he used to wake up about four or five in the morning and continually keep talking. He was a Roman Catholic and used to say: "In the name of the Father, in the name of the Son, and in the name of the Holy Ghost," and keep on interrupting the other patients; and the attendant used to take him out of bed and put him out of the ward in the dark for the remainder of the night. Then I saw this same attendant very much ill-use a man by the name of G. He had a controversy with him when he came in; he was not in that ward really, he came there to sleep from another ward; he had some altercation with him as he came into the ward and threatened the man what he would do, and this same patient G. got out of bed and picked up the pot.

20 October, 1925.]

Mr. O.

[Continued.]

20,140. Were these incidents you have spoken of in connection with an attendant other than the one that was dismissed?—Yes, this was the other one.

20,141. A different man?—Yes, the one that took his place.

20,142. Was he no better than the previous one?—He was no better in that case, if anybody upset him in that way. He did not interfere with me at all; in fact, nobody, with the exception of that one time, ever interfered with me in any way.

20,143. How far were you able at that time to take notice of what was going on around you?—I was conscious all the time, I knew everything that was going on, I was never unconscious the whole time. When I was at the guardians' infirmary I was rather delirious, but after I went to F. I knew everything that was going on; I was not unconscious in the least.

20,144. Now tell us about the visits of the doctor; how often did the doctor come round?—The doctor came round every day.

20,145. Did you see him every day?—Yes.

20,146. Did he speak to you every day?—Not every day, he usually just came and said a word or two and had a look at me.

20,147. Had you a chance of speaking to him if you wanted to tell him anything?—Yes, I had the chance of speaking to him.

20,148. Have you any complaint to make about the doctor?—No, I have no complaint.

20,149. When he did speak to you, was he kind?—All right.

20,150. Now about your ordinary daily life at F.; were there any things that struck you as unsatisfactory?—Not particularly, except one thing which I thought was very unsatisfactory, that oftentimes there were only about two attendants on duty for somewhere about 60 patients.

20,151. You thought there was not enough staff?—Understaffed.

20,152. Did anything ever happen because there was not enough staff—was there any trouble or any row?—There would have been one night, the same night as G. picked up the pot; there were two attendants who were off duty, but they did not go out, and when this man got obstreperous in this way, this night watchman gave his keys to the patient in the next bed, and asked him to call the other two attendants, and the two came in and the four together put this man in a single room.

20,153. Now what about the lavatory arrangements?—They were very unsatisfactory indeed.

20,154. What was wrong with them?—There was only one place, and very often it was overflowing with water; and if you wanted to go in there, there was only one lavatory for the whole of these patients that were in there. Sometimes it was stopped up, it would not flush at all; and you had to go in there in your naked feet on cold tiles, just up two steps just outside the infirmary ward where we were, that is No. 5A ward.

20,155. You are speaking of the water closet just now. What arrangements were there for washing?—There were about three basins in the bathroom; and I might say here that if there was a dirty case, as a rule the attendants used to take a dirty case in there and put him in the bath, and oftentimes the water was scarcely lukewarm; sometimes it was a cold bath.

20,156. How often had you a bath, Mr. O.?—I do not think I had a bath; they did not enforce it in my case, but the rule was to have a bath once in three weeks, but I cannot remember how many weeks I went without a bath.

20,157. Did you not want one?—I did not want one particularly.

20,158. Did they give you a wash in bed—sponge you over?—They did not do it, I did it myself. They brought me a basin. I did not have a bath while I was in bed at all.

20,159. When you were up, how did you do?—When I was up I used to go in the bathroom and wash myself; there were three little wash basins in this bathroom where the bath was.

20,160. How many patients were there to use these three basins?—I could not say exactly the number, because these were infirmary patients and most of them belonged out in No. 5 ward, and they were supposed to go and wash in the other places outside.

20,161. This is the best way to test it: could you always get to the basin when you wanted it, or were there others waiting for it?—I could get to it by waiting. One patient used to do some of the work in the ward, and it was very difficult sometimes; I had to wait sometimes to get a wash there.

20,162. How did you know what happened in the bathroom, if you never had a bath yourself, Mr. O.?—I knew because there were chairs just outside the bathroom, and we were allowed to sit in these chairs when we got up, and occasionally of course I used to do a little dusting. I used to dust round the beds and occasionally try and polish the floor, but I had no strength for the work. The attendant used to tell me, "You want to get hold of the scrubbing brush and scrub some of the rooms out," but I was unable to do the work. I could see that these men were dirty cases, and I saw them taken in there, and I saw them brought out; in fact they were sometimes brought in there while I was in there washing; I used to go in there and wipe up the pots at night.

20,163. Were there any side rooms in the ward you were in?—I forget now whether there were four or five side rooms.

20,163A. What about them?—One of them where the Jap slept was simply like a case; it was called a room and they used to put a hair bed on the floor and what they call a canvas rug. There were two little bedsteads in one or two of the others.

20,164. Were they used much?—Yes, they were always occupied; if there was an obstreperous case they used to take the patient out of those rooms and put the other case in. I have seen this Jap brought out. A man by the name of B. came there one night, and there was no other room to put him in, and they brought this Jap out of his room; it was no better than a pigsty; there were no urinal arrangements at all; whatever was done was done about on the floor, and this man B. was put in the same room as that Jap was that night. In fact he stayed there; the Jap was put in the same bed. I never heard him speak at all. The patients used to say he could speak English, but I never heard him

20 October, 1925.]

Mr. O.

[Continued.]

I saw him strike one of the patients one day, the Japanese patient.

20,165. Was he violent?—Not particularly. I saw him strike the attendant once when he wanted to undress him; apart from that there was nothing very serious the matter with him.

20,166. Do you remember any official people visiting F. when you were there?—The only people I ever remember visiting there were the Commissioners, who used to come round. I am not sure, but as far as I can remember I believe they came round twice while I was there. The whole time I was there I never saw a person from the B. Guardians; in fact, the Chairman of the B. Guardians promised my wife he would visit me while I was there, but I never saw a guardian at all.

20,167. You might tell us about the Commissioners' visits?—I might say they always knew when the Commissioners were coming, and everybody was touched up a bit; put on a fresh suit of clothes. There were several private patients there; in fact, they were so dressed up when the Commissioners came round, especially one man, I did not know who he was; everybody was lined up in the yard, and the doctor and the attendants used to walk up along the line just like a regiment of soldiers, and if you had any complaint to make they would allow you to speak to them.

20,168. Did you ever speak to any of them?—No, I never spoke.

20,169. Did you want to?—No, I did not want to.

20,170. Did you not want to get out?—I cannot say that I did, in the state I was in at that time. The fact of the matter was that I had lost hope, I had lost strength; the result was that everything and everybody was against me, and I simply had no desire for anything different.

20,171. Now you were transferred, were you, on 17th November, 1921, to P.?—Yes.

20,172. How did you come to be transferred? Were you complaining about F. and wanting a change?—No. All B. pauper patients were transferred; they decided to transfer all B. pauper patients from F. to P.

20,173. Were there a number of others who went at the same time?—Yes. The B. patients went at two different times; there were about three weeks between.

20,174. How did P. compare with F.?—It was like going out of a dungeon into a palace.

20,175. Was it a much better place?—Much better.

20,176. Was it a newer place?—Yes, it was practically brand new when we were put into it; I think we were about the second or third lot that went there.

20,177. Was it better fitted up?—Much better fitted up.

20,178. More modern?—And more modern with every convenience, equipped for cleanliness.

20,179. You must have been among one of the first people to go into it?—Yes.

20,180. And you think it showed a great improvement in its arrangements as compared with F.?—Yes.

20,181. Mrs. Mathew: Were there more attendants at P.?—Yes, a great deal more attendants there.

20,182. Chairman: And were you satisfied with the treatment you had at P.?—Yes, I was satisfied with the treatment; it was all right; the only complaint I had against P. was that they kept me there nine months after I was well.

20,183. When I speak of treatment, I mean were they kind to you?—Yes. I was in three different wards. I might say when I went there I was taken ill just about Christmas time with influenza, and I had a boil on my arm, and I was put in the infirmary ward; at that time the food was not very special; at any rate, I did not eat any Christmas dinner there. I do not know what it was, it appeared to me to be like artichokes, it was something black, anyway, and I did not eat a mouthful. But after that, especially after I was transferred to No. 8 ward, that is the convalescent ward, I had nothing much to complain about. I went from No. 1 to No. 2 for some while, and I worked in the scullery, and when I went out to work on the grounds I was transferred to No. 8.

20,184. Did the Commissioners come round there also?—Well, Sir, I cannot say about the Commissioners; I do not remember seeing any Commissioners. The committee used to come round the ward.

20,185. You remember the committee coming round?—Yes, not many of the committee—Mrs. M. and the Duke of X.—I was informed that was his name—used to come through the ward occasionally; in fact, every month, I think, when the committee meeting was held, he used to come through.

20,186. Now your chief complaint is that you were kept too long in F.?—That is right. Of course, I could not see that the place was thoroughly inspected any more than the other place; because whoever was coming they always knew when they were coming. Even the doctors themselves did not know what was going on there. I defy anybody except they have been through the particular experience themselves, and been in the place, to have any idea what was being done there.

20,187. Did you complain to the visiting committee that you were being detained, although you were quite well?—Yes, I did; I asked twice to go before the committee. I might say, in the first place, my son was informed by the relieving officer (my wife had been trying to get me out for a long time then) that if he was willing to be responsible for me he could claim me; so my son came for me and we went before the committee, and they asked me a few questions, whether I had got a job to go to. I said "No." The chairman said, "Did I not think I would be all the better for staying another month?" I said, "No, I did not, but if that was their idea I was prepared to abide by it." I stayed that month, and when my son came back for me the superintendent wired back to say, "No, I must stop till I was better."

20,188. Earl Russell: You were not very strong and well at this time?—There was not much the matter; I had been going out to work in the fields and on the ground.

20,189. Were you not getting better every day with the rest and the food?—I was no better after that eight months was up. I had been improving then for three months. This was the Thursday before Easter when my son came for me. Then I asked the next time to go before the committee, and when I got before the committee there was no committee there except the chairman and the doctor. I had quite a long conversation with the chairman, and he was sorry he could not go against the superintendent's instructions.

20,190. Chairman: Why do you think they would want to keep you on after you were better?—I do not know, Sir; I have no idea at all.

20,191. You were costing a good deal of money, you know?—That is what I told the chairman when he came through, when I began to know there were men in that ward that had been in from 12 and up to 25 years. As far as I saw while I was there, there was nothing more wrong with them than with me. I began to get anxious; and each time I was expecting to go home, I told them they could not do anything worse to give me a set-back.

20,192. You were not engaged in any work in the place?—Yes; after Easter I was going out to work with the stokers; we used to unload trucks of coal, and we used to empty the cesspools in the attendants' gardens, from half past eight in the morning till half past twelve, and from half past one to half past five from Easter to November, when I got my discharge.

20 October, 1925.]

Mr. O.

[Continued.]

20,193. Were you fit for that kind of work?—Yes. Of course we were not pressed, we worked our own pace; in fact the attendant told me one day I could please myself. I said I was there working for them. He said, "You can please yourself; you need not work unless you choose to." I said, "I know all about that."

20,194. The medical superintendent would have no motive, would he, for keeping you there any longer than was necessary?—I do not know, unless he was playing for safety—I do not know why.

20,195. Perhaps he was playing for safety.

20,196. Sir David Drummond: You had several nervous illnesses before that; since 1893 you have had several nervous illnesses?—Yes, I had one before.

20,197. So it is quite reasonable to suppose that the superintendent was playing for safety?—Yes, that is right.

20,198. Earl Russell: And you had had two pretty bad accidents?—Yes.

20,199. Mr. Jowitt: Looking back at it now, do not you think he was quite wise to play for safety. Here you are as well as ever?—No, I do not; I consider he ought to have let me come home at Easter. I think I was quite fit and well to come home considering I had had no set back, especially when I was willing to stay a month and had had no set back in any degree. In fact I asked the superintendent; he came through the ward on one of the committee days, and he said "Hullo, O., are you settling down," and I said I supposed I was.

20,200. Earl Russell: But what possible motive could he have in keeping you, except your own health?—That I could not say.

20,201. Chairman: And did he not examine you so late as October 1922?—No.

20,202. You left, you remember, on the 9th November, 1922, and was not there a special report upon you on the 21st October? Do you remember being seen by Dr. B. then?—By a special visit do you mean?

20,203. By the medical superintendent?—On what date?

20,204. On the 21st October, that is about three weeks before you left. Do you remember being examined?—He did not examine me, he had a conversation with me. When my son came for me Dr. D. thoroughly examined me and told me I was all right—that was when my son was there waiting to take me home. Of course when I got up into the room fully expecting to put my own clothes on, they put me back.

20,205. It is only fair to tell you, Mr. O. that on the 21st October, which is two or three weeks before you left, the medical officer of the institution certified that he saw you, and that you were suffering from melancholia, that you were unstable and lacking in self control, and had no insight into your own condition; that you resented being questioned and were evasive in your answers, and were inclined to be abusive when pressed for an answer; and that you told the doctor that it was no business of his to question you on religious matters, that you were in constant communication with God, and that it was the will of God that you should be kept in the asylum. Do you remember anything of that sort?—Yes, I remember about that, but I told him at that particular time that I did not think it was the will of God that I should be kept there indefinitely.

Earl Russell: Neither were you.

20,206. Chairman: You were not?—I consider I was; I was kept there for eight months longer than I ought to have been. What I would like to know is how did Dr. B. know that I talked to God. I can truthfully say that nobody ever heard me in any way.

20,207. What the doctor says is that you yourself told him that you were in constant communication with God?—Yes, that is right. It does not follow, does it, because a man has religious convictions, if he talks with God, that his mind is necessarily unstable?

20,208. Of course not, but there are ways and ways of doing things you know, Mr. O. There are some ways that are normal and some that are abnormal?—Yes.

20,209. Did you tell the doctor that it was the will of God that you should remain on in the asylum?—Indeed I did not, not that I should remain there indefinitely.

20,210. Do not you think it was a wise precaution to take?—No, I do not, Sir; unless, as I say, I had any definite set back, any reason that they should keep me there, which I could understand; but I had no set back whatever. I began to pick up from the Boxing Day.

20,211. Can you suggest any reason why they should have kept you all these months at the public expense unless they thought it was for your good?—That did not affect the asylum, did it? That was a case for the B. Corporation; they had to pay for me—not the asylum authorities.

20,212. What I have a little difficulty in understanding is this: Suppose that you were, as you say, quite recovered, can you suggest any motive that the medical superintendent could have for keeping you on there?—No, I cannot suggest any motive.

20,213. Earl Russell: Any wrong reason?—A good many of the patients there had the idea they were there because they were useful and helping in doing the work. That was squashed, because from what the attendant said to me it was immaterial to them whether I worked or not; they would want somebody to do the work; if I had refused to have done it, that would have been another set back against me.

20,214. Do you think that you were being kept there because of the work you were doing?—No, I should not like definitely to state that.

20,215. Do you think it at all—have you got that idea at the back of your mind?—That they kept me there for it?

20,216. Yes.—No, not exactly. I should not truthfully say that they did so, but that was the impression of a good many of the patients there, whether it was right or not.

20,217. But I would like to go a little further than "not exactly," and I would like to know whether you have got that impression in your mind at all, that that was the reason they kept you?—No, I have not.

20,218. Sir David Drummond: The sum and substance of your charge is that the doctor's opinion was wrong, that is all. His opinion was that you should stay there, and you say his opinion is wrong. Some of us may give opinions that are wrong, but we do the best we can. We do not claim to be always right. Apparently this doctor was right, judging from your history, but your opinion is that he was wrong—that is the sum and substance of your charge?—Yes; but do not you think, Sir, that with the particular complaint that I was suffering from, it would set me back to be told the same thing continuously almost every month? It was the usual thing, when a patient was going to get his discharge, the doctor came and spoke to him on the Sunday morning previous to his discharge; and several times he did that to me. Do not you think that the fact that he treated me in that way could have been anything but to aggravate my case? In fact, I told him so. If he wished to put me back where I was, I did not think he could have done anything worse.

20,219. As a matter of fact, it has not?—No, it has not, but you can take it from me I was very much upset at the time, especially when my son came for me. If I had given way to my feelings I should have been as bad, if not worse.

20,220. Chairman: You told us that P. was a much nicer place to be in, in every way. Were the attendants kinder and more attentive there than they had been at F.?—They were not kinder to me, because, apart from that incident that I gave you when this attendant struck me, I had nothing to complain about the attendants at F.

20 October, 1925.]

Mr. O.

[Continued.]

20,221. Were they a better class of attendants, or more attentive?—Certainly.

20,222. Were there more of them?—Very many more of them; there were four on duty in the ward where I was. As far as I could gather, the attendants at F. had no qualifications at all. There was a particular patient there who was practically covered with sores, and he had no convenience at all. When they used to dress these wounds, we could smell the wounds five or six beds away from him. As far as I could gather they had no definite experience for their position. I was given to understand that all the attendants at P. were Royal Medical Corps men, they had to pass the test before they could be attendants.

20,223. Miss Madeleine Symons: You saw no case of ill-treatment at P., did you?—Not definite ill-treatment. There were certain patients there in the bathroom sometimes, and they were inclined to be stubborn; and they would give the patients a dig in the ribs while they were having a shower bath.

20,224. Mr. Micklem: Is P. a private asylum, or is it one of the county asylums?—It is a county asylum. I understand that B. have 200 beds.

20,225. Chairman: Now when you came out in November?—I might say when I went out the doctor told me it would be best that I should be on probation for a month, but I understood when a man was put out on probation he would have pay for that month; but I have heard nothing from them from that time to this.

20,226. When you came out did you make any complaint to anybody about your having been detained for these months?—Not definitely; I was very glad to get home, and I did not want to bother any more about it.

20,227. How did you come to write for details of your certificate?—I forget now; I cannot remember exactly.

20,228. You wrote to the Secretary of the Board of Control two years after you came out, in November, 1924?—Yes.

20,229. How did you come to write for your certificate then?—I think that was something when I had to give evidence. I came up to London to give evidence before somebody to do with the Royal Commission on Lunacy.

20,230. Who asked you?—I could not say who it was. I have not got any name or address now.

20,231. Was it the Lunacy Reform Society who asked you?—Yes, I believe that was it.

20,232. How did they get your name?—I expect they got my name through W., as far as I can tell.

20,233. That is the witness who is coming this afternoon?—Yes. He came to me and asked me if I was prepared to verify his statements, and I said, "Yes, I was."

20,234. Had you not thought of making any complaint yourself until Mr. W. came to you?—No, I had not.

20,235. And when you came to London, then did you see a gentleman at the offices of this society?—Yes; he took down my experiences at P.

20,236. He wrote them down, did he?—Yes.

Chairman: Well, Mr. O., we are obliged to you for having come this afternoon; we do not need to detain you any longer.

20,237. Earl Russell: And we hope you will go on keeping quite well.—I hope so. I might say that nobody, not having been in this place, can have the faintest idea of what it was like. I told the doctor one day that I defy any man, if he had not been through the experience I had been through, to have the faintest idea of what it was like.

Chairman: It must be a very painful experience, I am sure.

(The Witness withdrew).

Mr. W. called and examined.

20,238. Chairman: Mr. W., are you a fishmonger and poulterer at B.?—Yes.

20,239. Are you engaged in that business at present?—I have been laid up, Sir, for over five years. I have not recovered; my health is good, but physical weakness, largely resulting from my treatment in the first place I was in, is what I wish to give evidence about.

20,240. That is F., I think?—That is so.

20,241. So you are not in business just now?—I am still laid up; still in the doctor's hands.

20,242. Now, in 1920 had you a breakdown?—Yes, in May, 1920.

20,243. And did you get worse?—Yes. At first it was a physical crash, largely resulting from the stress of the business. I had been managing a shop, on the premises of which I am still living, in C. Road, and the firm had sold out in a hurry and left me stranded, but I had had five years practically without a break at all, 365 days a year. There was a good bit of worry and responsibility as well as work, and at first it was a physical crash, a sheer collapse, but in October, 1920, acute neurasthenia set in.

20,244. What was the form that it took?—At first sheer physical weakness, and then when acute neurasthenia set in there was a good deal of pain in the head, hissing in the ears, and a distorted view of my own character.

20,245. Would it be fair to say that at that time you were not in your proper mind?—I claim, Sir, that I have never been insane during my life. I have had two nervous breakdowns, but I was not insane, Sir.

20,246. Did you continue at home during this period?—Yes; I came out of business. The firm gave up on the 23rd March, 1920, and in the May I collapsed, and I stayed at home until the July of 1921.

20,247. You were not able to work during that time?—No.

20,248. Were you very morbid?—Depressed; but the chief mental symptom was the same when I had my other crash (I was about 35 then), a distorted view I had of my own character, the idea being that I was the most despicable skunk that had ever been allowed to live; and because of that I avoided everybody, including my own wife, but other than that I could converse on everything when anybody came to see me. That I put down generally to a very narrow form of orthodox Christianity that I was crammed with as a youngster.

20,249. Did you feel that you had committed sins?—The feeling was that everything I had done was wrong, and because of that I was ashamed to meet people. I used to go about with my head down.

20,250. Of course, there was no foundation for that, Mr. W.?—Not at all. I do not wish to be egotistical, but I can say that I have walked as clean a line as most, and better than a good many.

20,251. But at this time you believed, did you, that you had done wrong?—The opinion then, and when I had my first crash, was that I was the most despicable humbug that ever had walked this earth.

20,252. That feeling must have upset you very much?—Yes; it was really worse than physical pain, a feeling of utter shame, because I have always prided myself I could look anybody in the face. There was no cause for it other than the weak state of nerves in which I was.

20,253. Now, in that state of matters, do you remember the relieving officer coming to your house?—Yes.

20 October, 1925.]

Mr. W.

[Continued.]

20,254. Why did he come?—Well, in a nutshell, the situation is this, Sir: I think I had been home, roughly, about 13 months, gradually getting worse, and my doctor said that it was imperative for me to go away for a change of air. When a working man, who has never taken a decent wage, has been laid up for 13 months, there is no spare cash for change of air. The doctor impressed on my wife that if I did not go I should not get better; it was my only chance. I do not know whether you know C. Road, B., but it is a very busy thoroughfare, and a very narrow thoroughfare; trams are continually coming up the road; there is a lot of heavy traffic, and the conditions were just about as unfavourable for nerve trouble as they could be; and he said it was imperative for me to go away for a change of air. On that the wife consented to my going. I did not know.

20,255. Did you see the relieving officer yourself?—No, Sir, not till the morning they took me away. This is what happened. The doctor wrote to the guardians. The next thing that I knew was that the relieving officer called, but I did not see him, the wife had an interview with him, and she requested that I be not sent away. The next morning a Mr. D., a man who I know, a J.P., called; I did not know what for—I do now, and have known for some time; but he was not in that house 45 seconds. He just came up the stairs behind my wife, came into the room, and asked me how I was. I replied, "I cannot see you." I went past him into the next room and burst into tears. In the state I was, that was nothing to be wondered at, but on that he certified me as insane.

20,256. Who was your doctor?—Dr. R.

20,257. Was he a panel doctor?—No; I have never taken up a panel doctor; I have paid for my doctor.

20,258. You had been a tradesman in your shop?—A manager of a shop, yes; but I never took up the panel doctor, although I was entitled to it.

20,259. Your own doctor had been attending you, had he?—That is so.

20,260. Had you any reason to distrust your own doctor?—No, not at all. In fact, I believe the only reason he did what he did was to get me the necessary change. You see a hospital will not take you with a nervous breakdown; it is too long a job, and it is not interesting. If they are going to cut off an arm or a leg, they are only too eager.

20,261. Earl Russell: You mean you were certified for the purpose of getting a change of air?—Roughly. The doctor may have taken the acute depression, and what I did say—I said at one time I was cursed by God and blinded by the devil, but that was only some stuff that had been pumped into my head when I was a child and re-affirmed later on at a revivalist meeting in my teens.

20,262. Chairman: You see Dr. R. on the 5th July, 1921, gave a certificate, Mr. W., that you were then?—A fit and proper person to be—20,263. —detained?—That is so.

20,264. And he gives the circumstances?—Yes.

20,265. You do not suggest that he had any improper motive?—Not at all, I would not suggest that for a moment. Dr. R. has always behaved as a gentleman to me.

20,266. It is so difficult for people to judge of their own condition?—Agreed. May I tell you a few facts which should have a little bearing on the matter, to prove my own sanity?

20,267. If you please?—I did not know where they were taking me till the morning of my departure, and then I knew that I had been certified insane, and I did not resist because I knew it would be taken as a proof of my insanity if I did; I went quietly. The second item which does not look quite on a par with a madman's action was this: a Mr. H., a relieving officer, and a friend of mine who was then one of the guardians, and my wife went with me. A taxi, practically like an open victoria, came, and there were two seats and two peculiar swing-down seats which fold up in rather a tricky manner. Mr. N. and the relieving officer both had a terrible struggle to let those seats down and could not do it; I said "Let me have a go," and I did it. That does not altogether look as if I was particularly over the border. One other point. On my arrival at F., when I had not been in that building very many days, because of what I saw, I registered a vow to myself if ever again I got my liberty, I would devote the remainder of my life to bringing that place and its proprietor to book.

20,268. Earl Russell: So you have very strong feelings of animosity towards that asylum?—Animosity is hardly the word.

20,269. Well, what shall I say?—I do not like that word. There is a feeling of this kind, that if I did not do my level best to bring that place and its owner to book, I should be neglecting to do my duty. I look upon it as a religious duty.

20,270. Chairman: Now about the certification. The doctor had given a medical certificate, and then Mr. D., who was a justice of the peace, came to your house, did he?—Yes.

20,271. And I suppose he had seen the medical certificate?—I assume so, I do not know.

20,272. Did he try to speak to you?—What happened was this, Sir. He came into the house, followed my wife up the stairs into a front bedroom where I was, and she said "Mr. D. has come to see you." I had met Mr. D. before, and I did not place any significance on his visit. I thought perhaps he had called out of friendship at the time; but as I tell you at the time I was avoiding everybody, and on his entry to the room he said "Good morning, how are you?" I walked past him into another bedroom at the back—there were two bedrooms on the top floor. I walked into the back bedroom past him and burst into tears.

20,273. It was very odd conduct, was it not?—Yes, odd, but not odd for a nervous breakdown if you have any experience of them. There is nothing unusual in a man exhibiting emotion in a nervous breakdown. As I say the feeling is that you want to get away from everybody and everything; the slightest noise was an agony; there was nothing to be wondered at. But this is the point. On my going into the other room the wife followed me, and she tried to quieten me; I was quite quiet then, but Mr. D. did not stop and have another word with my wife, not even to wish her good morning; he walked down those stairs and out of the house, and in less than 45 seconds of his entry into the house I was certified as a pauper lunatic. I was neither a pauper nor a lunatic. There were two mistakes, Sir. A pauper is a man without visible means of support.

20,274. You need not worry about that side of it, Mr. W.?—I do not worry about it, Sir, but it was a mistake.

20,275. Mr. Snell: What is your opinion as to what should have been done with you at that time. You were ill—you will admit that?—I should say I was ill. If you have seen a nervous breakdown, you will know that a person with a nervous breakdown is obviously ill.

20,276. You admit your own home was not very suitable at that time?—Yes, because of the noise in the place; but my point is this: I happened to know a case which happened a little bit prior to my own, but it was a wealthy lady who was over the border, and was certified; but in this case another justice of the peace had to verify the doctor's certificate, and he spent over an hour with that lady before he would sign the paper. So I suggest that if Mr. D. can sign up an insane man in 45 seconds, he should be in one of these asylums to send them out.

20,277. Sir David Drummond: You were not over the border yourself?—I was not over the border myself. I suggest this, Sir, that when ill-health comes about, if it is only a case of influenza, a person is not normal. The border line between sanity and insanity, we all know, is a very very thin one; but my claim is this that a man or woman who knows what they are doing, who is not violent, who takes what is given him for his own good, who can even, because of what he sees, register a vow that he will devote the remainder of his life—if you want any more proof of sanity than that, Sir, well I was not normal—a person is not normal even with a bad cold.

20 October, 1925.]

Mr. W.

[Continued.]

20,278. Chairman: Now, Mr. W., you must remember that we are very near the end of a long inquiry, and we have heard a great deal from other witnesses regarding the general considerations. The value of your contribution is your personal experience; and what we all want to hear from you is an account of any occurrences which took place at F. under your own eye which you think we ought to know about, and for which it may be proper for us to suggest some remedy. That is a practical question. Would you kindly tell us what were the things you think we ought to know about, which occurred during your period at F. where you were for some months?—I was there from July to November, 1921.

20,279. During that period did anything occur which you think we should know about?—Well, Sir, first and foremost, on my arrival at the institution I was examined to see if I was clean, and I was put to bed in the infirmary ward. We arrived there about midday, a bell was chiming twelve as we arrived there. I had left home fairly early in the morning; but nothing in the way of food, or a suggestion whether I would like even as much as a glass of water, came my way until four o'clock, when we had our tea. I may mention that I was also photographed, a very distressing performance in the condition I was. I was put to bed in the infirmary ward, and in that ward I remained until I left the institution. Let me tell you something about this infirmary ward. There was, to the best of my knowledge, 30 or 32 beds in it; they were so close together that you could not get a chair in between them, and there was a general mixture of poor beggars in various stages of dementia and other complaints; there were tubercular cases; there were epileptics, general paralysis, one poor old chap rotting with venereal trouble; some were singing; some were cursing and some were creating ructions; there was not a moment's peace during the 24 hours, and it was about the last place, and about the vilest conditions in which to incarcerate anybody with a nervous breakdown. Let me tell you something about the food.

20,280. Just one moment. How long were you in this noisy place?—I was attached to the infirmary ward from the time I went there to the time I went to P.

20,281. All the time?—All the time, and my argument is this. I am given to understand (I have had no experience of prisons yet—but I may have later!) that in workhouses and in gaols the infirmary ward is better than the others. I should assume that in a mental hospital so called, the infirmary ward should have been as good or better than the others. If what I am going to tell you is better than the others, God help the others. With regard to food. I may say that my diet during the four months I was there was practically nothing but bread and margarine, two smallish slices, and a basin of tea morning and night. The other food was so repulsive that a hungry dog would not eat it. We had bully beef three times a week. Bully beef is not a good thing for neurasthenia. I do not know whether you will accept that, but on Saturdays we had about two small slices of it, and either two small potatoes, or one sizable potato cut in half, and a half slice of bread—that was our dinner. The other twice we had bully beef, it was pounded up into shreds like blood worms; it was mixed up with filthy vegetables, often pig potatoes, not only not skinned but the dirt and all adhering to them, rotten carrots and onions, and put under a crust which was as hard as the top of this table, and that was potato pie. That is three days. One day we had boiled meat, one day roast meat, one day fish and one day soup. I would like you to see the soup, the least we say about it the better; it was utterly repulsive, Sir. During that four months I never saw an egg or a drop of milk; and with regard to the medical attention, after my first two days they came round and ran a rule over me fairly well, took all my marks in case I ran away, and generally added to my distressed condition by what I was living amongst, plus this very rigid examination. Well, as I tell you, there was not a minute in the 24 hours that we were quiet, and the medical attention was this: the doctor came round and walked through; sometimes he would look at you and give you a good morning, sometimes he would not. The latter part of the time I was there, I cannot tell you how long this was, we had a new doctor, I believe he is still there, a Dr. M. He came, and to the best of my recollection I should say it would be a week or ten days before I went to P., before I was transferred. During that time he never as much as spoke to me, let alone ask how I was.

20,282. How many patients were there in this ward?—30 or 32, if I remember rightly. The beds on one side were more congested than on the other, but on the other side at the bottom end of the room they were fairly close, and then there was a gap. There was an old patient, this venereal case, and there was a bedpan by the side of the bed so they had to give him a bit more space. Let me tell you something about that poor old chap. They used occasionally to give him a bath. I may tell you there was skin off his body as big as that (describing), and on the arms where they caught hold of him the skin was coming away in their hands; they used to give him a bath in the bathroom, there was one bath in there. We were bathed in the same bath later on if we had one, and when they put him back into bed, do you know how they put him back, Sir? I will tell you: the two attendants would get hold of that chap on each side arm and leg, and they would stand at the foot of the bed: "One, two, three, this time," and he would be thrown into the middle of that bed there to make three or four violent bounces until those springs came to rest—that is one item.

20,283. Mr. Micklem: Were you in this place the whole time you were there in bed?—Not in bed, Sir; I was in bed seven or eight weeks, and then I was still attached to that ward, and slept in it, and in fact lived in it all the while I was there, with this exception, that the last—

20,284. But this was crowded up with beds in every part?—With the exception of a little bit of open space in front of the fireplace, where there was a table and two or three chairs alongside.

20,285. Chairman: Do you think it hurt this man to be treated in the way you have described?—Would you not think that dropping down on a sore place like that would be rather a painful proposition, and even assuming that that skin had not already broken, do not you think that was likely to produce bed sores with a poor old chap lying in bed?

20,286. Much would depend, of course, upon how it was done?—But could you swing a man from the foot of the bed and drop him in the middle in a gentle manner?

20,287. How often did you see this happen?—Several times; I cannot tell you how many; it was the rule.

20,288. Did the man himself complain?—No, because he was in such a state he could hardly speak, and he was stone deaf; but what he felt I cannot tell you.

20,289. Sir Ernest Hilcy: What do you mean by the rule—did they always do this?—They put him back after the bath. The bed clothes and our under-clothes were never aired, they were rough dried and often not dried. I have seen a sheet put on the bed, a patch from there to there on the corner of the sheet with the wet standing in it, and because of that I knew dirt was going to do me less harm than wet clothes, so I did not ask for a bath. I had three baths, and three clean shirts in four months. Let me tell you some more about what I saw in that ward. There was an old doctor—I was given to understand that he was a London doctor who somehow or other had got in there; I assume he was a paying patient; anyway he was attached to other wards which I do not know, but eventually he was taken ill; it was his last illness, and he was brought into this infirmary ward to be tenderly cared for. Within about two days of his death his brother came, I believe from London, to see him, but they dare not bring him down in this infirmary ward to see his brother in the awful conditions under which the poor old chap was living; so they wrapped him in a blanket, put him in a carrying chair, took him out of that ward and across an open green into another ward; and I assume he was put in a nice comfy bed in a private ward and everything was lovely. As soon as the brother had gone he was brought back into this place, where he died two days later.

20 October, 1925.]

Mr. W.

[Continued.]

20,290. Sir David Drummond: Were the patients in this infirmary ward physically ill?—Yes.

20,291. What were you suffering from, physically?—Weakness at first, but there was this. To be perfectly frank, when I got there and found myself surrounded with what I was, there was a certain amount of personal fear of getting out of bed and rubbing shoulders with some of the chaps; and it was largely, I suppose, my own responsibility that I stopped in bed as long as I did; no pressure was brought to bear upon me.

20,292. It was not reserved for people who were physically ill?—Yes, it was; it was the infirmary ward, but it was also something else. I forgot to mention this, and I am glad you reminded me. It was the observation and the refractory ward; it is a decent mixture; it was a general utility hack—that is what it was in a few words. Let me tell you something else. In the next bed to me—my friend who has just been in here was in No. 6 bed, I was in No. 5, and in No. 4 bed next to me was a boy. I was given to understand he was a son of a Mr. B., who has an ironmonger's shop in B. at the present moment, but what I do know is this: the boy was an epileptic and he had a tremendous number of fits; as these fits were always accompanied by a violent shriek and sometimes a terrific spasm, when all the muscles were rigid, and the body which was naked was red from head to toe. It was a distressing sight to myself; and in one of these fits I got a kick on the side of my face by his foot as it shot out rigid, because the beds were so close together. Now that lad, I will admit, in between his fits was troublesome. On this particular night he had 11 fits in that night. I have seen that lad knocked flying with an open-handed smack from one of the attendants in the middle of the back, and I have seen the mark of the open hand in red in between that lad's shoulders an hour after it happened.

20,293. Mr. Micklem: Were these all what might be called pauper patients, or were they paying patients?—No; that lad I was just referring to was a paying patient, and when his parents or friends came to see him, you could take it from me they never saw where he lived and had his being; he was taken to another part of the building.

20,294. Sir David Drummond: How many patients were in F. altogether?—I really do not know, but I am given to understand somewhere about 700; there may have been more or less.

20,295. This is the only infirmary ward?—For the male side; what there was on the female side I cannot tell you.

20,296. How many deaths were there in the four months—the old gentleman died?—Yes, and there was another death while I was there; there were two deaths in that ward while I was there.

20,297. Only two deaths in four months?—That is so.

20,298. That was the male infirmary ward?—Yes.

20,299. Chairman: We have heard from Mr. O. about the lavatory arrangements, and so on; we do not want to have it twice down on the note?—No, I should not think you would.

20,300. But I would like to know this: when you left this institution on the 3rd November, 1921, and went to P., that was a new institution, was it not?—Yes, opened in the September as I went in in the November.

20,301. You were one of the first residents there?—Yes.

20,302. Was it better?—The difference between the two places, Sir, I describe in two words—one was hell, and the other was heaven relatively; although there is room for improvement even at P. But there is something else I would like to mention that I saw in that infirmary ward. A man by the name of G. was an epileptic; again I am prepared to admit he was troublesome at times, but his troublesomeness did not warrant what I saw, and I am given to understand it happened more often than I saw it, but I know it happened once for I saw it.

20,303. What did you see?—He had cut up a bit rough, how rough I cannot altogether say, but what I saw with my own eyes was this: four attendants got hold of him, an arm and a leg each, and they carried him, frog-marched him back downwards; in a corner of the infirmary ward there were three stairs which led up to a passage off which six side rooms opened; and as they took him up those stairs I saw those chaps—there was a nod given—and I saw them raise him and drop him on the edge of those stairs twice to quieten him. That sort of treatment is not warranted, but again I do not blame the attendants. Let me tell you how they fared. As far as I know their food was very little better than we got ourselves. They did a 14-hours day; they were on at six in the morning till eight at night; they were then off duty for about a couple of hours; they went out in the town and, I assume, had several drinks, and they had to come back and sleep in the ward with other lunatics, from 13 to 30; they did not even have a bedroom to themselves. You can quite understand what that meant—that is going to get on those men's nerves, they are going to be irritable, and it is going to react on the care of the patients. That sort of thing did not go on at P.

20,304. At P. do I understand that you had no complaint to make?—No complaint at all. The only thing that I would say as regards P. is this, and that is more to do, I suppose, with the County Council: there should be a more generous scale of diet, particularly for convalescent patients. Another thing, I do think this, that, arguing from myself and other cases that I know, I do think they hang on to you a little bit too long. Once you are certified as a lunatic, and you are a lunatic, it does not matter what anybody else may say.

20,305. Of course, your point of view is that you were never insane at all, and should never have been certified, I understand?—That is my point of view.

20,306. But assuming that the doctor was right, and that you were for the time being not yourself, do you say that you were kept too long?—Yes. I will tell you something—

20,307. Just let me follow that out, because I am interested in this part of it. Did you complain to anybody that you were being kept there against your will?—No, I did not, for this reason: if you protest,

20 October, 1925.]

Mr. W.

[Continued.]

it is taken as a sign of lunacy—the more you protest the bigger the lunatic; that is the idea always. Even at F. this is rather amusing—I spoke about the medical attention. Between you and me, the only things they were generous with there were Epsom salts and sleeping draughts; you could have a bath in them if you wanted it. I had a considerable amount of pain in my head; it was acute brain fag accentuated by the nervous state I was in; the doctor said it was delusions—it is a useful word in those places. Sir.

20,308. It is also a common fact in those places?—Possibly, but it is a very useful word to cover a lot of matters which should see daylight. Even when the guardians and the visiting committees come round they only see what is wanted to be seen; there is window dressing going on.

20,309. How does it come about that anyone ever gets out at all, Mr. W?—I take it that the medical officers have got to discharge a few, or they would see about getting another medical officer; but you may take it from me, Sir, because of this fact, when a person has had a nervous breakdown there is always a likelihood of his having another one. On the other hand, when you have had any other illness, you may have another—still it may happen, and because of that fact the medical officer hangs on to you. In my opinion—this is only an opinion, but it can be pretty well substantiated, I will try and do it presently—he hangs on to you for this reason that by his inaction he is playing for safety all the while; but if he discharges you to-day, and you get another relapse in two or three days time, it is a black mark.

20,310. Then you think his motive in keeping you longer than you ought to have been there, was for safety?—It is purely a reflex on the system. There is too much responsibility in my opinion put upon the medical officer.

20,311. I cannot see what object the doctor could have in wishing to keep a person any longer than necessary, because every patient who is there means more people under his charge. Most of us are glad to get rid of anxieties?—Agreed.

20,312. Why do you think the doctor kept you there longer than was necessary?—Because of the fact—this is only an opinion—.

20,313. Let us have your opinion.—Because of the fact that with nervous breakdown cases there is always a fear (we have only got to pick up our papers to prove this) of suicide, and assuming that he discharged me—as a matter of fact it was only physical weakness for a long while—if he had discharged me and in another two or three weeks a recurrence had come about, and assuming I had taken another turn, and I had gone over the border and had cut the knot, it would have been a black mark against that man. But there again it is based upon the fact that you are certified insane, and they are always looking for insanity in those places.

20,314. Did he not detain you longer than you thought he should have done, because it was in your interest to do so?—I will tell you something which may help you, Sir. The last summer that I was in business, our trade is very dangerous and I may tell you for why—whenever you get a cut or a prick with a fish bone or game bone or oystershell, or whatever it is, there is always a lot of slime knocking about, and you inoculate yourself. In the badly rundown condition of my health I had a number of cuts, and every one turned septic, and blood-poisoning was my trouble.

20,315. I am afraid we do not want to go into all this.—Just a moment. I am going to jump from that to P. When I went to P. in November of 1921, in the May of 1922 I was put to bed with a badly swollen neck; my neck started swelling from here and went right down to the shoulders, and it was nothing more or less than that blood-poisoning settled at one place. They opened the neck on both sides; but here comes the point—while I was in bed in that state the Lunacy Commissioners came round and one overhauled me pretty considerably, and I answered his questions in a perfectly logical manner, and he complimented me, and said he would like to talk to me about it. But the trouble was physical weakness, and because of the fact that the diet was not calculated to build up my strength, I never got strong—I doubt if I ever shall.

Chairman: Well, Mr. W., it is after four o'clock, and I am afraid we must rise. We are obliged to you for your account of your experiences. We have also heard Mr. O.'s evidence regarding both these institutions; so that we have had to-day an account which we shall, of course, consider carefully. We are obliged to you for coming here this afternoon.

(The Witness withdrew.)

(Adjourned to to-morrow at 10.30.)

5, OLD PALACE YARD,
WESTMINSTER, S.W.1.

THIRTY-NINTH DAY.

Wednesday, 21st October, 1925.

MEMBERS PRESENT :

THE RIGHT HON. H. P. MACMILLAN, K.C. (Chairman).

THE EARL RUSSELL.

SIR ERNEST HILEY, K.B.E.

SIR DAVID DRUMMOND, C.B.E., M.D.

MR. N. MICKLEM, K.C.

MR. H. SNELL, M.P.

MRS. C. J. MATHEW.

MISS MADELEINE SYMONS.

MR. P. BARTER (Secretary).

MR. W. FAIRLEY (Assistant Secretary).

EVIDENCE TAKEN IN PRIVATE.

Mr. L., called and examined.

20,316. Chairman: You are Mr. L.?—Yes.

20,317. We have of course had the advantage of reading through the précis with which you have furnished us; and, if I may say so, what we should specially like to hear from you is the account of your experiences after B., because, as you appreciate, it does not fall within our province to consider the arrangements at B. But we should very much like to hear from you an account of your experiences in several institutions which you went to after you had left B., you remember, H., V. and W.; you have been in them all?—That is so.

20,318. And we are specially concerned to have evidence upon any matters that would help us to suggest reforms in the conduct of institutions of that nature, relating to the questions of certification, treatment and detention. So perhaps, as we have only a comparatively short time this morning, you would do us the best service if you confined yourself to these matters?—Certainly. There is just one point as to the hearing of the case before Mr. Justice D. He made a statement in sentencing me to six months in the First Division to the effect that if there was any question as to the state of my mentality, he sentenced me to six months with the view that an enquiry should be held by the Home Office as to my mental state. I must just ask one question—of course with regard to any statement I make here, I understand that I receive the protection of the Commission.

20,319. Yes. You realise, on the other hand, that we have to publish any statements that you make here—the evidence you give here has to be printed.—Published in the form of a Blue Book?

20,320. Yes; but we propose in the case of all witnesses examined in private to omit names. We think it is undesirable, of course, for people who come here and volunteer to give evidence, that their names should be made public?—As far as I am concerned, I have the protection of the Commission as to any after-effect of it, in regard to police administration?

20,321. Yes, but you will keep in your mind that what you say will be taken down and will be made available to the public also?—I have no objection to that at all; only I should like to be assured that no false accusation or false evidence should in any way be manufactured against me, with a view of bringing any further proceedings outside this Commission.

20,322. What you say here, Mr. L., is entirely protected.—There is an enormous amount of intimidation which we barristers know, which probably this Commission is not aware of. The only point I want to raise, as far as Mr. Justice D. and the High Court are concerned, is that he gave me that sentence, which of course, is a very severe sentence for the actual contretemps which occurred; and as a rule it is simply punished by a fine—it was simply done in a more sarcastic manner, though it was alleged that I was waving the revolver about and threatening people; that was not so at all; it was done in a sarcastic way to a man who was provoking me. Mr. Justice D. stated that he gave me that sentence with the view that the Home Office could hold an enquiry as to my mental state. When I applied for this enquiry the Home Office refused to give it to me, and I submit that in any future law which may be passed, which I trust confidently will be the effect of the sitting of this Royal Commission—the Home Office should not have the power of overruling a High Court Judge. That is the only point I wanted to raise on any proceedings which caused me to be sent down to B.

20,323. Now will you pass to your experiences after you left B.?—When my six months expired in the ordinary course of events, the prison doctor, Dr. G. of B., who certified me, stated—(although I had only five minutes' interview with him, and I was never better either physically or mentally in my life)—he stated on false information given him by the police that I was dangerously insane, which, of course, was wholly untrue.

20,324. At the end of the six months in the ordinary course you would have been a free man. Now instead of that you were certified?—I was certified originally by the prison doctor before I was sent there; they could not have sent me there unless I had been, and only on an interview probably of five minutes by a man who knew nothing whatever of me and accepted the police story without hearing me.

21 October, 1925.]

Mr. L.

[Continued.]

20,325. Was there any further certification of you at the expiration of the six months?—No; after the six months at B. naturally I was entitled to release, because the doctor who certified me stated before the Criminal Court that I was perfectly capable of pleading; and therefore, personally, I do not see if a man is perfectly capable of pleading that he can be called insane. His statement was that I was dangerously insane, but perfectly capable of pleading. After my six months passed, naturally I ought to have been released: instead of which two days before my time was up, which would be about 4th September, 1919 (the contretemps which caused all this trouble in my life occurred in February, 1919, so it was about 4th September, 1919), I was called by the P.M.O. at B., who was Dr. B. at that time, and before one of the visiting committee who was a justice of the peace; and after five minutes' conversation with him, he, personally, listening more to what had already been stated before I came in to him at all, of which I knew nothing, made an extending order by which I was sent to H. County Asylum.

20,326. Who was that doctor—Dr. B. was it?—He is the Superintendent at B.; yes; and the magistrate was, I think, Arthur W. He was one of the visiting committee, and I think it is rather unfair when a justice of the peace is called in. I should also like to point out that I had already lost something like £30,000 owing to this prosecution, and although my means were not very great I was then a householder, and had at some time been a landowner with landed property. I was put under that order under the Criminal Lunatics Act, and certified as a criminal lunatic. I was neither a lunatic nor a criminal.

20,327. Mr. Micklethorp: But were you not re-certified, Mr. L.?—I went into H. under the Criminal Lunatics Act.

20,328. Were you re-certified, do you think?—No; they had a further extending order; it is not requisite that you should have another certification.

20,329. Was not that a simple order transferring you from B. to the new asylum?—It was more than that; it was under the Criminal Lunatics Act, and under that Act I was sent to H. as a criminal lunatic and a pauper lunatic. I was not a pauper lunatic; therefore when I got there they had no right to put me as a pauper lunatic on the rates; and I naturally became a private inmate of the asylum, where I remained for a fortnight. There are a certain few privileges extended to private patients, of course.

20,330. Chairman: There does seem to be some procedure under the Criminal Lunatics Act, 1884, applicable to such cases, under Section 7 of the Act?—Yes. I was entitled to release at the end of the six months, and because of certain vindictiveness on the part of Dr. B. of B. I was sent on to H.; and as I was not a pauper, but a householder, I do not see that they had any right to send me on to H. as a pauper lunatic. I had to go through all the sufferings that a pauper has to do.

20,331. Just to take the matter in order, I want to see how it runs. On the 1st September, 1919, this Mr. W., this justice of the peace, made an order purporting to be under the Criminal Lunatics Act, 1884, in which he authorised the Superintendent of B. to cause you to be removed to H.?—That is so. That was the Act I quoted.

20,332. Yes, you are quite right; there is provision made for that.—But I was not a pauper, as I was a householder.

Earl Russell: That was not re-certification, of course, only a removal order.

20,333. Chairman: Yes, and then when you went to H. you were admitted there as a pauper patient—that is quite true?—That is so, for two days, and then I became a private patient, but I was sent there as a pauper patient. That is a point I wish to raise, which is grossly unfair to a man in any position.

20,334. You may take it we have had a great deal of evidence about this pauperisation of every person who passes through these forms of procedure, and upon that I think most of us have already formed a pretty strong view?—Yes. Of course I am only now to a certain extent giving a sort of resumé of my case; but I should like later on to go into the details and the facts and the cruelties that I saw in the various places, and the way in which paupers are treated in county asylums, and also in the various asylums, and the question of diet, and of exercise, and fresh air, and other things.

20,335. We understand from you now how you reached H.?—Quite. I just want to give a resumé so that you may understand my case more easily than if an opening statement of any sort had been made. After two or three days at H. I got in communication with my friends, they came down and saw me, and I got a transfer order into V.

20,336. Earl Russell: As a private patient?—Yes.

20,337. Chairman: You went to H. on the 3rd September, 1919, and on the 19th September you entered V.?—Yes, and is so, owing to the intervention of my friends; otherwise if I had not been able to pay that amount weekly which I had to at V., I should probably have had to remain where I was. Of course the conditions there are awful.

20,338. Perhaps you had better tell us what you mean by the conditions being awful at H.?—If you will allow me to take my own case in my own way, I only want to give a sort of resumé first, and I will go into the details of it after.

20,339. Our time is limited. I am very anxious to get the vital matters from you, and I think you might give us your experiences for the 16 days at H., and then we will pass to V.?—Very well. The first point, as far as H. is concerned, is that naturally when I first went there, I saw the principal medical officer, and protested against a sane man being still kept under detention, and the only result I got was rudeness. He was not only rude to me, but to my family. He said I was only a pauper lunatic; and my sister who had been down there, who was the widow of a Field Officer, a Colonel, was as rudely treated as I was. I consider that that sort of statement from the principal medical officer is quite uncalled for and unnecessary. That is only a view that I put forward to show the way in which patients are treated even by the highest authorities in these asylums; they are treated with contempt and are insulted. Then, as far as H. was concerned, one of my principal objections is that we were simply herded together, two or three thousand in a courtyard with no opportunity of any sort of exercise, of games, or cricket, or anything of that kind, which usually takes place in other places. At B. of course, all those things are arranged for.

20,340. Lord Russell: Mr. L., I know H. very well—you do not mean 2,000 or 3,000 in one courtyard?—We had 2,000 in one courtyard.

20,341. In one courtyard?—Yes, in one courtyard.

20,342. Male and female?—Only male; they are not altogether of course.

20,343. Chairman: I think your figures are exaggerated?—Anyway at the time I was there I should say there were quite 2,000 turned out for exercise in that yard. After all, it is immaterial whether it is 1,500 or 2,000—the point is that better opportunity should be given for people who are unfortunate enough, whether it is through intrigue or whether it is through a terrible affliction, to be put into these asylums, for some sort of treatment which will make them regain their health; and it is certainly not conducive to their regaining their health if they go idling about, playing cards on stumps of trees and allowed to associate (of course there is another point there of classification) with all sorts of raving lunatics, who go about round this yard singing and interfering with other patients; when there might be opportunities given for the saner part of that conglomeration of human beings to take part in cricket matches, as they do at B.; and also there might be tennis courts for the better men, and some opportunity, which they have only on a special permit, of going into the libraries where they can read and naturally use their brains.

21 October, 1925.]

Mr. L.

[Continued.]

20,344. Do you say the conditions at B. were better than at H.?—Far better; no comparison whatever. B. as a whole is a very well run institution indeed; the arrangements they have at B. are exceptionally good. One of the principal things that they have at B. is that each man is allowed to cultivate his own plot of land, and he can grow his own vegetables and his own flowers, and many of the men make quite a large income from the cultivation of flowers, and add to their diet by a very good supply of vegetables. I would like to put forward to this Royal Commission that something of that sort should be done in all the county asylums; instead of allowing these men to play cards and go swearing about the place and mixing very bad cases with cases which are virtually sane men. Greater classification should take place and greater opportunities should be given for exercise, and plots should be given them in which to dig and to cultivate flowers and vegetables.

20,345. Earl Russell: But you know at H. a very considerable number are employed in agriculture?—Yes, outside on the farm; I am not speaking of that at all.

20,346. I mean they are not playing cards on stumps of trees?—Those are only a very few cases. There may be one or two at H. who are sufficiently mentally efficient to be permitted to go outside the asylum itself and work on a farm. That is not my point; that only applies to a few. My point is that nearly all these people (as they can do in the better divisions or wards at B.) nearly all of them can be permitted to cultivate flowers and potatoes, and to have some sort of form of exercise in the way of cricket matches, and so forth.

20,347. Chairman: May we take your two points as regards H. to be these? First, insufficient classification; and, secondly, absence of sufficient interesting recreation?—Quite so; both physical and mental.

20,348. And you particularly recommend some gardening work, the cultivation of flowers and vegetables, as being a desirable form of recreation for the patients?—Quite so; that is my point. There is a further question that I should like to put forward, and that is that the patients should be permitted out on parole in many cases. At the present moment my experience is that there is no curative treatment of any sort or kind. The whole time that I was there, outside of B., I was mixing in society all round, everywhere travelling by train, going to Ascot, and everything else. I was virtually a free man. I was on parole from the first week I was there for over two years, and yet they would not let me out. I went all over the place.

20,349. Mr. Micklem: That was at V., was it?—At all of them: at V. and at W., the whole time. I was bicycling and going to point-to-point steeplechases, and all sorts of things, mixing in the ordinary community; and not only that, but I attended University lectures. I am a Master of Arts at Cambridge myself, and I attended lectures the whole of that time with the undergraduates on modern languages.

20,350. Chairman: Then you got ample parole, Mr. L.?—Yes, and I advocated that more of it should be given. There was only one other man besides myself to whom it was permitted.

20,351. Of course, it must depend upon the nature of the case to a large extent?—Absolutely; but I say there are many cases where there is a chance of recovery, if parole be given in order to get away from all these raving lunatics. The man who has a chance of recovery, or the woman, especially in the case of women; in a large number of cases they are simply temporarily afflicted by all sorts of causes. There is a much greater opportunity if they can only break and get away from their environment than if they are kept within prison walls and railings and have to mix with the very bad cases all day and all the night, too.

20,352. The law already provides, as you know, for parole. Your criticism, evidently, is that the law is not sufficiently taken advantage of, in the matter of parole?—No, that is so. Of course, the whole way through, as far as the Lunacy Act is concerned, very great opportunities are given, but none of the Lunacy Commissioners and the visiting committees and other authorities will function; they all rest simply and solely on the opinion of the principal medical officer; and unless they get the recommendation of the principal medical officer to let the patients out, then there is no hope for them. If I gave you the statistics of the number of Lunacy Commissioners that I appealed to for my discharge, it would show you that it is absolutely useless to make any application to the Lunacy Commissioners with a view of getting that discharge, unless it is recommended by the principal medical officer.

20,353. After all, you know, a mental patient is an ill patient?—Sometimes, but sometimes he is perfectly sane, as in my case.

20,354. But assume he is a person who is properly there, and the great bulk of them no doubt are properly there, suffering from varying degrees of mental illness?—But there are a bigger majority, probably, than you suppose who are sane.

20,355. Let me put my point: in the matter of pathology we must rely to a large extent upon the medical adviser in charge of the case, just as we lawyers naturally are relied upon in matters of technical legal affairs?—Quite so.

20,356. And I have a difficulty in seeing how you can invite any visiting committee to overrule the considered opinion of what, after all, is an expert?—My suggestion is that there should be a judicial authority appointed, that in all doubtful cases the patient should be heard, that the patient should have the right of having the protection of counsel, and also be entitled to instruct a solicitor.

20,357. Earl Russell: At the public expense?—And they should be heard before a judicial authority just in the same way as an ordinary case is heard in any Court of the United Kingdom; and the case for the doctor should be presented before the Court, and also the case for the patient.

20,358. Chairman: Are you contemplating this in ordinary pauper cases?—I do not say for the ordinary pauper cases; I say for any person who chooses to ask for it; that under any new Act which may be the result of this Royal Commission, a judicial authority should be appointed whom the patient could apply to for a hearing of his case where his discharge is systematically refused. And I go further. I say that in a case of paupers a subsidy should be allowed by the State to enable them to pay any costs, in order to free those who are not in a position to remit.

20,359. Earl Russell: And how often do you contemplate they should be allowed to make this application—once only, or at intervals?—I say at periods of either three months or six months; certainly, three months for choice, from the point of view of the patient.

20,360. That might mean a good many inquiries, might it not?—So there ought to be. If a man is a sane man, what right has anybody to keep him detained and shut up? No right whatever, and therefore it is far better that an opportunity should be given for a reconsideration of the case. You have only got to consider a man at the present time, an exactly similar case to mine, Mr. S. I had 25 years of it. S. had six, but he has been absolutely driven insane, and is now in B., but he was put in at His Majesty's pleasure, which is a totally different thing. I was fortunate enough to get a sentence of six months; after that six months they could not detain me; but in the case of S. he is more or less there for life.

20,361. I am putting to you the case of a man who has had a judicial inquiry, and has been found to be properly detained; I am asking you whether you think that every three months he is to have a fresh inquiry?—No, not at all. My proposal is that a man should have a right of asking for an inquiry every three months; but if an inquiry is held, naturally that ought to hold good for a distinctive period, probably, I should think, for 12 months. But I say that in 12 months many cases have a chance of recovery and do recover, and therefore they should not be detained when they have recovered for a considerable time afterwards.

21 October, 1925.]

Mr. L.

[Continued.]

20,362. Chairman: We naturally have received many suggestions of all sorts. There is one suggestion which we are considering which may go far to alleviate the position you are putting, i.e., that if certification is postponed and a period of observation and examination of the case interposed, it is very probable that many cases will not be certified at all that are at present being certified?—Quite so; they should not be.

20,363. I do not think you need elaborate that aspect of it, because we have heard a great deal about it, and that is one of the matters we are considering very fully?—Quite so; I only wish to support that view.

20,364. What I should like so much is the personal experiences of witnesses like yourself; because you can imagine that general questions of reform we can pretty well appreciate—I mean we have heard a great deal of the general aspects of the matter?—Perhaps some of the submissions which I could bring before you have not been considered by you.

20,365. Those you have mentioned have already been very fully considered.—That was in answer to your question.

20,366. I am anxious to get from you matters which in your own experience seem to call for reform. You say it is undesirable to have patients herded together without classification. You said you noticed that many seemed to be idle and unemployed and you recommend further facilities for recreation and employment. Now what else did you notice in those institutions while you were there, which seemed to you to call for reform?—Especially diet. One of the principal remedial measures is the question of diet which is undoubtedly recognised by all the medical profession. That is the principal remedial measure, for any hope of recovery. Now the diet, as a matter of fact, is absolutely poor; in the county asylums it is disgraceful, and even in places like V. and W. There is not sufficient supervision; and I should like to put this point forward, that it is impossible for the doctor to look after his patients from the medical point of view, and be an administrator at the same time. There is required a very large increase both in the medical staff and in the nursing staff, because it is an impossible task for a man; for instance in the case of W. there were two doctors there, and I should think there were about 700 patients, and therefore any curative treatment was absolutely impossible. He does not even know the men; he goes through them, but he does not know them personally, and therefore it is impossible. I say that the two functions should be separated. There should be an administrator, or a visiting committee or a sub-committee of the visiting committee should be appointed, to be the administrator to the asylum; and the medical officer should be occupied in attempting to improve the mental state of the patients. At present he has not got the time to do it, because his time is so fully occupied in an administrative capacity.

20,367. What is wrong with the food now?—For instance—I do not say that this takes place systematically, but even in a place like V., which is I should say one of the best places in England, the food is insufficient, unless you pay extra for late dinner. In the case of extra payment you do get sufficient food, but a sufficiency of food is certainly necessary in order to regain your mental health.

20,368. Mr. Micklem: What about the food at H.?—At H. it was extremely bad; there is too much of it; it is cooked in a disgraceful way, and it is simply piled up on your plate, every sort of thing, potatoes and greens, and they simply sicken you with the amount they give you. It is extremely badly cooked, and very badly served, and is in no way the sort of food that anyway a private patient in ordinary life would be accustomed to. I cannot answer for the pauper patient, but the cooking when I was there was extremely bad. I submit that whoever does the cooking, a better class of cook should be engaged.

20,369. Chairman: Of course, you know probably that the whole question of the dietary in the L. County institutions has been recently overhauled very closely?—Yes.

20,370. And an improved dietary has been introduced? You are speaking of 1919, which was indeed a year after the conclusion of the war, and it is satisfactory for you to know that the matter has been gone into?—Quite so. Of course, naturally, I can have no remedy for my past troubles. I come here to-day only with a view of alleviating the sufferings of those poor people that may be there now, or who may be there in the future, and the point which I wish to make is that it is impossible for the principal medical officer to see to everything which he does at the present moment. The visiting committee virtually do little or nothing except to come in at certain stated times, have about five minutes' conversation with the various patients, who are all more or less applying for discharge or parole, or something of that sort; and outside the question of finance have very little to do with the arrangement of the institution, and it all falls on the doctor. I submit that all these questions of diet, of exercise, and of food—I formed personally a sports committee at W., and we gave sports very successfully; I formed it with one of the junior doctors and several of the attendants there, and we improved the condition of things very greatly indeed. The point I wish to make is that a sub-committee should be appointed by the visiting committee, with a view of paying attention to these questions of diet, of exercise and of entertainments; that it is impossible for a doctor to do everything that he is required to do at the present day.

20,371. At V. was the food better?—The food as a rule was very good. I only have one point to make as regards V., and that is that the porridge which we had for about three weeks was in a sour state, and I personally found in my bowl of porridge a sort of meal maggot about 1½ inches long—of course, that was an accident, probably, as far as I was concerned.

20,372. They do not always make the best porridge in England, you know?—No, but if you had a sub-committee who could examine these things and go into them, this committee might listen to the complaints, and you might get improvements. At the present time the doctor has not got time to listen to you, and will not listen to you.

20,373. Tell me about your interviews with the visiting committee. Did you have any talks with the members of the visiting committee yourself?—Nearly every single visiting committee, and nearly all the Lunacy Commissioners.

20,374. Had you any difficulty in having that talk with them when you wanted?—None whatever, but it was absolutely useless. They pay no attention whatever to it. They hear your case, and they then go to the doctor and ask the doctor whether this man is fit to be discharged; if the doctor says no, there is an end of it, but if the doctor says, "Well, I think it is a case where he might be let out on trial," then the committee will consider the question and probably decide that he may be let out.

20,375. Earl Russell: But suppose that I am a member of a visiting committee without any medical knowledge. Would you expect me to set my opinion above that of the doctor if he says a patient is definitely insane?—No, certainly not; but I should like you to hear more evidence of the individual case. The mere statement of the doctor is not sufficient for you to form a judgment upon at all.

21 October, 1925.]

Mr. L.

[Continued.]

20,376. Are you quite sure that that is all the evidence the visiting committee have?—No. Of course, there are papers given, and a certain account of the patient, we all know that; but very often those statements made in those reports and papers are wholly incorrect and erroneous—they were in my case from the start; and therefore every person who read the particulars of my case obtained an erroneous view, because it was formulated on false information, made by the police originally, when I was first placed under the mental observation order.

20,377. I was going to say the visitor does begin, does he not, by hearing the patient's own statement of what he has to say?—Quite so; but as a rule he pays no attention to it at all, and you can do so as often as you like without any result whatever. During the time I was there I never heard of any man getting out by any assistance given by the visiting committee. Every man who did get out got out simply and solely by the medical officer. I submit that the visiting committee should not be bound so much by the autocratic system which is now in force, which gives such terrible power to one single man, the principal medical officer; but that in doubtful cases, where a patient's discharge is systematically refused, he should be able to apply to a judicial authority to have his case heard, as he can under the Act at the present moment, if he can get outside and get a solicitor to act for him. At present the judicial authority reports to the Lunacy Commissioners.

20,378. Chairman: You saw some of the Commissioners, did you, from the Board of Control?—Nearly all of them. I know some of them personally. Mr. Trevor was agent for my uncle, who was Member of Parliament for K. for 19 years and a great nephew of R. G., K.C., M.P. Mr. Trevor was his election agent. He was one of the worst.

20,379. Why was it—because he knew you best, or what?—I do not know whether he had a vindictiveness against my uncle or not, but he vented it on me, or perhaps he thought my uncle had not treated him sufficiently well.

20,380. However, we understand your point. Now I want to ask you this: you had opportunities of observation in these institutions. What do you say about the treatment of the patients?—I say that, virtually, there is no curative treatment at all. As regards treatment from the point of view of cruelty, of course I personally did not see very much, though we heard all sorts of tales and yarns from various people, but I do not wish to put hearsay evidence before this Commission.

20,381. Were tales of all sorts going round the institution?—Yes, all sorts of yarns, but then I mean you take them cum grano salis, and one does not pay attention to a large number of them because it depends upon from whom they come.

20,382. Was this among the patients?—Among the patients, what had been done to them and so forth. But from my personal observation, of course, the cases were not very many, but I saw one or two.

20,383. What incidents did you see?—For instance at V. there was a man called B. who was a brutal bully. We were going to have a cricket match, and one of these men was anxious to be wicket keeper; I do not say that he was the best wicket keeper in the place, but he evidently thought he was better than most people did, so he got hold of a pair of wicket keeper's gloves and he put them on, and would not take them off, and when B. went up to him he ran away. B. ought to have run after him and taken these gloves off him and put them on the man who was usually the wicket keeper; instead of which, he barged or threw himself on this man as hard as he could in the way that a professional footballer would and knocked him flying right up against a tree, which might have given him concussion of the brain: as a matter of fact it did not, because his head just missed the tree, but it was a brutal sort of thing to do; and it was quite unnecessary, and the end of it was that the wicket keeper's gloves were taken away from this man and the match commenced. But my point is that they used brutality when it was unnecessary, and if you make a complaint of what you have seen to the principal medical officer when he comes his round the following morning, he always upholds his staff and does not pay the slightest attention to what any of the patients say; he treats them as if they were non compos mentis, and they are not.

20,384. Tell me any other incident besides this wicket keeper?—Another case was at H.; there was a small boy of about 16; he was virtually more or less a mere skeleton; he was undoubtedly incurably insane, but he was put in the padded cell, he was stark naked, and the attendants brought him out in the state he was. He was kept in the padded cell stark naked all day long because as soon as any clothes were put on him he took them off. He had not got the strength to do any damage; but simply, from the point of view of indecency, he was therefore put into the padded cell; the attendants put a towel round his loins, brought him out and began spanking him and making him sing. This was the case of a boy; I should think he was probably not more than a seven months' child, and he was deficient in every sort of way with no hope of cure.

20,385. But were they cruel to him?—Certainly I call that cruelty, if they smack a boy all over, two or three of them, and when his own power of speech was so slight that he could hardly articulate at all, they were trying to make him sing.

20,386. Was that teasing him, or what was the object of it?—Yes, teasing him and laughing at him and mocking him. That sort of thing never comes to the notice of the visiting committee and never comes to the notice of the principal medical officer; because if you make any complaint as regards food then you will get less of it. For instance, at W. the whole of the potatoes for nearly nine months I was there were full of wireworms—of course the wireworms were dead, but you could see the tracks of them naturally; but if I make a complaint to the doctor about anything in the food, or insufficiency, I get less of it as a punishment by the attendants. The same thing obtains at B., in order to intimidate patients so as to prevent them from making any complaint at all. The only chance, if you want to get out, is to say that everything is perfect, and that can only be known by the people who have gone through this sort of treatment, and is not known by the doctor or the visiting committee at all.

20,387. What about the relatives of the patients. Did your sister go and see you or did you see any of your relatives while you were at any of these institutions?—No, not as far as W. was concerned. The only place I saw them was down at H., when I got two of them to come and remove me to V.

20,388. I was thinking of the relatives who are paying, as they often are, for the maintenance of patients.—Many people will pay in order to keep him there.

20,389. Be it so. If a patient complains to a relative that he is not being properly fed, one would imagine the relatives would go to the medical superintendent and say, "This will not do; I am paying for this patient, and he ought to be properly fed."—No, with all due deference to you, I submit in the first place the complaints are not passed on at all; and your letters—that is another suggestion which you may not have had which I wish to make, that all letters which are censored by the principal medical officer should be returned to the sender; he does not know whether the letters go or not.

20,390. Mr. Micklem: Before you go to the letters let me ask you this. Why should the attendants object to your complaining of the food?—Because they hate to be complained about, it reflects on them and their management, and they naturally attain a higher position according to the view which is held by the doctor of their capacity.

20,391. Earl Russell: But the attendants in a ward have nothing to do either with the preparation or the choosing of the food?—I am not talking about the choosing of the food; my statement is that if you complain about it, you get punished for it.

21 October, 1925.]

Mr. L.

[Continued.]

Earl Russell: But Mr. Micklem asks you why.

20,392. Mr. Micklem: Why should the attendants object to your complaining? They are not responsible?—Because they hate any sort of complaint at all being made to the doctor when he comes round. If you make any complaint against the ward or anything, you always either get punished for it or you get a statement made, which is harmful to yourself in the opinion of the doctor, by the attendants. I mean absolutely false accusations. For instance, I will give you an example of one or two cases—one at H. When we were in the infirmary at H. there was a light burning at night, and it was just above my bed. I asked the attendant in the night infirmary ward there if he would lower the gas; I could not sleep while the gas was alight. He had a night book, and he would not put the light down. I went round and looked in the night book. He had put a note for the benefit of the doctor when he read the reports of the night, that I was dictatorial and interfering.

20,393. Earl Russell: You say this was at H.—do you not mean B.?—B., yes; I stand corrected there. He put that down, because I asked to have the gas turned down in order to sleep, that I was dictatorial and interfering. That was put in for the benefit of the doctor. I happened to suspect this man, and I went round to see what he had written down because I saw him commence writing, and I knew he made a report every night. Then I complained to the doctor that false reports had been sent in to the doctor, but he said, “I do not pay any attention to them and it does not matter,” but still he probably does; because if you have complaints from a man which are made from the point of view of vindictiveness, it does to a certain extent affect the mind of the doctor and prejudices the doctor's mind against the patient.

20,394. Chairman: You were dealing with letters?—Yes. Now the question of letters and having communication with the outside world is a point which I should like to press—that greater opportunities should be given for the sending of letters, and there should be a letter box somewhere in the grounds which should be able to be cleared by the postal authorities outside of the asylum authorities altogether; that the postman should collect those letters without any interference of the asylum authorities; that the letters could be posted when the men are out for their exercise in the yard; that one side of the letter box should be inside the yard and the other part of it (for clearing) should be on the outside, and the letters collected by the postal authorities. In that case the patients would have greater opportunities of communicating with their friends and relatives. At present they have no chance whatever in most cases, because the letters in, I suppose 95 cases out of 100, are censored and not posted.

20,395. Sir David Drummond: Are you aware of the contents of these letters, sometimes filth and nastiness?—Of course I admit that some of the letters are absolute nonsense from start to finish, but if they are and they are not sent, I submit that the sender of them should have the letters returned and the doctor should say why he is not sending them. The patient does not know whether the letter has gone or not. I daresay in 75 per cent. of the cases that the letters are absolute nonsense from start to finish; my remarks do not apply to those.

20,396. They do contain filth and nastiness?—I know nothing about that.

20,397. That is so.—Certainly, if there is anything of that sort, and if it is not commonsense in the letter, and the statements are not justified, naturally I would say that they are rightly censored; but what I do say is that the doctor should return the letters to the sender so as to let him know that he is not going to let him send them.

20,398. Earl Russell: But the suggestion you made just now would give the doctor no chance of censoring them?—That is a greater improvement still, except in the cases which have just been suggested. I did not know they were as bad as that; but if they are, those cases could be so classified that they would not have an opportunity of posting their letters in that box at all.

20,399. But you admit that 75 per cent. of the letters are insane?—I do not admit it. I say it is possible that a large number of those letters that are written are not ordinary commonsense.

20,400. Mr. Micklem: Your suggestion would be that there is no harm in them?—If they are mere nonsense, well let them go; it does not matter.

20,401. Chairman: There are grave difficulties in that proposal. Suppose some patients, as many do, spend their whole time in writing letters, are these letters to be put into the post office box? First of all, how are they to be stamped? His Majesty's Postmaster-General requires that letters should be stamped before they are posted. It would not be a very pleasant thing for a relative to receive a dozen letters a day on each of which he has to pay 3d. because the medical officer was allowing this patient to send all these letters?—No, but I submit this, that if there is better classification, those very bad cases would not go out into that yard—that that yard would only be for those doubtful cases where men are perfectly capable of writing sensible letters.

20,401a. Very few of these letters, you may take it, are stopped?—I have had letters stopped, and I was out on parole all the time, and I was told by Dr. M., who was the principal medical officer at V., that if I wrote to my petitioner and sent it under cover—the letter I wished to send to my petitioner—he could not interfere with it. That I know, of course, under the Lunacy Acts.

20,402. Mr. Micklem: When you were on parole you could post them where you liked?—You give your word of honour that you will not do so; otherwise they probably will not give you parole. What I submit is that greater opportunity should be given in the future to the inmates of these asylums to communicate with their families and the outside world.

20,403. Earl Russell: But this is news to me. Does your parole include an undertaking not to post letters?—Certainly, and not only that; but Field-Marshal Sir A. B. was my stepmother's uncle, and I wrote a letter asking him, who was personally known to the King, to bring forward my case to the notice of His Majesty. He declined to do so. My stepmother is the daughter of a Baronet, and also the niece of a Field Marshal. I requested that letter to be sent; he sent all the others, but he would not send that one.

20,404. Chairman: After all, that is a matter for his discretion, you know?—There was nothing in the letter; it was a perfectly sensible letter simply stating my case and asking for an inquiry, and that the statement of Mr. Justice D. had been overruled by the Home Office, and that no inquiry had been made in my case as to whether I was sane, or whether I was not.

Earl Russell: Mr. Chairman, before we part from this patient could you clear up the position as to whether he had a petitioner ultimately when he was in a private asylum, and at what stage that happened?

20,405. Chairman (to the Witness): Had you a petitioner, Mr. L., ultimately?—No, I was under the Home Secretary's warrant. The two usual ways are by petitioner, and also by the Home Secretary's warrant. I had no petitioner, and I did not require one.

20,406. But you referred to your petitioner?—Yes, because the doctor was under a wrong impression, and he was more or less stating to me what he should have stated to an ordinary patient. I was under the Home Office warrant, therefore his statement to me that I could get my letters sent by sending them to my petitioner was virtually erroneous; though, as a matter of fact, my sister petitioned to remove me from H. to V.

21 October, 1925.]

Mr. L.

[Continued.]

20,407. The person who is paying on your behalf is treated as equivalent to your petitioner?—She was not paying.

20,408. Who was paying?—I was paying most of it.

20,409. Somebody must have been doing it for you. Was it your solicitor originally—I mean you were not drawing cheques yourself?—I had the Official Solicitor, who arranged the whole of my estate and property; he ran the whole thing.

20,410. Mr. Micklem: Did the Official Solicitor pay you a personal visit, or his clerk?—Never, but a Mr. T., who is a man with a great experience of something like 40 years at the Official Solicitor's office, came down and saw me and had a conversation with me at V.; and he told me he would recommend me for release, as, in his opinion, I was a perfectly sane man. Mr. Trevor (that is one of the points I have against Mr. Trevor) came down shortly after. I can give you the actual dates; it is hardly necessary because I am trying to make this evidence as short as possible; and I said to Mr. Trevor: "Mr. T. came down here, and, in his opinion, he says I am perfectly sane, and that he would recommend my release." Mr. Trevor turned round and said: "Oh, T., why T. is only a clerk." Well, in my view, Mr. T. had a much greater knowledge and experience than Mr. Trevor. He had been 40 years in the Official Solicitor's office, and did more or less nothing else. Mr. Trevor was originally an election agent, and got this appointment, and had been for only a few years a Lunacy Commissioner.

20,411. Chairman: Now, Mr. L., our next witness is waiting for us. Is there anything else you can tell us before you leave?—Yes, there are several points as to the actual clauses of the Act.

20,412. May we take it that they are those which you have set out for us. If I run through them with you will that be the best plan do you think?—So far as I have stated them at the present moment.

20,413. Just to see how far we have covered the ground?—Yes. I should be much obliged.

20,414. Then, first of all, you have a recommendation with regard to the right of patients to see the judicial authority. You have practically told us your views with regard to that matter. Then you say, "Power for a relation or friend to take charge of a lunatic should be made easier." That is related to your views on parole?—Quite so, and that there should be an increase of parole.

20,415. "Powers to appoint substitute for the person who applied for reception order extended especially to those patients under Home Secretary's warrant." You think there should be the equivalent of a petitioner in the case of such persons?—Certainly, and who would be empowered to demand his release in the ordinary way that a petitioner does.

20,416. We have your view. Then you recommend that "absence on trial should be made more easy to obtain and more frequently given." On that I notice that on the 26th October, 1921, after you had been just a little less than a year in W., you were sent out on trial and were discharged?—That is so, under the view of the chairman of the visiting committee, Dr. S., of New College, who is now dead, I think, and the principal medical officer.

20,417. Then you recommend that Section 72, subsection 2, should be made more definite especially in the case of those patients who are under Home Office warrant. You suggest that the powers under Section 75 should be enlarged, and then you suggest that the copies of reception orders, and all particulars of the case affecting the patient, should be given to him. We have heard a good deal of evidence upon that; I do not think you need enlarge upon that aspect. Then you suggest that penalties should be increased for the defaults of the medical officers' administrative staffs, and that greater facilities should be given to patients to communicate with the local police or solicitors in the case of unwarrantable assaults by attendants on patients; and you propose that the Ministry of Health should be made a court of appeal from the Board of Control. You further suggest that the transfers to private medical men and hostels should be more easily obtainable?—Yes.

20,418. Then you have given your views about correspondence; and you further propose that part of Section 49 of the Lunacy Act should be eliminated?—The words "who satisfies."

20,419. The words "who satisfies the Commissioners that it is proper for them to grant such order" should be eliminated?—Yes.

20,420. And that all complaints made by patients either to the visiting committee, or the Visitors in Lunacy, should be entered in a book kept for the purpose, and the same should be open to the inspection of all relatives and friends of patients, and copies of the complaints sent to them. Then you express your views as to the legal position of doctors who have certified wrongly. Well, we need not go into that. Then you make some comments on the system of police procedure. Again that is not quite within our province. I think we really have covered most of the points upon which you can assist us?—There is one other matter from the legal point of view, and that is that opportunity should be given for a patient who has been wrongly certified, to bring an action in the High Court. As you no doubt are well aware, a large amount of money has been spent by a considerable number of men who have been wrongly incarcerated, such as the E. case and the B. case, and the various other cases; and in one case something like £30,000 was spent in various actions in the High Court lately with a view of getting damages from the doctors who have wrongly certified sane men. Now I think that there should be some clause in the new Lunacy Act, if it ever reaches the statute book, that if a doctor wrongly certifies a patient he should be liable in damages to the patient.

20,421. Even although he does it bonâ fide?—Ah, well, of course that is a tremendous question for argument as to what bonâ fide is.

Mr. Micklem: That would not alter the law, would it?

20,422. Chairman: He is liable at the present moment if he does it without proper care?—"Reasonable care," I think; but the point is, what is "reasonable care"? The law in the future should eliminate that word "reasonable."

20,423. Earl Russell: It is a question for a jury, is it not?—And some other word should be inserted which would give the patient a better right, or a better chance, of gaining his case.

20,424. Chairman: Well, Mr. L., I do not think we will enter upon that topic just now. We are fully alive to it, and it is too long a matter to take up at the end of your evidence?—Yes, but virtually a man has no remedy after he has come out, of bringing an action with any chance of success.

20,425. We appreciate that. I should like to correct some of the figures you have given us. The actual number of patients at V. was 331, on the 1st of January, 1924, and at W. 87, so the figures you have given us are rather inaccurate. 87 is the number of patients at W?—But that is not including the women—not the whole establishment.

20,426. The total number of lunatics at the 1st of January, 1924, in W.?—There were many more than that. There were, I should think, that number of women. I think statistics are not always proof.

Chairman: Well, Mr. L., we must now take our next witness. We are obliged to you for coming here this morning, and we hope you are also satisfied with the audience we have given you?

Witness: Absolutely. I only hope that the sufferings of those in asylums at the present time and of those who eventually get out will have more considerate treatment than they have to-day.

21 October, 1925.]

Mr. L.

[Continued.]

20,427. That is one of the matters you may be assured we are giving every attention to.—The principal point I would like to put before the Royal Commission is, that there is too much autocratic power in the doctor, and the visiting committee do not in any way act without his assistance or sanction, and that power should be given for application to be made to some judicial authority.

Chairman: We will take that as your parting recommendation, Mr. L.

Witness: Thank you.

(The Witness withdrew.)

Miss G., called and examined.

20,428. Chairman: You are Miss G., I understand?—Yes.

20,429. May I just say, before we go into your evidence in some detail, that the aspect of it which interests us specially is this, that you were a voluntary patient?—So called.

20,430. So called, I know. We have not had the advantage hitherto, as far as I know, of seeing any person who has entered an institution voluntarily. Your special point, I take it, is that, having entered an institution as a voluntary patient, you found yourself converted into an involuntary patient?—Immediately.

20,431. We are very anxious to know (I am sure I speak for my colleagues also) your experiences in that respect, how you came to enter the institution, and how you came to be dealt with compulsorily; because, you see, we are considering the extension of the voluntary system, and we are very anxious to know of any points in the voluntary system that are unsatisfactory.—Do you mean, Mr. Chairman, compulsory under an order, or compulsory under false imprisonment?

20,432. This is rather the aspect of it that is in my mind. There is a considerable movement for an extension of the voluntary system—that is to say, for patients being treated without the stigma of certification. On the other hand, there is a risk attached to that system; and I understand you are one of those who can tell us of the risks which you encountered, and of what befel you. Having consented to be a voluntary patient, you found yourself converted into an involuntary patient. That is one of the risks we shall have to guard against if we propose any extension of the voluntary system. Your experience may be helpful to us in making recommendations in regard to the treatment of voluntary patients. It is that aspect of it which is special to your case, and we should like to hear your views?—I think I ought to mention first, Mr. Chairman, the fact which I now know, that the Commission are only prepared to give a very short time to the hearing of my case.

20,433. We will give you a full hour.—I call that a very short time for a case of a criminal conspiracy; because what I think you mean by my treatment—that is possibly involving allegations of cruelty as it does to a voluntary boarder—I have put that all before you in the article I sent you; and that is not what my proof and my original application state as being the important matters upon which I can prove my charge of criminal conspiracy. I mean it seems to me that allegations of cruelty which are all open to immediate disproof by the mere word of some eminent doctor, as taken against the word of a person afterwards certified, would be very painful matters for me to give and very useless matters for me to give, as compared with the evidence of criminal procedure, including forgery, by the persons under whose allegations I was confined.

20,434. The trouble about that is this: that we are not a judicial body and we cannot enter into topics which have been the subject of litigation. I should have thought myself that the contribution you could have made to the cause which you have at heart, would be most useful if you were to discuss with us the question of the voluntary patient; because I have read, of course, the paper you sent me, and the experiences which you relate are very painful; and one would like to be able, in making any recommendations as to the extension of the voluntary system, to ensure that such things did not occur in other cases as seem to have occurred in your case. It is your experiences as a voluntary patient which struck me as being one of those matters on which you could particularly assist us. Perhaps I may help you to see what is in our mind?—I have taken legal advice on the meaning of your original letter, Mr. Chairman, in which you say the Commission would be unable to investigate matters which have been the subject of judicial proceedings. All these criminal matters have never been before any Court of any kind, with the sole exception of a short hearing before the late Mr. Justice B. in Chambers when he said I need not give the details of the alleged irregularities; but the only matters that have been the subject of judicial proceedings (and this my legal advisers were puzzled by in your letter) are the matters which constituted I should say my voluntary boarder treatment. If you ask me for evidence upon that, the best evidence I can give you is the concentrated evidence in my statement of particulars. There was a judicial finding of sorts upon that, that there had been no breach of contract. My contract was held only to cover the voluntary boarder period, and that was the only matter which was the subject of judicial proceedings.

20,435. Of course we are not really greatly interested in legal technicalities here; we are looking at the problem in its broad aspect. I would like to put this question to you: Are you in favour of the voluntary system of entering institutions, provided it is adequately safeguarded; do you think it is a good system?—I am very much in favour of the Maudsley system, but that is the one and only system in which a doctor has been found to hold out at great odds, I understand, against the possibility of certification in that institution.

20,436. Now there we are just touching upon what I think is a very important question. You would be in favour of institutions where patients who desired treatment could obtain it voluntarily; but I understand you think that in such institutions there should never be certification of those cases?—I think that not only should there never be certification, but there should be a very clear definition beforehand, Mr. Chairman, that the patient either is lawfully subject to the allegation that he is of unsound mind, or else, as is at present the law, that he is not lawfully subject to that. It is laid down in the early reports, to which I have called your attention in a letter, that at every visit even to licensed houses and registered hospitals it should be ascertained beyond all doubt that the boarder—(of course the word "patient" is always avoided; so far you have used it and I have protested, but I cannot continue to protest)—I mean it is illegal to receive a voluntary boarder as a patient technically, as you know, at the present day.

20,437. Now in the case of the Maudsley system of course the patients enter Maudsley voluntarily?—They do.

20,438. And they are never certified in Maudsley; but, on the other hand, unhappily some of the cases that go into Maudsley become much worse, and it becomes necessary to have them certified. What is done then, of course, is that they are removed from Maudsley and certified elsewhere.—Yes. I have unfortunately myself been obliged to remove a case of the kind that I was very very happy to get into Maudsley; but in the Maudsley Hospital there are, of course, mixed cases; there are cases that I think no doctor would want to call certifiable on admission, and there are distinct cases that are certifiable on admission, although not certified. I mean I could not deny it myself; I would not want to deny it. Now if that is to be the case, that the boarder is to be a person of tainted evidence from the moment they go in—as, of course, I understood myself not to be, and as in law I am not—I mean I understand from legal advisers that it is libel under the present law to use defamatory expressions of a voluntary boarder; but if you ask me, am I in favour of these cases being mixed I scarcely know; I think I am; but I think it should be very clearly defined. I think the Maudsley institution is doing such a very noble work that I should be the last to wish to put any sort of difficulty in their way, or even to suggest it. I do not think I could suggest an improvement on what I know of the Maudsley, much as I am impressed against this system.

21 October, 1925.]

Miss G.

[Continued.]

20,439. Let me ask you this, Miss G. When you unfortunately became ill?—Will you say when I took laudanum, please?

20,440. I thought I was using the most neutral term I could. What would you rather I said?—I was not in the least ill.

20,441. Well, I will put it in another way. When you entered N. on the 26th April, 1917, I understand that you wanted to go there yourself as a voluntary boarder?—I cannot agree that, though I will not quibble about it. My family wanted me to go, and I consented under great pressure. There was this scandal, as it has been called, about my having attempted suicide. I was no more ill than Dr. H. when he attempted suicide, whom the Recorder of L. discharged with high eulogy and without imprisonment. What I craved was that I should be lawfully dealt with. I was exceedingly ignorant of the law at that time; and if it was a crime, I hope I was woman enough to receive the sentence for my crime, but I had not the ghost of a notion at that time that if I was accepted as a voluntary patient, that is as a sane patient which I was in law, I could afterwards on the mere allegation of this crime be made out to be insane.

20,442. But let us take matters in order. You consented as you say under pressure from your relatives to go in as a voluntary boarder to N.?—Yes.

20,443. Now I suppose you understood there that going in as a voluntary boarder you were at liberty to leave whenever you wanted to?—Absolutely.

20,444. You told us you signed a contract: I suppose that was the usual contract that you would obey the rules of the institution and would not leave without 24 hours' notice?—No, there was no 24 hours' notice.

Mr. Micklem: Have you got a copy of the contract?

20,445. Chairman: It would be interesting to see the terms on which you entered N.?—There was no mention of notice, and that at least has been decided in Parliament and in the Courts, that the registered hospitals have no right to impose such a notice.

20,446. Can you give Mr. Micklem and us a copy of the contract you made with N. when you went in?—I must ask you to excuse the fact that it is a copy which has some pencil notes on it because I thought this would not be taken as a subject of the ordinary strict laws. (Handing in the document.)

20,447. May we just get this down on the note? It is interesting to us to see what is asked of a voluntary boarder. Miss G.'s copy of her application to the hospital reads: "I, the undersigned, hereby request to be allowed to be received into the above-named hospital as a voluntary boarder for treatment. I promise to conform to the rules and regulations of the hospital so long as I am residing there." That is dated 26th April, 1917, and is addressed to the medical superintendent of the hospital?—May I point out that in every other place it is called "Hospital for Mental Diseases." It is a printed document, and in this particular document that was omitted.

20,448. Has that got the rules and regulations that are referred to here?—The printed document?

20,449. Yes?—That is a typescript facsimile of the printed contract that the voluntary boarders sign.

20,450. Had you seen the rules and regulations before you signed them?—No; that is admitted, that they were not brought to my notice.

20,451. Did you see them afterwards?—I asked for them, but I was refused them. There are no printed rules and regulations for boarders, only for certified lunatics.

20,452. Mr. Micklem: In your statement you say there was a printed contract document supplied by Dr. R. on 30th April which contains exhaustive provisions for an extended stay, including funeral arrangements?—That was a contract statement signed by a third party behind my back.

20,453. That is what I want to see. Have you got that?—This is what I very particularly object to. (Handing in the document.)

Chairman: This is the document under which a relative becomes responsible for the keep of the voluntary boarder, and a similar document is taken at Maudsley also from the relatives of any boarder.

Earl Russell: How is she described in the document?

Chairman: "In consideration that the Governors of — Hospital for Mental Diseases situate at N. will provide lodging maintenance, care and medical treatment for Miss G. a boarder in the said hospital."

Witness: It is there called a hospital for mental diseases. I should not have signed in the first place without asking the question, "Am I supposed to be treated here for any mental disease?" Of course, I should immediately have been put under an urgency order; that I know now, but at any rate I should not have had the horror of having signed my own doom in that way.

20,454. Earl Russell: A boarder, of course, means a voluntary boarder?—Oh, yes. May I say that, in my submission, the important point of my contract—which was found in the Courts by the jury and Mr. Justice D. to be a contract with myself, and that the document which the defendants put in was no contract—may I say that the important point is that the words "as such" are left out. In the contract put forward by the defendants in this case they said, "so long as she remains as such." Of course, I should not have signed it. No one believing themselves to be sane would, I think, be quite so insane as to sign a document which says, "so long as I remain as such," meaning, if I cannot help going insane—

20,455. Is not the issue a much larger one than a mere verbal matter of that sort? The real question in the public interest that we are considering is how the voluntary system may be best safeguarded. You are a person who is able to tell us that in your case it was inadequately safeguarded; we want to see that it is properly safeguarded in the future. It is not a matter of words, it is a matter of substance?—Mr. Chairman, if this Commission does not regard that as a misrepresentation, do you think people like myself will believe that so long as I am residing there I am a person not residing "as such"—and so long as I reside there I am a person who is under a promise and an obligation, which I could not undertake if there was any suggestion that during a part of my residence there I should be a person from whom it would be immoral to ask a promise.

20,456. But you appreciate the practical bearing of it. Do you suggest that the documents which are signed by a voluntary boarder on entering an institution are at present unfortunately worded and ought to be worded differently?—I suggest they are criminal misrepresentations.

20,457. How do you think they should be worded? What is the form which you suggest a voluntary boarder should be asked to sign on entering an institution?—I did not think you would do me the honour to ask me to suggest it. I have one suggestion, and the very first is that if the voluntary boarder document mentions the word "treatment," then the nature of the treatment should be plainly indicated by calling the hospital a hospital for mental diseases. I did not know that the hospital at N. was a hospital for mental diseases alone. I think many people might go into these beautiful houses and suspect nothing of the kind. When they ask for treatment they ask for rest and cure, as I did, as was admitted on oath. They should at least be allowed to know if they are signing their own names to a request for mental treatment. I do not think you would get any sane person to do that, and I should be sorry if any sane person would do it.

21 October, 1925.]

Miss G.

[Continued.]

20,458. You see, in Maudsley you consent to become a voluntary boarder there, and the treatment that is given at Maudsley is treatment for mental ailments?—Yes, and Mr. Chairman, the conditions which apply to them on entrance do, in fact, as well as in law, apply to them so long as they reside there; they cannot be anything else but voluntary boarders.

20,459. Then would you suggest that the model is the form that is adopted at Maudsley?—I am not very well acquainted with it, but no suggestion has occurred to me for improving that.

20,460. You see a voluntary boarder entering Maudsley has to sign a consent to enter, and then there also has to be a document signed by a relative undertaking responsibility for the monetary side of the transaction, and agreeing to remove the boarder if called upon to do so. There must be somebody, you know, outside who will undertake the responsibility?—I fully admit that, and it is a very painful responsibility and, as I say, I have had to undertake it in one case. But now that you ask me that question I do remember one thing, and that is of course that the question of the 24 hours' notice to leave seems to me to require very very careful explanation. Does it mean to leave, or does it mean to leave the hospital, that is to say, for a walk, or does it mean to quit, as the reports of the Board of Control always put it? I mean if the boarder has got to give 24 hours' notice to leave the hospital in the ordinary sense, then every walk that a voluntary boarder takes has got to be taken on the following day, so to speak, and they are in a very much worse position.

20,461. I am afraid we are getting into mere verbal niceties; everybody knows what 24 hours' notice means.—Then do I understand that you think that the voluntary boarder has the right to go out of doors, to leave the hospital in ordinary circumstances?

20,462. No, because they have undertaken to reside in the place, and not to leave it except at 24 hours' notice. The question of going out from time to time is a question for the doctor's discretion?—It is not really so at N. at present.

20,463. Is it not?—Oh no, Mr. Chairman. There was a genuine voluntary boarder there who, for special reasons, could not be certified; while I was there, she took a railway journey to Birmingham entirely without permission.

20,464. Surely by arrangement with the medical officer?—No; she would not have been allowed to. Immediately I was a genuine voluntary boarder I consulted a lawyer and protected my position. I did become a voluntary boarder again for special reasons. That was another form of trap which I should like to put before you. I signed the voluntary boarder document a second time, but that time there was no pretence of keeping me in bed. I received visits from my brother, and I immediately consulted a lawyer, but, of course, without telling the authorities.

20,465. Now you consented to go into this institution at N. as a voluntary boarder. I understand that you have reason to complain of what happened to you there; would you just tell us as simply as you can what did happen to you, and what you complain of, so that we may see that these things do not befall anybody else in the future?—May I read you (because I shall be shorter in doing so) the particulars that I was bidden to give in the case.

20,466. We would very much rather have it in the form that we are having it just now, because we can get the points we want. When you arrived at the institution, how were you received? We are practical people here, Miss G.; we are really not much concerned with the legal technicalities. We want to get a practical view of the question?—I have put it in a concentrated form which I thought would take up very much less of your time.

20,467. Would you like to hand it in, and we can read it for ourselves, if you would rather do it that way?—Yes, I think I have a second copy.

20,468. But I think you should take advantage of my offer, Miss G. I think you could assist us?—I will, with very great pleasure, if you think it will take you a shorter time. After signing the voluntary boarder document I was asked to follow an attendant to a room. I did so, and then I immediately found myself in a very horrible ward—I think I have mentioned this in my proof.

20,469. Yes?—Of course, I am liable to forget little incidents. I said that I had arranged with the brother-in-law doctor who came with me, and I understood he had arranged with the authorities, that I was to spend the afternoon out-of-doors. I was not suffering from lumbago at the time though it was said that I was. I was advised very strongly, by my own doctor, to be a "daughter of the soil," and it was arranged that I should spend the afternoon out-of-doors. It suddenly turned to very fine weather. The attendant replied to me very stonily, "The doctor's orders are that you are to have a bath"—so I objected to that; I asked if I could see the superintendent. I was getting very frightened by this time by the look of the ward—terrified.

20,470. What was alarming about the ward?—There were such obvious lunatics about the ward and of very horrible appearance, one of them in particular—it struck horror into me.

20,471. That is very important?—I was getting very alarmed, so I asked if I could see the superintendent. The attendant, practically turning her back on me, said, "Oh, he sometimes comes round in the evening," so I said, "Well, I do not wish to undress until I have seen him." She said, "If you cannot undress yourself I can get assistance and have you undressed." I then thought it would be less undignified to undress. She then said I was to take my hair down; I said, "I object to taking my hair down." She repeated the remark, "I can get someone to take it down for you."

20,472. What was the object of all this?—It is the rule with troublesome certified lunatics, and no doubt it is necessary in some cases, and I have the admission on oath that the orders received for me were the same in every respect as for certified lunatics.

20,473. Of course you were, in law, a perfectly free agent at this time; you could have walked out again if you had wanted?—An absolutely free agent. I wanted to ask questions of the doctor; I ultimately did, but he stopped me after three days; I was too terrified to ask any more of him.

20,474. On the other hand, if this is a rule of the institution, that persons coming in were to take a bath in the first instance, there was not necessarily anything wrong about that, was there? It may have been distasteful, but many of the rules of an institution to which one goes are distasteful?—That is why I take such exception to that terrible voluntary boarder document, that it made me understand I always had the option as in a hotel.

20,475. Not quite the same as in a hotel, because when one puts oneself under the régime of the doctor one is expected to carry it out. When one sits in a dentist's chair one is able to get up and walk out, but we are more or less under a certain measure of restraint?—Surely not. If you find that the dentist is going to extract sound teeth, surely you can get out of the chair and walk out.

21 October, 1925.]

Miss G.

[Continued.]

20,476. I quite agree, but when one accepts a course of treatment one often has to subject oneself to a number of things which are not very pleasant?—I did subject myself to this institution for a few moments, until I found it was a place that was impossible.

20,477. That aspect of it, to my mind, is by far the gravest aspect of the system: that a boarder entering a place of that sort voluntarily in the hope of finding rest and comfort in it, should find himself or herself mixed up with people, many of whom are alarming and terrifying in their behaviour. It seems to me a most serious thing, because that is very much calculated just to increase the disturbance?—I am very glad to hear you say that, Mr. Chairman.

20,478. I have a very strong view about that, and I think most of my colleagues have the same view, that persons who for the time being are distressed and disturbed and seek a place of retreat, should find themselves amongst people who, instead of comforting them, alarm and terrify them. It is obviously undesirable. What is your experience—did you find yourself among people who were quite unsuitable, and were you not dealt with individually?—No; I was subjected, as I have said, and, as it has been admitted on oath, to all the conditions of a certified lunatic, from the first moment, all of them without exception.

20,479. Sir David Drummond: Did you gather that that was the practice in that institution as regards other voluntary boarders?—Entirely, I had great difficulty in extracting it from the attendant, but under cross-examination the charge attendant admitted that her orders were the same as for certified lunatics.

20,480. Chairman: And was no difference made in your case, although you were a voluntary boarder, from what was done in the case of the patients who were certified?—I will not go so far as to say that no difference was made. I noticed, for instance, a very little thing that I hugged in the hope it meant something: I was allowed a special pot of tea, for instance. I rather protested against the tea because it was out of a tin can, and it was very, very disagreeable, and I was immediately allowed a special pot of tea. I had very great kindness now and then shown to me while I was still in that infirmary ward; I was only there for eight days, and I had very great kindness shown to me. That I took as meaning, on the part of the attendants, a recognition that I was really not a fit person to be there; it was very comforting, indeed, and very reassuring.

20,481. The only thing is this, that when a person undertakes voluntarily to enter one of those institutions, it might be said that you undertake voluntarily to go through the ordinary routine of the establishment, but as a voluntary person, instead of doing it compulsorily?—But always with the alternative of leaving. I mean I have had relatives who have walked out of an ordinary nursing home; but my clothes were taken away. Now, man is an animal who wears clothes, and I can give this Commission no idea of the terror of having one's clothes surreptitiously removed, being forced into a bath and being examined for bruises and all sorts of indignities. What they called bruises were found on me in number; though I pointed out that they had the square outline of mustard plasters, they were taken as bruises. The woman standing about me with a perfectly stony face took down "bruises here and there." I pointed it out then in abject terror, nothing more nor less, but it made no difference at all, she put them down as bruises. I had promised to obey the rules and regulations, and I had obeyed many arduous rules and regulations before. Anyone who has been to Girton College knows about arduous rules and regulations, but I could have walked out of Girton College at any time if they were unendurable, and I supposed I could have walked out of this place.

20,482. Mr. Micklem: You were paying four guineas a week for it?—I was paying four guineas a week, and that was during the time when prices really had not gone up very much. I mean, I could have got accommodation at a hydro, or S.'s Hotel, for that.

20,483. Chairman: Now, first of all, it seems to me that your ground of criticism is that having entered this place as a voluntary boarder, entitled to leave as and when you pleased, you were subjected to association with alarming and terrifying people, and were compelled to take a bath contrary to your wishes, and generally you did not seem to get the consideration to which you were entitled as a voluntary boarder?—I got the most dangerous kind of torture for eight days and nights.

20,484. What sort of accommodation had you at night?—My bed was filthy in some respects, but I did get that changed under repeated protests. I have to say that about the bed, it was absolutely filthy. The habits of the maids, the utterly untrained maids who attended to the room, were very disgusting. I think perhaps the Commission might like, while I am speaking, to look at these particulars which I have mentioned; I know I have a copy. Should I hand them in while I am speaking, or should I hand them in afterwards?

20,485. We do not want too many documents. It always seems to me more impressive if we hear from you yourself what you experienced.

20,486. Sir David Drummond: Could we hear in detail what your objection to the bed and the maids was? Will you please tell us in detail?—It is very disgusting.

20,487. Chairman: Never mind; we are all practical people here?—The bed had evidently last been slept in by a patient who had not passed a certain period. Not the sheets but the blankets bore very distinct marks of that and of other horrors.

20,488. You did not get clean sheets?—Yes, I think I had clean sheets.

20,489. The sheets were clean, but you say the blankets were not clean?—The blankets were not clean. And as regards the disgusting actions, well, a typical one was that the face towel was taken to wipe out the commode.

20,490. Did you see that done by the maid?—Yes.

20,491. Was that the only face towel that you had to use?—No, it was taken away then. I am sorry. It was taken away without my asking.

20,492. Do you mean that the maid who was taking away the slops, putting it quite frankly, used the towel to wipe the vessel?—Yes. I think I did inadvertently give a very exaggerated impression of that.

20,493. It was not the towel you were expected to use after that?—No, it was certainly washed after that.

20,494. That, of course, is not a nice thing to do. An untrained maid might do a thing of that sort?—They were all very untrained.

20,495. These were not the attendants; were they not the domestic staff?—There was no distinction. They were all servants. There were no nurses except the head nurse. I mean there was no one who had any pretence to any nursing degree. The attendants were very largely taken from very rough homes in Ireland, brought straight to the institution; and Dr. R. admitted to Mr. Justice D. that weight was a great consideration; his expression was "They fill a gap better if they are very huge girls."

20,496. Miss Madeleine Symons: Will you tell us what the bathing and washing arrangements were like; were they clean?—Yes, they were quite proper. The lavatory arrangements, closet arrangements, were very careless and rather disgusting; but I have no complaint to find about the bath except, of course, the very, very serious complaint that the bath is originally used as a means of depriving you surreptitiously of your clothes. I should have absolutely refused to undress, if I found that I had to leave my clothes behind in a little room—my clothes, my hat, my bag, and all sorts of things; I was obliged to leave those behind in a little curtained department, and when I got out of the bath everything was gone.

21 October, 1925.]

Miss G.

[Continued.]

20,497. Chairman: Where were they put?—They were taken away, and they were not restored to me until afterwards.

20,498. Could you not have got them if you had asked for them?—I demanded them at first.

20,499. Did they refuse to give them to you?—Absolutely. I was supposed to be under a delusion. The defence is that I never asked to get up. I sent in written notices. I came to the conclusion that perhaps something in writing might be better. I sent in three written notices; they were all denied. What is to prevent that?

20,500. Had you a bedroom to yourself?—I had a very, very small room off the main ward.

20,501. Could you hear what was going on in the ward?—The door is open the whole of the day.

20,502. I am thinking of your comfort. How did you spend your day? Take the first day that you arrived there. Were you put into bed after your experience with regard to the bath?—I was kept in bed the whole of the first day.

20,503. In a small bedroom with an open door, opening off the ward?—Yes.

20,504. Could you hear what was going on in the ward?—Yes, I could hear forcible feeding and everything, and shrieks, of course; I could hear all sorts of painful things besides that; and also the smell was very dreadful at times.

20,505. Did you find all that very disturbing and alarming?—I found it more than anything else terrifying. I mean I knew then that I was trapped; I knew in the first few hours that I was trapped; and the sense of trapping quite obscures any other misery, anything that can be called misery. I am quite sure it is impossible to conceive the meaning of stark terror.

20,506. Speaking from your own experience, what do you suggest as a proper safeguard for a voluntary boarder, who enters an institution, against the possibility of such things happening? I can see myself practical difficulties?—There are.

20,507. Suppose a voluntary boarder agrees to go in, and let us assume everything has been done, and that bed is the proper place; a patient is put to bed. Well, I can see the desirability of having a quiet place certainly, but it might be a very ill-advised thing for the patient to get up at once, put on her clothes, and go away just after she has come in?—That had been arranged by two doctors as my programme for that day, my own doctor, and my brother-in-law doctor who came with me, because of this idea that what I wanted was fresh air and plenty of exercise, and I desired that so myself. Mr. Chairman, I have thought out a little safeguard which perhaps you will allow me to put before you.

20,508. If you please?—That is, instead of what I must call the sham safeguard of giving notice which can be put into the wastepaper basket, there should be a rule that the patient or boarder on his side signs or initials every day a statement that he is willing to remain, and that the absence of that initial on any occasion, if the facts be in dispute, should be evidence that he is not willing to remain.

20,509. Earl Russell: That is a very good idea, but suppose there comes a time when he is ill for three days and is too ill to do it?—You mean that he is mad—that he is insane?

20,510. Physically or mentally ill just for three days—upset in some way?—That is an insuperable difficulty, but I think that there can be no case in which there is not some evidence of insanity which probably the person in question will be very loth to cause to be brought up. I had not thought of that, but you see my suggestions have really been confined only to the case in which the voluntary boarder is sane in law. It does come under the definition in the early report of the Board of Control:

without any doubt, "of sound mind and capable of managing his own affairs," I think it is, and having full knowledge of his ability to leave at any moment—to quit at any moment.

20,511. Chairman: Now I can see in your case, Miss G., that one of your grounds of complaint is that, having entered this place intending to be a voluntary boarder, you were certified in that place?—Yes.

20,512. That is a very definite point?—I was a certified lunatic.

20,513. You were a voluntary boarder, who went in as a voluntary boarder on the 26th April, if I remember aright, and you were certified as a person of unsound mind early on the 8th May?—My certificates, if you mean "certified" in the medical term, are dated May 1st and May 3rd. I was a voluntary boarder and a certified lunatic for many days at the same time, which is an anomaly in itself, and, in my submission, ought not to be contemplated for a moment. I mean I was not under two certificates of lunacy, as you say, "a person of unsound mind," but, in fact, the term "lunatic" was chosen by the last doctor; but I was under a cautionary notice to all nurses as a dangerous lunatic, suicidal and dangerous to myself, and all the time I was a voluntary boarder in law, and according to the doctor's sworn answers I had free ingress and egress at all times.

20,514. Of course, cases must arise where a person who enters as a voluntary boarder unfortunately gets worse and becomes a certifiable case, and may have to be certified. It is a question whether that certification should take place in the same institution. In your case you were certified in the same institution as you had entered voluntarily. The actual admission on the 8th May is as a private patient, after two certificates, one of the 1st and the other of the 3rd May?—I was certified on the 1st May, and again certified on the 3rd.

20,515. Now, you think that you should have left the place, and, if it were necessary that you should have been certified, that you should have been certified outside the institution altogether?—Yes. As you have asked me to make a suggestion, I have only to say that Section 13 of the Act gives the necessary and, in my opinion, sufficient conditions for certifying all such cases. I have had this question raised in Parliament, and the answer was that the steps are laid down in the rules of the Act, but they did not say which section. I can find no section, and I know of no one else who has found any section which admits of lawfully certifying.

20,516. Will you tell us the circumstances under which you came to be certified. Having started, as you told us, as a voluntary boarder, how did the certification come about. Do you remember being seen by a doctor?—Oh, yes, a gentleman in khaki was introduced to me on the fifth morning (I have put it in my proof, I think), by Dr. M., who was the doctor on the women's side, whom alone I saw; except on the Sunday evening, when Dr. R. came in answer to my written requests to go—after three of them—but he denies, of course, having received them—he discussed them with me at the time, but he now denies having received them. On the fifth morning this gentleman in khaki was brought into my room. Dr. M. said, "Now, Miss G., you have asked to see somebody from the outside world. I have brought you Captain W."

20,517. How long did he remain with you?—About a quarter of an hour, I think.

20,518. Did you know he was a doctor?—I did afterwards know he was a doctor; I did not at first; I thought he was a very, very kind visitor, and I asked him how long he could stay. I remember, because I was glad to have an opportunity of speaking freely. Then I began to explain to him why I was there, and I said, "It is an act I am not ashamed of; I thought at first to take my life," and so on. He rather prompted me to that subject, I remember. Then, of course, he entered on the certificate. "Harps perpetually on the subject of suicide." I asked him if he knew whether Jonathan had not committed suicide. Neither he nor I could remember, or whether he was the man who had asked the young man to run him through with his sword. He entered, "Quotes the Bible." That is another symptom of insanity. I asked him what he thought about Captain Oates, and so on. That is the sort of conversation I had with him.

21 October, 1925.]

Miss G.

[Continued.]

20,519. Do you think he had an opportunity such as a doctor would require to diagnose your case?—No. It did not enter my mind that a perfect stranger would certify me. I did not know doctors did certify one; I thought it would be somebody who knew something about me.

20,520. Then on the 3rd May do you remember seeing Dr. P.?—Oh, yes.

20,521. How was he introduced to you?—He was introduced to me by Dr. M. in something of the same way. I had had a fall the night before; I had been taken up and treated very kindly by the attendant; I was very, very dizzy—I do not think it was exactly fainting; I thought he had come for that, and so I proceeded to tell him how absolutely terrible my suffering in this place was, and could not be doing something for me as a doctor; so he did—he certified me, and his certificate is also rather remarkable. He says that I stated that I lived for the war, though I had no relatives there, and remarks of that sort.

20,522. Then I understand you represent that both these doctors were wrong in diagnosing your case as one of unsound mind?—I do, Mr. Chairman. I think they were much more than wrong. They were unlawfully called in as agents of the medical superintendent who informed my brother, and who, in my submission, showed his complete mala fides.

20,523. What motives would these two doctors have to certify you insane unless they believed it, Miss G.?—I feel that that motive is very very plain if a few details can be gone into: and, particularly, Mr. Chairman, that Dr. R., of the institution, and Dr. M., who is a barrister at law (he was the women's doctor and he has left the hospital now), were perfectly aware that it is in fact unlawful and that they had quite unlawfully received me as a voluntary boarder, after I had made an attempt on my life, which was morally justified in my own mind; because their admissions all show that they intended, as Dr. R. told me, to keep me under observation, to keep me in bed; to give all the nurses a caution that I was suicidal, that I was to be very closely watched; and their intention, which I take to be a moral intention, was to prevent any repetition of the act.

20,524. Was not that quite right?—That was quite right and quite moral, but it happens to be lawful in one place only, and that is an institution for lunatics where you are allowed to be kept under restraint because it is quite right to do so.

20,525. It seems to me that you had voluntarily gone into an institution, and it was an institution where care is taken of people and people are observed; it is just in order that they may be prevented from doing themselves any harm?—Mr. Chairman, if it is your opinion that a voluntary boarder may be what I can only call trapped into a mental institution which has its own rules, it is I think immoral to trap a person whom they have received as a voluntary person able to quit at any time, on false representations, that is.

20,526. It seems to me that the whole essence of the thing is that it is a mental institution and that you voluntarily are willing to go into this place as a mental institution?—Then what is the use of the certificates and an order, if an attempted suicide may have her liberty restrained without any order?

20,527. But was your liberty restrained?—Certainly. I have said that I protested frequently and demanded my clothes and my liberty.

20,528. That, of course, is quite correct, but I do not quite see your objection to the institution?—I have absolutely not another word to say to this Commission if that is considered to be what the Commission is going to recommend. I honestly would rather not, Mr. Chairman, say anything else. That was Mr. Justice D.'s view, in fact; he put before the jury the plea of justification. It was never raised by the defence for a moment.

20,529. We are not prejudging anything at all. We are merely endeavouring to get light upon a difficult problem, Miss G.?—Mr. Chairman, when you say to me, "I do not quite see your objection—"

20,530. I do not quite see your objection to its being a mental institution; but I do see very grave objection to a person who has gone voluntarily into a mental institution being deprived of her liberty there?—I was explaining the reason for all this chicanery, as I have called it, for the superintendent telling my brother-in-law, "I can get the certification locally." That is to say, "I can avoid the usual medical attendant, and then invent a reason myself afterwards."

20,531. Were all these people, the doctors and your brother, not, in your opinion, interested in your welfare, but really desirous of doing you some injury?—My brother was certainly interested in my welfare. His idea was: "She has committed this act; I want to prevent it coming into the Police Court," and he was assured by Dr. S. that it would jeopardise his position if it went into the Police Court. He is master at M., and he wanted to prevent it. He only knew of one way. He was told by Dr. S. that the doctors at N. would be willing to take me as a voluntary boarder, but, in fact, to restrain me. He absolutely (I have to exonerate him) thought I had been informed I should be restrained. He was taking this information from doctors who presumably knew something about it. I think he was quite genuine in his wish to do his best for me, but, incidentally, the best for himself, which involves much more important considerations, namely, to keep the matter out of the Police Court, which I would have prayed for if it was the only alternative. I have seen many doctors since who say it was very improper. As regards the institution, I do not suggest that in my case the acquiring of three months' fees, although considerable and very, very much added to, doubted, almost, after the original contract—I do not suggest that that was any very vital consideration in their minds in securing me for the three months for which they insisted on prepayment; but what I do know is this, that they were in full knowledge of the fact that it was unlawful to receive me, and that the Commissioners would never for an instant have allowed the reception of a suicide.

20,532. Where should you have gone, then?

20,533. Sir David Drummond: Do you mean they should have certified you before you entered as a voluntary boarder?—If any doctor thinks that is the right thing to do, to certify an attempted suicide alone, I mean following the ordinary coroner's verdict—

20,534. Chairman: But where should you have gone, Miss G.?—I have heard from Dr. F., whom I asked to advise, so to speak, in this matter, what ought to have been done (I was his patient afterwards): he thought it was a very, very abominable proceeding that had taken place in my case, and he said, "Had you been in my hands instead of Dr. S.'s I should have asked your family to put in a nurse for a day or two, got your word of honour that you would submit to a certain amount of restriction of your liberty, because you had given your family a great shock, and because they could send you before the Police Court if they liked, and then, just as soon as I felt satisfied about you" (not about my health, he did not pretend to have anything to do with health), "and I could trust your word of honour, take the nurse away."

20,535. That is treatment at home with a nurse?—He did not call it treatment, he did not suggest a mental nurse, or anything of that sort, but he thought I ought to submit to being under some sort of restriction which would give my family confidence.

21 October, 1925.]

Miss G.

[Continued.]

20,536. But do not you think it would be extremely useful that people who have passed through such an experience as you have, should be able to enter, if they wish, an institution where there are people who are familiar with such cases, and who will observe and safeguard these cases?—I do not think it has anything to do with mentality or mental disorder, neither does my very good friend, Dr. W., the mental expert: he knows all about my case. He lent me a book, Mr. Chairman, which I would very greatly desire that this Commission should know of, written by a lawyer on this very subject of the connection between suicide and insanity.

20,537. You see, Miss G., it would be much more helpful if you would apply your mind to the real case we are considering, namely, whether the voluntary system of admission to mental institutions is a good thing or a bad thing. It may be a good thing or a bad thing, according as it is administered. Your case seems to me to be a case, if I may say so, in which the system has not been well administered, because of the undue restraint which was put upon you. You, having entered as a voluntary patient, were subjected to those unpleasant things which you have told us of, and were ultimately certified and compulsorily detained in the institution?—Mr. Chairman, I object very strongly to that—that I became a person to be compulsorily detained.

20,538. You were in law a person who became subject to that?—Unlawfully.

20,539. I should have thought the value of your experience would be to assist us in seeing how this system could be freed of such possibilities of abuse as you say occurred in your case, and it was in that direction that I was hoping we would get assistance from you?—My first suggestion after that, Mr. Chairman, is that I think the idea of admitting a person who has attempted suicide as a voluntary boarder in a mental institution, should be scouted.

20,540. Why?—In the first place, when these cases come before the Courts—

20,541. Let me put to you a very simple case. Suppose you have got a young girl who, for the time being, has got a little hysterical and has attempted suicide, but there is nothing very much wrong with her really, and all she requires is a little care and a chance of being removed from her own relations, who are perhaps distasteful to her. Why should it not be possible for her to say, "I am quite willing to go to Maudsley, where for a month or two I shall be removed from my present circumstances, and be able to regain control of myself"? It is very unfortunate if that is not to be done?—You are postulating, Mr. Chairman, that a person who has attempted suicide has lost control of herself.

20,542. Yes, I am?—The statistics of attempted suicide which were pointed out to me by Dr. W., who is, I think, an acknowledged authority, show that when these cases are brought before the Courts the proportion of insane to sane is 4 out of 1,227—about .3 per cent. in whom there is any trace of insanity.

Chairman: It is not a question of sanity or insanity, it is a case of abnormality and danger. It is a social offence, of course, to commit suicide, and persons who have tried to do so must be prevented from doing so again, whether they are sane or insane.

20,543. Sir David Drummond: There is a considerable proportion of people who enter these institutions voluntarily, because they tell the doctor they have a feeling they may do themselves an injury?—Well, I think they are very suitable cases to be certified.

20,544. Chairman: But surely you would not wish the stigma of certification put upon a case of that sort, a case merely of temporary disturbance?—Not if there is to be a new regulation by which restraint without certification is to be lawful.

20,545. Your criticism of the present system may be well founded, but we are in the position of being able to make recommendations for the improvement of the present system?—It seems to me that many of the dangers of the present system will not only not be removed, but very much intensified.

20,546. How do you know what we are going to recommend, Miss G.?—Because I have attended all your sittings, and it has been very plain to me in which way your sympathies have lain, just as you have made plain to me that you consider any person who attempts her life lacking in control. I have never changed my views at all. Under the same circumstances, it is my intention to end my life myself just the same as it was then, and I told that to Dr. R.; but Sir David puts the case of a young girl—

20,547. Sir David Drummond: It was the Chairman who put that particular case?—Yes, who feared that she might attempt her life.

20,548. Chairman: We are not going to enter upon the large topic of what is the causation of the suicidal instinct now; but I can only say that I am interested that you should be able to know in advance what our recommendations are, because I do not know them myself yet?—I do not think I said your recommendations, Mr. Chairman. I have said something about the views you take. You have just announced a view to me, and I cannot help knowing it.

20,549. I have announced the view that attempted suicide indicates a certain abnormality of the mind. If we do not agree about that, I am afraid we must leave it, but that is not the question we are discussing to-day. We are discussing the question of what is the best form of regulations for the voluntary boarder, so as to prevent a recurrence of such abuses as you have unfortunately suffered from. Do not think that we do not sympathise with what you have undergone. We want to prevent that in future, but we want at the same time to have a voluntary system by which people can get the protection and care which an institution can give?—What I particularly want to prevent is legislation so called, safeguarding legislation in which, as Lord Chief Justice Coleridge has pointed out, "The safeguards are in my judgment," he says, "far worse than no safeguards at all"—far worse. It does seem to me that all that I have heard in this Commission points to their views upon safeguards, including certain remarks that I have heard to-day, being all, or very very many of them, precisely of that kind which Lord Chief Justice Coleridge referred to.

20,550. You think they will be futile?—Absolutely futile, and worse than futile.

20,551. I have asked you to tell us one that will not be futile, and I cannot say that you have told us any?—I have suggested one that Lord Russell thought was a good idea to a certain extent, I think I understood so, but that it might fail in cases where a person did really become insane.

20,552. I can assure you that we do not want to recommend futilities, but we want to get help from witnesses as to practical safeguards.

20,553. Mr. Micklem: Do you not suggest that the medical superintendent should never be allowed to be a petitioner in certain cases?—Certainly.

20,554. Chairman: That is a very good point; would you not like us to recommend that?—Yes, I should, indeed.

20,555. Would you say that was a futility?—No, I should not, but I should like to be able to point out to the Commission a few reasons why that is so undesirable.

Earl Russell: But you need not do that, need you?

Chairman: I think it is pretty obvious.

20,556. Mr. Micklem: He was the petitioner in your case?—He was not the nominal petitioner; the nominal petitioner in my case was a brother of mine; but then he did absolutely nothing except sign the perfectly formal parts of the petition, the other parts of which were entered afterwards. Mr. Chairman,

21 October, 1925.]

Miss G.

[Continued.]

I hope you will allow me to say, as you have said that I have not suggested anything valuable, that I think the most valuable thing is for this Commission to be able to realise by a specific case the way in which the voluntary system in a multitude of ways works, especially in registered hospitals.

20,557. Please do not misunderstand us, Miss G.: that has impressed us immensely. The account of what happened to you when you entered that institution as a voluntary boarder has left its impression upon my mind. Also there is the question as to whether it is proper that a person, having entered as a voluntary boarder, should subsequently be certified in the same institution at the instance, apparently in this case, of the medical superintendent. These are really important points which have certainly impressed us?—But it does not seem to have impressed itself upon your minds at all. When I speak of the workings of the system I do not mean what you have just said, though I am obliged to you for what you have said, Mr. Chairman; but when I speak of the workings of the system I mean such serious things as forging documents, making falsified copies of a document, and obtaining orders by every kind of illegality—matters which never, by any conceivable possibility, come before the Commission unless they are put before them by such a person as myself, or unless (to which you reduce me absolutely) I get these matters known about; I consider that my duty to the public—unless I bring them before the Criminal Courts, as Mr. Justice D. suggested as my remedy. He does not deny that there was forgery and criminal contrivances to get the order made; and that, in my opinion, is vastly more important than that you should go into the question of what can always be discounted, namely, the treatment. These things cannot be discounted. I mean either the petition was forged, or it was not, either there was a criminal conspiracy, or there was not; and if it is a fact, what is the comparative value of the details of my so-called treatment as a voluntary boarder.

20,558. I think the question of how you were treated as a voluntary boarder is infinitely more important than some irregularities in the forms of your certification, if I may say so?—But there is a widespread system which I alleged of obtaining orders for sane people through the voluntary system; that the voluntary system can be easily adapted to obtaining the certificates and orders by numerous forms of illegalities, including forgery.

20,559. Earl Russell: But you know, Miss G., conspiracies and forgery are already criminal offences; we do not need to recommend that they should be made criminal offences?—But you cannot believe that these conspiracies exist unless you have evidence. You cannot report differently. I am not expecting you will recommend, without having heard any evidence, that there should be preventive measures against obtaining orders and certificates by conspiracy. You could not recommend that in your report unless you found it yourself on the evidence I can give you, or else it can be found in the Criminal Court.

Chairman: I am afraid we must refer you to your remedy in other Courts, Miss G. We are obliged to you for telling us your experience of the voluntary system. I am sorry you should think our attitude is not sympathetic; I think you are quite mistaken in that respect, if I may say so.

Witness: I think your whole position, Mr. Chairman, is summed up in your public announcements, against which I have already protested.

Chairman: I am sorry if that is your view, Miss G. However, we are obliged to you for coming here this morning, and we shall now adjourn.

(The Witness withdrew.)

(After a short adjournment.)

Mrs. G., called and examined.

20,560. Chairman: Mrs. G., I understand that you were yourself a patient a considerable number of years ago from August, 1900, to June, 1912?—Yes, in an asylum.

20,561. What I understand that you desire to do is to assist our deliberations by some suggestions you have to make for reform?—Yes.

20,562. We should be very glad to have from you any points to which you think our attention should be directed?—You will understand that I must give instances of what I think should be altered. I cannot say I want such and such a law made, and give you no reason for it; I must give you a reason why it should be made.

20,563. Certainly?—I must say something about what happens in asylums.

20,564. If you please?—Thank you. I am a very bad hand at remembering names, but I have got some written down here. My lawyer said that you might like to see the certificates I got immediately I came out from an asylum; I could not send them at the time, because I had them over in France, but I have brought them to-day. One thing is that I think that it should not be legal to certify a person, as I was, without telling that person anything about it, and never letting them know. Of course, when I went in I was very upset at my husband's death, but they could have seen that, and I never had the slightest idea I was certified until I was at W. No one ever told me. I had no opportunity to speak to anybody about it before. When the nurses spoke to me about it, I said, "I suppose the Commissioners do not like me speaking about the things that have happened, so they determined I should be kept." That I consider a very wrong thing.

20,565. Do you remember being visited by two doctors?—I do, afterwards, when I saw the certificates. When I was out I applied for them, and I tried to remember; and I remember two gentlemen coming and speaking to me out in the garden at C. One of them said he knew me, but I had never known him, and I said I did not wish to talk to him. I was not accustomed to a gentleman coming and speaking to me, and I did not wish him to talk to me. He talked with me, and he asked me about other things, "Have you ever felt you would like to end your life?" and I said, "I have," but I did not do it. I had every means of doing it, but I thought of my mother, and of my people, and I did not do it, so I said "Yes." That was one. Another came, and he talked much in the same strain, and he said, "You seem melancholy." I said, "I have lost my husband under very sad circumstances." I do not know that I am more sensitive than other people, but I felt it very much. He was my husband, and I thought I ought to have taken more care of him, and perhaps he would not have died; I was very unhappy about it. I did not know that those men were going to certify me; they should have told me. You cannot alter it, I cannot alter it, but I think it should not be allowed to occur.

20,566. Sir David Drummond: Might we hear what advantage it would have been, supposing they had told you that you were going to be certified?—I should have said, "I do not know that I want to be certified as insane." I went to C. voluntarily. My brother asked me if I would mind going; I knew two of the doctors there; they were friends of my husband; and he said, "There you can have drives; there is a nice park, and you will get quiet and rest," and he said, "We would like it." "Well," I said, "I do not care what I do; I am very unhappy; I do not care where I go or what I do." I had not agreed to be certified as insane.

21 October, 1925.]

MRS. G.

[Continued.]

20,567. But what advantage would it have been if they had told you that they had come there with the object of examining you for that purpose?—Because I should have said, “I wish to go out.” I went in voluntarily; I could have gone home; I could have written to my people.

20,568. Sir Ernest Hiley: Had you signed any agreement, or anything of that sort?—I signed it without reading it through. My brother said, “Do not trouble; it is quite all right; you are going to be taken care of here; you are all right.” and I put my name at the bottom of a paper, so I imagined that it was to say that I went there voluntarily.

20,569. Chairman: How long was it afterwards when you were certified?—You do not take much notice of time when you are unhappy and surrounded by lunatics and that sort of thing. I have been given the date, but I forget; it might be a fortnight or three weeks. I cannot say definitely. I have got the dates of when I went in, but I could not say from memory.

20,570. Were you always treated as a certified patient?—First of all, do you mean?

20,571. No. You went in as a voluntary boarder, first of all?—Yes.

20,572. Then a fortnight afterwards you were certified?—Yes.

20,573. Then, for the remainder of these 12 years when you were living in institutions, were you always certified?—Always. I was treated just the same before; there was no difference made when you got in. I thought it was a dear little room, and if they would leave me alone I should begin to feel better, and in the evening when I went to go to bed I walked to that room, and they said, “You will not go to that room; we will find you another.” The lady took me round, and the nurse said, “Do not bring her here.” and another one, “No, not here.” I think I went to five different rooms, and then there was a room full of lunatics. The whole night long a woman in the next room shouted and screamed and stamped her feet. The next morning they said, “Oh, there is that awful Miss B. who kept the people awake.” I am not a good sleeper, and that was where I went. There was no difference made after I was certified in that way, except that one day, when I had been there two or three weeks, I was taken into a different part of the asylum; and that may have been some special ward for people who first arrived.

20,574. Mr. Micklen: Did you have a quiet sitting room from the beginning?—No, no sitting room.

20,575. I thought you said at first that you had?—There is a little room they always take you in to be examined by the doctor, but I was not examined by the doctor at that asylum. You are always taken into that room when you arrive.

20,576. Chairman: Now, as you say, you wish to emphasise matters calling for reform. Your suggestion is, that when a person is being examined by two doctors, in order that her mental state may be ascertained, she should be told?—I do. It cannot hurt a person who is out of her mind. I have been with them; it could not have hurt them. I do not say so in the case of puerperal mania, but that is another point; they should never be certified for that; they should be put in a separate place, because they come to themselves. Now Dr. M., where I was last, talked to me about that, and he got me to go and sit with a lady so that she never knew she was in an asylum. Of course, I would not say anything about it, but I think that is an exception. Otherwise how could it hurt an insane person? And the harm that it does to people who are not insane is much outbalanced. That is my idea.

20,577. May I just follow up a suggestion you made a moment ago. You spoke of the surroundings in which you found yourself when you went into this institution, and apparently you can also testify to this, that on entering such an institution you found yourself mixed up with undesirable people?—Yes; they were a nicer class, but they were insane; they were a better class at C. I did not come into contact with the very low people who swore and cursed and used foul language, but there were some very much insane. I was puzzled. There was one who used to get little bits of fat and hold them in front of the fire and say some sort of incantation, and the nurses would go and join in, and she was always telling the nurses their fortunes. I thought it was a dreadful thing; but these people, I suppose, are extraordinary people.

20,578. We have had some evidence to-day from a lady who said she found it very terrifying to be placed among people who were obviously and acutely insane when she started to live in the place she went to. Have you had any experience like that—did you find yourself among people who frightened you?—I thought they were not insane, really. They spoke quite sensibly, but I thought to myself, “I do not know why they are locked up.” There was one, a great big tall person: she was always spitting on the floor; she was very beautifully dressed; she was a very rich person. Those sort of things disgust one, but I cannot say I was frightened because of them.

20,579. Do you think you found it disturbing to be among these people?—You think to yourself, “What do they think of me?” They must have imagined there was something terribly wrong with me. I did not know; I thought they had made a mistake. I have not a very unkind mind, and I thought, “Well, they are trying to get me better, and what they are giving me is making me worse.” It is no good; you have no one to speak to. I thought the treatment in some way made me worse. I felt very bad because they began giving me drugs, and I cannot stand drugs; I thought it was something that was no harm, but I was quite dazed; I wondered what it was. I used to look round and wonder what was happening, and every night they forced me to take drugs. I struggled against it, because my husband told me never to take drugs. They were quite good to me there; they were not meaning to be unkind at C.

20,580. What sort of drugs were they; were they sedatives?—To make me sleep, I think.

20,581. Were you sleepless at times?—Yes, I was. My husband's death was a great shock to me, and I did not sleep well; I could not get out of the way of thinking about it; I would sleep a few hours and wake up with a start, even at home.

20,582. Do you not think that a sedative drug was quite a good thing to take in such a case?—My husband told me I ought never to touch drugs; they have a very violent effect on me. I used to have bad headaches, and one day he gave me a drug, and I did not feel any different. A little while after he came and said, “You had better come out for a drive with me,” and on the way I could not think what I was talking about; I said, “What has happened to me; I am going out of my mind?” He said, “Oh, nonsense; you keep quiet.” He told me it was the smallest quantity of hashish he had given me; he said he could not have made a more infinitesimal dose.

20,583. Was your husband a medical man?—He was. Opium nearly kills me; I do not think I was given opium much.

20,584. But did the doctors in the institution not see then that the medicine they were giving you was having bad results? Did it have the same results when you were taking it in the institution as you had previously experienced outside?—I do not know; it might have had. No, I never had that loss of memory.

20,585. I mean, the doctor or the nurses would have seen if it had been doing you harm?—The nurses do not see anything; the nurses are no good, they are absolutely no good. No nurse ever notices a thing; I assure you they do not. All they do is to try and save themselves trouble. For instance, take the case of one nurse: I was standing a little way away from the patients; of course, they were all filthily dirty, and they were wet and other things, and there were trails from them, and the smell was awful; I stood a little bit away. She was a woman who drank a lot. She gave me a shove like this, and two or three poor things stumbled down. When I was up in the bedroom she came and said, "Here, take this," so I said, "What is it for?" She said, "Well, you have got to take it for your behaviour in the vestibule," or whatever they call it. I said, "I have done nothing; what do you mean?" and she said, "If you do not take it you will have two nurses hold you down and have it forced down your throat." That was about three-quarters of a cup full of cascara. After that you can imagine the effect, when the doors are not opened, and that sort of thing. I can assure you that you are looked upon as something awful. The nurses are no use. At C. I saw the nurses kind to the people, and I should say their reports might be taken; but they are no class you know—they do not take up their characters—they told me so themselves. Some are very nice, but as a rule those go away after a time.

21 October, 1925.]

MRS. G.

[Continued.]

20,586. Now are there any other matters you would like to bring before us?—Yes; I think this should not be allowed. When I went to L. at the last I applied to see the committee when they came—the magistrates. A gentleman said to me, "Come and speak to me in this room." It was a very nice place. I went into the little drawing room, and when I got in he said, "Oh, well, you have been so long in asylums, and of course you are much better." I said, "I do not know; I was bad from my husband's death," but I said, "I was not insane when I got into the asylum." He said, "Just tell me about it." So I told him about it, and how I went into that bedroom, as I told you. He said, "You slept?" and I said, "No, I could not." He said, "Why could you not? My good lady—voices!" I said, "Excuse me, it was not voices." "Oh, yes, it was." Now that, I think, should not be allowed. I said, "I can give you the name of the person, and then you can go and ask." Nobody should be allowed to come, and, as they call it, damn you. Why should he say it was voices? It was not voices. That, I think, should be made a punishable thing against a person who keeps people locked up. They are so accustomed to people out of their minds that it does not matter; but there comes a time when it does matter.

20,587. Mr. Micklem: Was this a magistrate?—It was the magistrate's doctor. He came with them afterwards. Of course, you are helpless—you have no one to appeal to. Another thing—I think the violent and noisy patients should not be put in the room with other people as it was when I first arrived, and as it continues to be.

20,588. Chairman: That is a question of classification.—I do not know if you call it classification. I do know that the nurse gets a rest in the day, but I know the patients do not, and if you are kept awake all night there is nothing curative about it; I think it should not be allowed. That was the same in every asylum I went to. At W. it was the same. There was one patient who danced about and screamed the whole night on her bed. The nurses, of course, were very angry with her, but that does not help the people who are trying to go to sleep. There are plenty of side rooms of course, only it means an extra nurse, and they have not many nurses; they cannot put them separately. A woman like that taken straight in would want a nurse. Well, they have not got them; it does not matter what happens to the patients. Also a person likely to die should not be put in a ward with other people, I think. I do not think it is very nice to be with people dying, when you think you may be kept until you die yourself.

20,589. Were you in the general ward?—In the sick room as they call it, and several died.

20,590. You were there, of course, as a private patient?—Yes.

20,591. Do you mind telling us what you were paying?—I do not know—I was never told. I have got the account, but no details were given me of what was spent while I was away. It was very cheap.

20,592. Was not there a weekly charge?—It was under £100 a year, I think. My brother told me it was very cheap.

20,593. Mrs. Mathew: Which one was very cheap?—S., it is a County Council place, I think.

20,594. Chairman: You seem to have been in quite a number of institutions. Why were you transferred from one to the other like this?—I do not know. I can only imagine that when I got hold of anyone in those asylums to listen to me a little I was sent off to another—that happened on several occasions. I managed to find out who to get hold of, and then I was told immediately after I was going on somewhere else. I cannot say, I do not know, but I only thought that.

20,595. I see your first transfer which was from C. to N., was apparently made at the request of a relative of yours?—That may have been because of the expense.

20,596. Colonel B.?—That is my brother. I do not know what he found about it that he did not like. He was a very great dear.

20,597. Apparently the transfer was made at his special request?—Well, my brother, Dr. B., said, "What was it you did always to upset them?" Well, I cannot tell what I did to upset them; I am not a disagreeable person. I do not know except that I may have said I did not like things, but I do not remember ever complaining at C. I know in that few days after I was there they broke my ivory brush by hitting a girl. I rather treasured my things. It is not nice to have your brush broken.

20,598. Mr. Snell: You were not removed, were you, because of any obvious quarrels with the authorities?—No, not that I know of. I never had one.

20,599. Sir Ernest Hiley: Is this one of the instances that you referred to in paragraph 16 regarding ill-treatment by nurses, when your brush was broken?—There were much worse things than that, that is nothing.

20,600. How was it your brush was broken?—I do not know; she held the handle and whacked this girl. There was the tiniest crack in the ivory, but I had used it for years after that. They take your things. I had another one with me, and that was stolen from me at the next place. I could not get one for a long time. That is another thing, you have things sent, and they are taken, you do not get them.

20,601. Chairman: Were you in touch with your brother all the time you were in these institutions?—Yes, he used to come and see me.

20,602. And I suppose you had opportunities of telling him how you were getting on?—Yes. I was very unhappy; it was the drugs, I think. I was not like that when I was at my mother's before I went away, and I think it depressed me frightfully, and I used to say I was miserably unhappy.

20,603. You do not suggest that your brother was keeping you there for anything but the best motives?—No. They are deceived, just like you all are. They do not believe these things; they did not, I mean. Just lately things have altered, but I would not believe before I went in that these things happened. My husband told me that nurses of asylums were rather of a bad class, because I wanted to take one as a servant, and she had not a very good character, and he said, "No, you had better not." Otherwise I had no idea that such things could happen.

20,604. What are the things that you specially refer to?—That was at S. At N. the only thing I think that was exceedingly wrong was to feed me forcibly. I was frightened of the food often because there is not enough care taken. I had the idea that these people were diseased, because my husband did tell me that; he said, "Asylums are filled with two things, that is, drinking and a very bad disease; they fill asylums." When I got there I thought I was surrounded with these things, and I believe I was; I think so still; and it made me very nervous about the people. They have filthy habits, and they used to catch hold of your things, and I did not like to eat them, if I did not think they were clean, and I often went without. A nurse came to me one day after I had been there a little time, and said, "Come on, if you see me mix the egg and milk, will you take it?" I said, "Yes, I will." I was really awfully hungry. I went in, she mixed some good milk and two eggs. I took it and drank the whole of it. That should be sufficient. They should feed me and let me see a little of the food. If I gained confidence, I would have gone on, instead of which the same thing happened; I did not complain, and I simply went without. I was taken one day up into a bathroom, and the doctor—D., I think, was the name of the head doctor—it was his son; he was a man who could not get any practice outside, he had a bad reputation—he was the man; he came in; and they took me before I knew; they caught hold of me and put me in a great chair with wooden arms like that, bound my hands down, and I saw my veins starting out, and I was kept in the chair like that. He came in, took a tube, put it into some bath water that had been left by somebody; I had a horror of these people; it was dropped in, and then he tried to wrench my mouth open. I had exceptionally good teeth; he broke my teeth and he could not get my mouth open. Then he took a smaller tube and fed me through my nostril. That was not only once, it was twice.

21 October, 1925.]

MRS. G.

[Continued.]

20,605. If you had said, "I am quite willing to take the food," would not that have been an end of the trouble?—The second time I knew what they were going to do. I saw the nurse put the drugs in the food. I went on my knees, and I said, "Give it to me." They said, "You are too late, you cannot have it," then I tried to knock it over; of course, that is "violence," you see. I did my best to knock over this food they had prepared, and I would have done it if I could. Those things should not happen. I read about Mrs. P. They put the most tempting things before her, and when she had knocked it over she had another lot given her, and then they went on a long time before they forcibly fed her, because it is so very dangerous to forcibly feed a person. Three times would be enough to kill them, I saw in one article. I thought to myself, "I have never done any wrong; I am sure I do not know why I am having all these things." I cannot, of course, forget it. I could not have lived if I had always thought about it, but you do not forget those things, you know. Now, another thing. At W. Dr. S. was a nice gentleman, but when I got there I learned a great deal about asylums, and I said so at once when they were examining me. First of all, they strip you there, and all sorts of things, and I had some bruises on me through helping a nurse that a patient had attacked. I told them that it was not any ill-treatment; but I said to him, "I should like some work to do." I had always asked for it; I said, "Give me some work; I cannot live doing nothing; let me do something." "What sort of work?" they said. Dr. G. was quite a good friend, but he turned round and said, "What work?" I said, "There is a lot of snow outside. Can I go and clear it up?" So later on, to my astonishment, I was told the matron had said I might; a nurse was to come with me, and we had two little coal shovels, and it was really quite deep, a very deep fall, it was in Yorkshire, and I said, "It is playing the fool; I cannot get the snow up with that." However, I said, "I will have a try," and I went out. I had not worked for so long that my heart seemed to beat a lot, and I thought I was out to kill myself, but it was better to die outside in the open than to die inside. We went on, and we cleared quite a nice place. She said to me, "You be ganger to-night, and I will do what you order." She made it as nice as she could. That girl left because she could not put up with things. She began by ill-treating the people, and I told her she must not do it, and she said, "Why not; they have no feelings?" I said, "What do you mean? They feel more than we do; they are all nerves; they forget it the moment after." She said, "They tell me they have no feelings." I saw her afterwards again, and I said, "Just think if your mother came into an asylum; you love your mother," and she said, "I will never ill-treat a person again." That girl got into trouble for not kicking a patient. She came to me and said, "You have got me into a good row." I said, "I have not seen you for days," and she said, "I was told I must kick the patients, and I will not," and she said, "Somebody has broken the door because I did not kick her." I can give you the name of that nurse; she is out of the asylum now. They were quite fond of me. The doctors do not know; they have no idea what goes on.

20,606. Have you any other suggestions to make to us?—Another thing I want to say is, that I think that if the doctors do promise to do a thing, they should do it. When I went to W. I asked if I might have an interview, and the doctor said, Yes. He never came, and I asked him the next time he came round; it went on for three months, so I thought, "I will not give him any more chances. When the committee come the next time I will speak to them." So I had the courage, when they came round, to speak to them. They came right in, and I said, "May I speak to you?" The chairman said, "Certainly." I said, "I should like an interview with someone; I have asked the doctor, and I have never got one." I forgot the man's name, but he said, Yes, he would come one day; he could not see me then. Dr. S. then stepped forward and said, "Oh, Mrs. G., would you not like an interview with me better?" so I said, "Yes, Dr. S., I have asked you for it, if you will let me speak to you," and he said he would, so he said, "The next day," but he never came. I should think it was quite three weeks afterwards before I caught him again. Then he opened the door, and he stood in a passage against the window, and he said, "What is it?" There was a cup in the window, and he said, "Is this the place where they keep cups?" and I said, "I have something very serious to talk to you about." I said, "Why am I in an asylum?" He said, "It is very nice; you have a piano and other amusements." I said, "Will you listen to what I have to say?" He said, "You would have things outside that were not so pleasant." I got no more out of him than that. Those are the things, I think, that should be altered. You should have some means of getting at someone. At S. I tried to speak to the committee. I found that they came on a certain day, and people went to see them, and I asked the matron if I could see them, and the matron said, "Certainly, Mrs. G." I never saw them; they came and they went. The next day I said to the matron, "I did not see the committee, although you promised." She said, "Oh, no, they said they preferred not to see you." These are the only chances you are given that you can possibly get out by.

20,607. Chairman: Well, we are obliged to you for what you have told us. Is there any other specific instance beyond these general charges?—I do think there is one nurse to speak about, that was a Nurse M. Other people wore my nightdress and made it dirty, or someone had gone with her dirty, filthy hands and wiped them on my sheets, and I felt I could not get into the bed. One night I had seen this going on, and I could not put my nightdress on. The nurse said I was to put it on. I said, "Let me get into bed without a nightdress." "Oh, no, you cannot," she said, so I sat up without a nightdress, and the matron came in at that time and she said, "Oh, give her a blanket," but when I struggled, they took it away. Another thing is this—it is rather horrible, but they only allow you to go to the lavatory in a crowd; and it is filthy dirty, and they do not allow you to pull the plug. These people used to pass all sorts of horribleness out of them. I always used to try to avoid using it then; sometimes I could sneak in by some chance, but there was a commode in this place in the bedroom, and I used to try to use that. It is not a great crime, but, of course, that required emptying; I have often been sent to empty it myself, the patients do it, but I used to try. One night I tried to get out of bed, and this girl tried to keep me in bed. She said she would keep me in bed, and, in order to keep me in bed, she got the underclothing of one of the filthiest patients in that place, and she put the filthiest part of those combinations, which were as filthy as a woman's combinations can be, and tied it round my mouth. You can imagine after that the horror of the thing. Also, I did not know if this woman was diseased or not. Then she took the chamber and put it on my head, and it trickled down into my mouth, and she held my hands so that I could not wipe the trickles that came down my face. I told my lawyer when I came out, and he said, "Get hold of the woman; get evidence of this." I said, "Surely I can bring her up for assault." He said, "Try and get hold of her." I got that girl, and I got her up to London. Now, when she was asked, (she has no shame at all), "Why did you do those things?" she said, "There was no other way of managing you."

21 October, 1925.]

Mrs. G.

[Continued.]

20,608. When was this, and at which institution? --At S. You were put into dirty beds.

20,609. That must have been at least 16 or 17 years ago?—Yes. I daresay it is; it does not alter it having happened though.

20,610. But the same sort of thing may not be going on now?—That I cannot say; the same managing people are there, the same matron and the same doctor.

20,611. Did you complain to anybody of this incident?—No, not at the time; you have no chance of complaining. I did complain once to the doctor. I had been put on to that very commode I talk of which was absolutely full, and I knew one or two of those people were diseased people. I would not sit down on it, and I was shoved into it, and I thought "Here of course I must get disease," and when I saw the doctor, I said, "Will you tell me what to do? Such a horrible thing has happened. I have been pushed into that commode, which is full of filthiness." He said, "I will tell you what to do; it is easy enough. Take one little cup of tea," so I thought it a curious thing. He said, "That is all you require to do, drink a little cup of tea." This is said because you are supposed to be a lunatic when you talk about these things. I went to the nurses, and asked, "Did you ever hear of such a thing?" I told the nurses about it. It was a thing I never told my brothers; I could not have mentioned it to them. Now there is one big suggestion which seems to me might alter some of these things. Of course, your letters are not delivered to the doctors. You cannot speak to them without writing letters, and they do not get the letters. Dr. G. has told me he never got the letters. I think that, without seeing what anyone is like or how they are, everyone should be supplied with a book they could write in. It could not hurt anyone if they wrote the most utter nonsense, but they might be told, "The nurses cannot see that book; that book is yours; they may not take it from you, and you may put it in a postbox once a week or something." That I think would be a great help to the doctors. They would see how patients were improving. If you had this book you could make these statements to them. If the majority of people who had some sense in the ward all reported the same thing, they would know what was going on. For instance, there was a person who died afterwards. She was so brutally knocked about that I had to get out and help the nurse. I have written about these things, but you get nothing back.

20,612. Sir David Drummond: With regard to the five institutions you were in. Mrs. G., was there any one of them better conducted than the others?—At C. I did not see people cruelly treated, neither at N.; the nurses were kind to the people. I had that forcible feeding, which was horrible for me, but I think they were quite good to the patients. At C. they were much better than at S., but certainly there they were knocked about very badly; but Dr. M.'s institution is as good as anything could be; it is quite all right.

20,613. Chairman: I am afraid, Mrs. G., our next witness is waiting for us now, and we require to finish his evidence this afternoon?—I have a great many more things I could say, because I feel you will listen to this. You take no names of anybody. I am being heard as a lunatic because I have been in an asylum, and you are not going to take any evidence except possibly ask the doctors. They will say it never happened; of course they will. If I could give you the names of people who are out, you could go to them, and you would find that what I have said is all true, but evidence given with no proof is as good as evidence not given at all; it is no good. No Court of Justice would take evidence of a person being killed and not take any other evidence to show it was true. I have seen people who have died from the treatment they have had. Evidence given like this, well, it is just the best I am allowed to do. Later on, when I saw a patient being brutally knocked about, I thought, "Now I can do it; I have my diary with me in bed." As she called out, I wrote down the things that happened, and I sent it away at once. I said, "You will believe me now, because you can find her in the sick room brutally knocked about; therefore you will no longer tell me these things do not happen." I heard nothing. About three weeks after, I was called out from dinner, I was told somebody wanted to speak to me. It was Dr. B., and he said, "I have come. You complain of the food." I said, "Yes, I do." I said, "I have come out from dinner; go in yourself and see what stuff it is." He said he had seen a delicious leg of mutton. I do not know who ate the leg of mutton—the nurses, possibly. Then I said, "Will you allow me to fetch my diary, because I have the date, and that will be better for you," and he said, "Certainly." I said, "May I speak to you about it?", and I said, "I should like Dr. G. to be in the room; I would prefer a witness, because I find if you speak to one person it is no evidence at all." So he said, "Certainly," and Dr. G. was there, and Dr. T. I went away, and when I came back he said, "Oh, I am very sorry, I hear the train is just going, goodbye. I cannot say any more." Now that man was sent down by the Lord Chancellor to enquire into this complaint I had made. Those things should be altered.

20,614. We had a witness yesterday, called Miss H.?—Yes.

20,615. When did you first meet her?—She was a baby when I first saw her, her mother was my servant, and her father was my servant; and, of course, I did not see her for a good many years because I was locked up.

20,616. Did you suggest to her that she might take up mental nursing?—In a way I did; I thought it would be a good thing; I had often spoken to her and said it would be a good thing. In fact, I wrote to my brother and suggested that my niece should come and be a nurse.

20,617. But if you had these distressing experiences in these institutions and found the nurses there were so undesirable, why did you recommend this young woman to go in for it?—Because I think the people who are good should go. I would offer myself.

20,618. Were you disappointed when you found she only stayed a month?—I do not really know how long it was. She could not stay.

20,619. Did you see her after she came out?—Yes; I saw her while she was there.

21 October, 1925.]

Mrs. G.

[Continued.]

20,620. Earl Russell: Why do you say she could not stay?—Because the nurses were so horrible she said; they were cruel to the patients, and their language was the most terrible. The patients, of course, you have to listen to. I did say to Dr. S. once, "I think it must be worse on the female side; they must be worse than the men." He said, "That is quite right, they are much worse."

20,621. That is not the reason she gave us for not stopping?—She left because her mother was ill.

Chairman: We must now take our next witness, Mrs. G.

Witness: There are many more things I could say. As I say it is worthless evidence if no proof is taken of it, and I have spent much of my life in helping many nurses who would be willing to come and speak. One has written to me and said, "I hope good will result," and Dr. M. has said the same thing to me. You are doing quite rightly to try and get these things known, but they are not known if there is no evidence taken. It is no evidence to go and ask the doctors; they never see it, and they always say it does not happen. My brothers were the same, they could not believe it, so I was supposed to be insane; so will anyone be who dares to speak about it. You would not want to see my certificates, I suppose? Directly I came out I went to the Red Cross people, and after that I took up massage and midwifery. I passed examinations and got honours. Dr. M. came to me and said, "Take my advice, do not go to see anyone; your having an outside opinion will harm you irretrievably." "Well," I said, "I have to think for myself; I will have to go." This thing was called trial by inquisition; I simply went and consulted Sir G. S., who believed me. He said, "I think I should write a book." I did not get much chance of doing that, but I believe you have seen the book I wrote; everything in it is absolutely true. I have kept my conscience clear all the time, and have tried not to be spoilt. My brother said, "Do not do it; you have the whole world against you." I said, "If I have, I have truth as my friend." I could tell you much more only it is, perhaps, no good.

Chairman: Thank you. We are much obliged.

(The Witness withdrew.)

Mr. Y., called and examined.

20,622. Chairman: You are Mr. Y.?—Yes.

20,623. I think you had the misfortune at one time to be a patient from August, 1899, to March, 1901, but that is a long time ago?—Yes.

20,624. And you have been engaged in your ordinary work, I suppose, since then?—Yes.

20,625. You have taken an interest, I understand, in the question of the reform of the Lunacy laws?—Yes.

20,626. And there is a league, I see, called the Ex-Patients' Asylum Reform League—is that associated with you?—Yes, at P.—really P. only. We formed it amongst ourselves.

20,627. How many members have you?—We have about 30 interested in it.

20,628. You have furnished us with a long statement, which I have seen; and I think this afternoon, in the time available, the most convenient course would be if you would emphasise any special reforms which you have in mind?—I think I have emphasised that at the end of that declaration that we made, that was signed by five of us. I think you have received that, have you not?

20,629. We offered you the opportunity this afternoon of supplementing orally the précis which you have furnished in writing. I understood you wanted to give evidence before us, and we are giving you the opportunity this afternoon of telling us anything you wish to say in addition to what you have written. Have you anything to tell us?—I should like to emphasise that I think there ought to be a supervision over asylums outside of the Lunacy authorities, and I think that is one of the most important things. I mean to say from my own experience, the medical superintendent who is responsible for perhaps a large area and a big number of patients, we will say up to 1,500, is guarantor to the British public and ratepayers that everyone under him is treated properly. He cannot possibly see over a square mile of area and know what is going on; he cannot see through a brick wall. The only man he has under him to refer any matter to is the chief attendant. The chief attendant as a rule is drawn from the ranks of the attendants.

20,630. But that is a point we have heard a good deal about, namely, that some of the institutions just now are too large to be capably administered?—Quite so.

20,631. Then another point that has been put to us, and a good deal emphasised, is that it is undesirable that the medical superintendent should also have administrative matters to look to. These are matters we have had, of course, put very fully before us?—I know, but I wanted to point out that he has only one man to depend upon, and that is the chief attendant, and the chief attendant as a rule is drawn from the ranks, from the attendants.

20,632. A promoted attendant, I suppose?—Yes, he is a promoted attendant. I have known many instances of certain attendants who have been promoted that I should be very sorry to be under, and consequently he is merely a buffer. Nothing gets to the medical superintendent unless he allows it to.

20,633. What is your suggestion—that somebody from outside should be brought in as a chief attendant?—Yes, or that the medical superintendent should have his own "scuds" in the building. It is a railway word; they travel in railway carriages to see what is going on.

20,634. Now you have compiled a list, Mr. Y. which has reached my hands, called "The Red List of Cruelties Witnessed."—Quite so.

20,635. I have read it through. Do you say that you saw all these things yourself?—Certainly, and I am prepared to make an affidavit on it, and another man also.

20,636. Earl Russell: You say you have endured every one of them yourself, except No. 3?—Except No. 3.

20,637. Chairman: As I say, it is a matter of 24 years ago since you returned to ordinary life?—Yes.

20,638. Do you suggest that these things are still occurring?—Yes, I do, and I have had proof, very strong proof, only lately; I understand that matters are absolutely unchanged. We have got pretty good knowledge of what is going on.

20,639. Where do you get your knowledge from?—I get it from certain sources. I do not want to disclose them, but I will tell you what they are. I get a lot of knowledge from attendants (I have talked to a great number of attendants), and from patients, too. I was only talking to a recovering patient (he was out a fortnight after I visited him) two months ago, and I was in the ward with him, and he said, "You see that attendant walking down there." I said, "Yes, you do not want to tell me anything about it, I can see it in your face." He said, "He is the most brutal man. He knocks the patients about unmercifully." He said, "You know nothing," and I said, "No, I say nothing"; and the man was absolutely sane. He came out a fortnight after, recovered; he was in a recovering state when I spoke to him.

20,640. But why not say anything about it?—Why not? You would not make a report a second time. That is just it—that is the way the knowledge does not come through. You make a report to the doctor, and directly the doctor has gone you get four or five on the top of you, and they make some excuse, and into a single room you go, and they start knocking a man about, and you do not make a second report.

21 October, 1925.]

MR. Y.

[Continued.]

20,641. How does it come about that quite a lot of attendants are dismissed in consequence of reports made about them?—I do not know; there were not many where I was.

20,642. Mr. Snell: Why should the attendants tell you some of these things. They are not attendants who themselves practice cruelties, I assume?—No, they are in the minority, they are not strong enough to rebel.

20,643. So that there are good and kind attendants?—Yes; you will see that in my report.

20,644. Earl Russell: But the attendants are able to report without being jumped on or put in single rooms, are they not?—Yes, but you very seldom find one attendant give away another one.

20,645. Chairman: The majority of the attendants, I suppose, are decent fellows?—No, not the majority, that is not my experience not at the present moment, because, as a rule, an attendant's job is a kind of last dole to a good many when they cannot get work elsewhere. That is a recognised fact.

20,646. Of course, it is not a very attractive job, I am afraid; it is a rather difficult job?—Yes; but still, I say this: I know a man who has been 33 years in the service; he talks to me quite openly. He knows I know everything behind the scenes, and he said, "I can truly say that I have never put my hand on a patient wrongfully." I know that is a fact from his fellow workers, but he said the majority of cases of violence are aggravated. He said, "I could go and take a patient from five who were handling him roughly and he would be perfectly quiet with me." I believe that, because I knew him in the P. asylum.

20,647. Now take the case of an attendant of that sort. He would not, I take it, allow anything wrong to be done in his ward, would he?—Well, sometimes he cannot help it; he cannot have his eyes everywhere. I have seen cruelties going on that nobody else in the ward saw, and perhaps some of the attendants and some of the patients did not see, because they take the patient away up in the side rooms and pay him there, or in the lavatory or the bathroom.

20,648. Are you referring to things you saw yourself in these three institutions, L., E., and P.?—Yes. There was a sharp supervision at P.; P. was not so bad as E.; it is something awful there, there is no supervision there at all. The doctor never came near the ward for three months, Dr. R.

20,649. Mr. Snell: Which institution is that?—E. I have seen patients come out every day and keep on asking for him week after week and could not see him, and Dr. L., who was the second in charge, had no power whatever.

20,650. Chairman: During the time that you were in these institutions, were you pretty ill?—Well, I do not know what you mean by ill.

20,651. Were you in a disturbed state?—No, I do not think I was.

20,652. Not at all?—No. I had got the same mind as I have got on me now.

20,653. I want to know if you were one of those cases where, in your own view, you should never have been in an asylum at all?—It was the view of a good many who knew me, Sir. I was violent because I was aggravated into violence continually. I would not give in to their violence.

20,654. Sir David Drummond: You were wrongfully certified, you maintain?—Yes, I do.

20,655. Chairman: Have you seen the certificates on which you were detained?—No, I have never seen the certificates.

20,656. You have a right to see them if you like?—I never have seen them. I had an interview with the Commissioners in Lunacy directly after I was released.

20,657. After you come out you know you are entitled to have copies of the certificate. We have them before us here, and they represent you at the very least as having a very seriously disturbed mentality?—I know; perhaps they were responsible for that apparent state.

20,658. I am really putting that not in order to say anything unpleasant?—I understand.

20,659. But it is rather from the point of view of the reliability of your recollection of what you saw at that time, and distinguishing that from what you have heard since. Of course, you are now entirely re-established, but during the time you were in those institutions I just wonder whether you were really able to appreciate what was going on around you?—I can only throw some light upon that in this way: There is a man within a mile and a half from here, he is an Inspector of Police; he was an attendant at the time I was at E. I went and called on him the other day just after one of the meetings of the Commission, before you went on holiday. I had a chat with him, and we got on to the "Red List," and in fact he told me everything in the "Red List" was true; that he had seen men there strangled out of their life, and I gave him facts alongside these cruelties. We talked about the patients, of their names and that, and he said, "You must have been perfectly sane," because he knew all the patients, and I named their actions. We had a famous patient in this place, a great grandson of W.; he reckoned he ought never to have been there. So do I; he was a very clever man.

20,660. The sort of thing one would like to explore is this: You state that victims are strangled often into a state of unconsciousness?—Yes.

20,661. If a patient is rendered unconscious, it must be obvious to a doctor?—When he has recovered?

20,662. No; while he is unconscious?—I do not see that; they may strangle you unconscious, but they let you go immediately. I have been strangled twice.

20,663. What is the object of doing that?—That is the way they have there of paying out a patient who resists them. That is a common thing; that is nothing; it is done with a stocking.

20,664. Is that only done to a patient who is resisting?—Yes, or one they knocked, out of temper.

20,665. Sir David Drummond: What about this "Grand Circle"?—I have seen that done, I saw that done to a poor man.

20,666. With what object?—That is a matter of sport. That occurred during lunch time, when the other attendants were gone to lunch.

20,667. Chairman: How often?—I have seen it done twice, and apparently they did not think anything of it at all. I saw it done, and I went in to two men, and I got the best hiding because I drew them on the top of me; they went for me and left the patient because I went for them, and I knew who the attendants were, too. I met one of them not long ago.

20,668. This "Red List" of yours is published now, and you tell us that you saw this occurring twice, over 24 years ago?—Yes.

20,669. I must say that any person reading this would assume that this was something that was happening every day, or commonly happening in asylums. Have you any evidence that that has happened in any asylum recently?—No, not that particular thing, but I have another. I have one here, a very grave case, which only occurred in 1922, and came out in open Court, where a man was killed.

20,670. What is the reference to the case? If it came out in open Court we can get the record?—There is the full case, and there are the two statements made to the police, copies of which I got from the Chief Constable of P.

20,671. You understand we can get all these documents if you will just give me the name of the case?

21 October, 1925.]

MR. Y.

[Continued.]

and the date. (The document was handed in.) It is a P. case, in the Coroner's Court, P., February 22nd, 1922, and the death being investigated was that of F.B.; we can get that?—What about the statements made afterwards by men who never came forward in the case?

20,672. That is rather different. Why did they not come forward and give their evidence?—Because they were afraid to. This man was under observation. He made that statement before the police, and there is another one made by the attendant.

20,673. We can look at those along with the report?—I will lend you these if you like.

20,674. Thank you. All I suggest is that, if that particular form of cruelty to which you refer, the third in that list, occurred twice in your experience, over 24 years ago, I think you should be careful about suggesting that that is happening at the present day, unless you know?—Well, I did not say it was.

20,675. When I read this, I got the impression from it that this is one of the things that is happening?—It would not surprise me if it is. I know of no cure.

20,676. Earl Russell: You know one of the statements about you says that you did not speak for weeks in the asylum—is that true?—Longer than that, because it is no good speaking at all there. Their only language was force, that is all. They never told you anything.

Chairman: On the other hand, the certificate says he repeated the same things over and over again.

Earl Russell: Yes, but that is a different date, I think?

20,677. Chairman: Yes. Now, Mr. Y., is there anything else you would like to bring before us in supplement of what you have written to us? Now is your chance, if I may say so?—It all depends; it is such a huge subject to take up.

20,678. It is. We have had a great deal of evidence on all sides and all aspects of the question, and we really acceded to your request in order that you might have an opportunity of telling us anything that you wanted to?—We have not thrashed this point out. I used to talk to the doctor. I was a personal friend, and I used to talk on psychology with him. He knew I was out for reform, and that was the one thing I used to put before him, and that is, the lack of supervision. He said, "I try to make surprise visits." Directly he goes out of his office, there is a tap on the window, and it is known he has gone on his round; and the same with the chief attendant; and therefore the patients are absolutely under the jailers, the attendants. Personally, I never got any help at all. If I had not been able to fight, I should have been in the grave long ago. I had no help from anybody.

20,679. I think we quite understand that point; you made that point quite clear. Is there any other matter which you wish to emphasise?—Do you mean with the administration of the asylum inside?

20,680. As I say, it is anything you wish to put before us?—I think in the matter of drugs and detention in cells, that is sometimes done merely out of punishment. I do not think that a patient, although he may misbehave himself, ought to be punished for that, but they are; shoved away in a cell and kept there. I will give you an instance. I was standing in the airing court at E., and Dr. R. drove past (there were only wire railings round the court) in his carriage, and there was a patient near me, and as he came past, he started to curse and swear at the doctor because he kept him there. Now this man was sane; he was an actor named D., and that doctor stopped the carriage, and he pulled down the window, he called two attendants and he said, "Take that man in." They put the arm-lock on, and took him into the ward, put him in a single room, pulled the shutter down and locked the door. They kept him there for over three weeks, which I can swear to, and I believe I could bring a witness to that act.

20,681. Was that also when you were there yourself?—Yes. Now I believe I could bring a witness to that. He was put there for swearing, and every time they opened the door, of course the man swore more, so they locked him up more and more.

20,682. How did he get out at the end of the three weeks?—They let him out after a time, and he was told if he did not keep quiet they would put him on short rations.

20,683. Earl Russell: Is this the kind of seclusion which would be booked as "seclusion"?—I do not know, Sir. All I know was that it occurred.

20,684. Was the key turned in the door?—Yes; he was locked in there.

20,685. Then it would be booked as "seclusion"?—Yes.

Chairman: I do not know whether that rule was in operation then.

Earl Russell: It is true it is a long time ago.

20,686. Mr. Micklem: You do not complain of the medical superintendents themselves in any sense, do you?—Yes, I do, especially in that instance. Of course, Dr. R. was a very callous man, and he was known by the attendants as such. He died mad.

20,687. Chairman: Well, I think, Mr. Y., if you are content to leave the matter in our hands with the written précis you have given us, and what you have told us this afternoon, it only remains for us to thank you for coming, if there is nothing else you wish to add specially?—No, I only hope that something will be done.

20,688. I can assure you we are paying special attention to all the points?—Yes, I will leave this with your Secretary.

Chairman: If you please.

(The Witness withdrew.)

(Adjourned.)

1, WHITEHALL GARDENS,
LONDON, S.W.1.

FORTIETH DAY.

Tuesday, 10th November, 1925,

MEMBERS PRESENT:

THE RIGHT HON. H. P. MACMILLAN, K.C. (Chairman.)

THE EARL RUSSELL.

SIR HUMPHRY ROLLESTON, BART., K.C.B., M.D

SIR ERNEST HILEY, K.B.E.

MR. W. A. JOWITT, K.C.

MR. N. MICKLEM, K.C.

MR. H. SNELL, M.P.

MRS. C. J. MATHEW.

MISS MADELEINE SYMONS.

MR. P. BARTER (Secretary).

MR. W. FAIRLEY (Assistant Secretary).

Sir MAURICE CRAIG, C.B.E., M.D., F.R.C.P., called and examined.

20,689. Chairman: This morning our first witness is Sir Maurice Craig. (To the Witness): You are a Doctor of Medicine, Cambridge, and a Fellow of the Royal College of Physicians, London?—Yes.

20,690. And you are at present Physician for and Lecturer in Psychological Medicine at Guy's Hospital?—Yes.

20,691. You are also Honorary Consulting Neurologist to the Ministry of Pensions?—Yes.

20,692. You have been Advisor in Psychological Medicine to the Ministry of Health, Examiner in Psychological Medicine to the University of Cambridge, and Examiner in Mental Diseases at the London University?—Yes.

20,693. And I think you have had practical asylum experience as Assistant Physician for 15 years in the Bethlem Royal Hospital?—Yes.

20,694. And for one year you were Assistant Medical Officer at the West Riding Mental Hospital, Wakefield?—Yes.

20,695. And since you left actual asylum practice you have been a consultant for 18 years, I understand?—Yes.

20,696. And you are Chairman of the Medical Committee of the Cassel Hospital for Functional Nervous Disorders at Penshurst, Kent, and as we all know, you have written extensively upon the subject upon which you are to give evidence here this morning?—Yes.

20,697. We have had the advantage of reading the précis of the evidence with which you propose to favour us, and it has occurred to me on a perusal of it that you have very carefully expressed your considered opinions on the matters in question in this précis. I think it would be a convenient course on this occasion if we were to start this morning by your reading your précis through to us. It is not long, and it is manifestly so carefully considered a document that we should like to have the actual words of it upon our note, so perhaps you would be good enough to read it to us?—The Lunacy Acts of 1890-91 were intended, inter alia, to protect the liberty of the subject, but in practice they have interfered with the liberty of many mentally sick persons who were capable of properly using their liberty. Throughout the Acts emphasis is laid upon the legal aspect and the medical treatment of the patient takes a secondary place instead of being the primary object. No branch of medicine has been so trammelled by legal enactments as psychological medicine and as a result its progress has been slow and many medical men are shy of taking it up.

In the certification of persons of unsound mind an obligation has been placed upon medical men by the legislature which in fact has nothing to do with medicine, indeed certification is an embarrassment to medical science, for it embarrasses the relationship of physician to patient, and in my opinion, is responsible for much recoverable mental disorder being permitted to become chronic before suitable treatment is started. Mental disorder in many instances is of slow development, and the patient is fully conscious that his mental faculties are failing and, as a result, he fears that he may become insane or be regarded as insane, and in consequence he fears being certified as insane, whereas, if he can be reassured on this point, he is usually willing to be treated. The definition of insanity in the present Lunacy Acts is a deterrent to treatment, and it frightens a large number of conscientious persons from undertaking the care of early cases. Although I am fully aware of the importance of proper supervision by a central authority being accorded to insane persons, it must not be forgotten that certification, in addition to acting as a deterrent to treatment, brings into the life of those who have been subjected to it the burden of a feeling that they are in some way different from their fellowmen, and from this feeling they may never be able to free themselves even when restored to health. With some it leaves a dominant belief that an injustice has been done and that it is their duty to challenge, and if possible, correct this wrong. It is a matter for note that all actions by patients, who have been regarded as mentally unsound, against medical men and others have been taken by those who have been certified and placed under legal protection and, so far as I am aware, it is unknown for a patient to take action against a medical man for mala praxis or improper treatment when no such certificate has been signed; and yet in these circumstances the medical man is entirely without the protection against his patient that he would have had if he had treated him under the Lunacy Acts. In this country it is common experience to have in hospitals or infirmaries persons whose minds are unsound either from old age or disease, delirious or comatose individuals, and yet they would not appear to be improperly treated nor to suffer any harm, and those who recover do so without any sense of resentment.

10 November, 1925.]

Sir MAURICE CRAIG, C.B.E., M.D., F.R.C.P.

[Continued.]

To turn to the consideration of the position of the medical man. Certification is a legal matter, and yet a medical man is directed to carry it out and thus become responsible in law for a medical statement, which by statute becomes a legal instrument and which can subsequently be challenged by the person against whom it is made and by whom it can be taken before a legal tribunal, attached to which there are no medical assessors. It is not a matter for surprise that medical men in increasing numbers are refusing to sign certificates for recent cases of insanity on the ground that they do not understand what legal insanity means.

Experience has taught me that the harm done by certifying patients in the early stages of insanity far outweighs any advantages. Do away with such certification and the whole outlook of psychological medicine will be changed, for it will then for the first time come into line with the treatment of physical disease. Patients whose treatment must be considered may for convenience be divided into three groups:

- (1) The willing or co-operative patients;
- (2) The passive or non-volitional patients who cannot or do not express their wishes;
- (3) The unwilling patients who demand their freedom.

If certification is abolished,* I am of opinion that the first, which is already by no means a small group, will steadily increase as patients find that to seek treatment does not endanger their liberty. Provision for the treatment of these persons should be made in general hospitals or in special hospitals or clinics which are separate from and not in the grounds of mental hospitals where certified patients are taken. The study of mental disorder has proved how important it is for the patients who are suffering from it to be within reach of all those departments which are of such value in the treatment of physical disease. Much mental disorder is due to mental re-actions to the toxins or bacteria or other poisons, or to disturbances of the various systems of the body. Indeed the closer treatment of mental disorder keeps to that of physical disease, the more favourable will be the results. The greater difficulty will be met when the patient's behaviour makes it impossible for him to reside in an ordinary hospital, and for this reason special hospitals of the type of the Maudsley Hospital will be necessary. The non-volitional patient should be granted the same freedom from certification at any rate for such reasonable time as to permit of his recovery. Neither group 1 nor 2 calls for enforced detention against the patient's wishes.

As regards supervision or notification, it would seem quite unnecessary to have any routine personal supervision by a central authority for groups 1 and 2 if treatment were carried out in a public institution with a recognised committee. On the other hand, if public funds were used (and I am of opinion that the local authorities should be instructed to devote money to this purpose), the right of general supervision would go with it.

With regard to the "unwilling" group, although from the medical standpoint it is unfortunate that these persons should be penalised as the result of their hostile attitude, nevertheless I appreciate the difficulty of enforced detention without some form of notification or certification. As it is so important both for the treatment of the patients belonging to groups 1 and 2 and for the education of the public into a proper understanding of mental disorders and their treatment that these groups should be treated in hospitals where enforced detention does not exist, therefore it will be necessary to exclude the third group from this class of hospital. Consequently the "unwilling" patient will have to continue to be treated in mental hospitals under some form of provisional notification or certification.

I am in agreement that all borough or county mental hospitals should be permitted to take voluntary patients; and further I am of opinion that, until such time as fresh accommodation is found, the non-volitional group should be admissible to these institutions without certification.

In licensed houses the "willing" group should be able to go for treatment on their own written request without having to apply to the central authority for permission; and legislation should be enacted to permit of the treatment of non-volitional cases on notification only and the "unwilling" group by some form of provisional certification.

With regard to the treatment of patients who can pay, it is appreciated that public funds will not be available for this class, and as the majority of patients and their friends will object to the registered mental hospitals and licensed houses on the grounds that the patient will have to associate with the chronically insane and those who are forcibly detained, and as the beds available in these hospitals are far too few in number for those who will seek for treatment, it will be necessary to permit patients belonging to groups 1 and 2 to go to nursing homes or the houses of medical men. I know that there is a body of opinion that private persons should not be permitted to take and treat patients suffering from mental disorder for gain, but here I am in complete disagreement, as experience has proved to me the great value of small well-run homes or institutions or placing a patient in single care. Many patients when given a choice prefer to be treated in this way rather than in a larger hospital. That the persons who administer these homes are as a class untrustworthy is untrue in fact. In every walk of life unreliable persons will be found and, if it is sought to suggest unworthy motives, this imputation could be made about almost every profession or calling in life. I will even go so far as to forecast that, if the legislature were to prohibit private persons from taking and treating mental patients, the public would endeavour to evade the law in every possible way, for I have learnt from over thirty years' experience how much they trust and rely upon this form of treatment. I am of opinion that even in private homes routine personal supervision of patients is highly undesirable in the patients' interests and should be reduced to a minimum. I appreciate that for the non-volitional cases some form of notification will be necessary, but the most satisfactory method would be the registering of all nursing homes and the inspecting of such homes, as opposed to a routine inspection of the patients.

I am aware that there is a diversity of opinion as to who should be the central authority responsible for supervising patients in the early stages of mental disorder. For many years I felt with others that the Board of Control were too much steeped in the traditional treatment of mental disorder and that it might be difficult for them to free themselves from

* See Q. 20886.

10 November, 1925.]

Sir MAURICE CRAIG, C.B.E., M.D., F.R.C.P.

[Continued.]

this outlook, and in consequence I feared that it might in practice be difficult to have this body visiting patients who were not insane. But it has been impossible to watch the work of the Board of Control during recent years without appreciating how much they have taken up the more modern views of psychological medicine, indeed they have shown such power of adapting their functions to the medical outlook that I am now of opinion that this body is fitted to undertake the supervision of all mental patients including those in the early stages of illness. Like physicians and others whose work has been in this department of medicine, they have learnt much by experience and this must be of value when methods are being remodelled. I am, however, of opinion that the medical side of the Board should be strengthened, as any ordinary visitation of patients of the "willing" and non-volitional types should be entirely medical.

Out-patient clinics for patients suffering from mental disorders should be available at all hospitals and I am of opinion that the system that exists at Guy's Hospital is the best, for here there is one Neurological Department and all patients, whatever their nervous complaint, attend there. Where no hospital is available, a special clinic for these patients should be established.

20,698. We are much obliged to you, Sir Maurice, for that very careful survey of the whole position in its larger aspects. I think we might usefully employ a little time with you this morning in following out some of your ideas in a little more detail. As you will appreciate, we are desirous of investigating first of all the defects, if any, in the existing system, and secondly the remedies which should be proposed to Parliament for those defects. Manifestly your conception of the future of this branch of medicine would involve, would it not, a very considerable alteration of the existing system?—Yes, so far as releasing the medical people to do the work is concerned. The great difficulty at the present time is that so many of the better type of medical men are a little shy of entering this field, because of the legal difficulties in the work itself.

20,699. You appreciate, of course, that this particular branch of medicine is one which is necessarily brought in contact with the sister profession of the law?—Yes, and quite properly so, I think.

20,700. And that the problem, again stating it in its larger aspect, is the accommodation of the medical man's desire to cure his patient with the legal man's desire to protect the liberty of the subject. One cannot put it more broadly than that?—Quite.

20,701. I suppose from a medical point of view one may say that there is really no distinction in principle between what is commonly called mental disease and physical disease?—None at all; that is a fundamental point at the present time, and it is getting forced upon one more and more.

20,702. Again, however, has one not to recognise that while from the medical point of view there is no distinction, from the social or legal point of view the particular kind of ailment which we call mental disease entails, necessarily, measures which are not entailed in the treatment of ordinary disease—I mean measures of restraint?—That is so; where you have got a delirium or a confused state of mind you require certain protection of the individual during that period of time.

20,703. You have referred in your evidence to the class of case where a delirium is a symptom or concomitant of some quite well-recognised physical disease, such as pneumonia or uræmia and other instances?—If I might, I would put it even more strongly, that some persons react on the physical side to any stress or poison; another highly sensitive type of person will react on the mental side; so that with the same stress or condition you will find one becoming mentally disturbed and the other physically disturbed.

20,704. Now as regards the type of case where delirium is a symptom or concomitant of some well-known or recognised ailment, that must happen, I suppose, quite frequently in hospital practice?—Very frequently.

20,705. Sir Humphry Rolleston: Is it not very largely a question of the period of restraint? If we have an acute case of pneumonia, and a person wishes to throw himself out of the window, we restrain him; but when you are dealing with a chronic condition like that, then one does not take the power into one's own hands. It is very difficult to restrain a person for months or years. Is not that where the difficulty comes in?—Not in the case of a physical illness; but because of some acute phase in that illness, the law is against us. For instance, I have seen a case where a man has dined on mushrooms the night before, and for some weeks it has been necessary to restrain him from going out of the window or injuring himself or other people, but in law there are difficulties, because the person is of unsound mind; whereas in hospital, if he has got pneumonia he is regarded as suffering from pneumonia and the mental side is a secondary thing; and really the mental side is secondary in the other toxic condition, but it is not so recognised in law.

20,706. Chairman: We were rather surprised to hear that in practice, in workhouse infirmaries, it is apparently not infrequent for a patient who has developed these transient symptoms of insanity to be sent to the mental side and possibly certified; whereas I gather from you that if the patient had been in an ordinary general hospital the mental disturbance would be treated simply as an element in his disease, and a certain measure of restraint would be imposed without certification?—A greater measure of restraint than in a mental hospital, there might be, in some cases.

20,707. Of course there is a difficulty there, as Sir Humphry is pointing out, that some restraint upon the activities of the patient is imposed against the apparent, though probably pathological, desires of the patient for the time being?—Yes.

20,708. I suppose you will agree it is highly undesirable that in cases of that sort certification should be resorted to?—Most harmful. It may be very, very serious to the person in later life, apart from any sentimental consideration, which is a very important one, too. It is a pure accident that has happened to the person, and the patient is nearly always only too grateful that you have treated him in that way; when the patient recovers his reasoning judgment, he is only too grateful for what you have done for him.

20,709. Do you think, with your experience and practice, that it would be desirable to accord any special protection to medical men in that measure of restraint which they impose upon what I will call ordinary patients, who are showing for the time being mental symptoms, or would you prefer to leave it as it is?—I am speaking for myself when I say that I should never seek protection. After all, if a patient charges you with anything he is only charging you with being human and regarding him in a human light. I am not afraid of that in law. Therefore I do not see that protection is required.

20,710. It occurs to me that while a transitory state of mental disturbance may be associated with certain well-known and defined ailments, such as pneumonia or uræmia, where it is a recognised symptom of the ailment, many of the other transient maniacal states may also be associated with physical disturbance, which you are not able to attribute to some well-known ailment, although it may nevertheless be associated possibly with some unascertained and obscure physical ailment?—Quite. Of course the best example really is delirium tremens, which may last for two or three weeks, and yet, I say, in law, a person would not be expected to certify a man suffering from delirium tremens, because it is too well understood in law. They would say, "This is a transitory condition." It would be improper to place him in an asylum and treat him as insane, though he may be dangerously insane during his illness.

10 November, 1925.]

Sir MAURICE CRAIG, C.B.E., M.D., F.R.C.P.

[Continued.]

20,711. And it may be, I suppose, that as medical science advances, certain forms of insanity may be found associated as definitely with new diagnosed diseases just as at present certain mental states are associated with pneumonia and uræmia?—That is what we look forward to.

Sir Humphry Rolleston: It is the time factor that seems the difficulty.

20,712. Chairman: It does, Sir Humphry. A limited measure of restraint may be one of those things of which the law will not take cognisance?—I quite agree there.

20,713. On the other hand, when the state becomes declared and has some permanency, it is at that stage that difficulty will arise?—That is how I have always worked myself. It has been my attitude towards the law, because the law would not be hostile to my attitude, provided I was doing it reasonably; but if it was for a length of time, then I would be outstepping my right.

21,714. I think the duration of the state would be a most important element, because whenever a person is laid aside with mental ailment for more than a very short time, of course questions of property administration emerge at once. That is one aspect of it?—Quite.

20,715. And further, the question of the continued personal restraint also arises?—Yes.

20,716. Now, following out your conception, I take it that those cases where the temporary insanity is merely a symptom of physical disease would in your view be properly treated in ordinary hospitals?—Yes.

20,717. Where, I suppose, at present they are really treated, for the most part?—Yes, but not in the way they might be, because the hospitals have not got accommodation for them; but one looks forward to the day when there will be a ward in each hospital for them.

20,718. That is the next question I am coming to. Is there any difficulty, in the ward of a general hospital, in dealing with such cases? I can imagine that such cases are often noisy and liable to disturb others?—They generally have them in special rooms.

20,719. In practice there are wards in general hospitals to which such cases can be taken for the time being?—There are one or two such hospitals. At the Middlesex Hospital they have got one; at Guy's they have about three beds where they could take them.

20,720. In a ward where other patients are?—No; a separate ward.

20,721. So that when one of your cases at Guy's develops symptoms of that kind, and consequently the other patients may be disturbed, the particular sufferer is removed?—He is moved into that part of the hospital, yes.

20,722. Do you ever find that such cases become so established in their mental disturbance that you have to resort to certification?—If they are likely to remain so for long, then they would be moved into the infirmary for further observation, where they are allowed another ten days or a fortnight. That is the next step that is generally taken.

20,723. Then the patient who has gone to a general hospital, such as Guy's, has the advantage at present of a period of observation before certification, if certification is necessary?—Yes; quite limited, unfortunately, at the present time.

20,724. Sir Humphry Rolleston: That is provided they have got some gross organic cause. I mean, if you cannot detect a gross organic cause they would probably be sent off straight away?—As soon as possible, yes.

20,725. Chairman: Now you desire to encourage the view, do you not, Sir Maurice, that mental ailments are, after all, just a branch of general illness?—Yes.

20,726. And you appear to favour the idea of treating such cases as can be treated in general hospitals, either in clinics or wards there?—Yes.

20,727. Would it involve any very large re-organisation of the existing hospital system?—For the in-patients it might, to a certain extent, but for the out-patients, of course, many of them now have their special out-patients clinics. At Guy's I always objected to having a special one for so-called mental cases, and, as I think I noted in the report, the Guy's clinic was instituted as a general neurological clinic to which all patients suffering from gross nervous disease, as well as functional nervous disease, came.

20,728. Now taking a concrete example: Would a person who was feeling mentally unstable and unhappy be entitled to resort to your clinic at Guy's and ask for advice?—Certainly.

20,729. And do you find in practice that many people go there?—Yes, they do. They are not afraid of a general hospital in the same way that they might be of a special hospital.

20,730. Do they recognise that it is a place to which they can go for such advice? I mean, is it recognised that Guy's is a place where people can go who have not got a broken leg or anything of that sort, but just want general advice on their mental condition?—Quite. I think they have three special sessions for these patients. They began with one, and there are now three.

20,731. Mr. Snell: Each week, Sir Maurice?—Each week; so it is obviously sought after.

20,732. Chairman: Then it apparently is possible to associate clinics, and indeed in-patient treatment of mental disease, in some of its aspects at any rate, with a general hospital?—With great advantage, because you would get them coming for treatment earlier.

20,733. Mr. Micklem: Would some of these out-patients be brought into the hospital?—They could be; that is again very limited now, owing to the beds available for that type of case.

20,734. Chairman: You would not take in a case of pronounced insanity, which obviously would require prolonged treatment, would you?—No—or personal supervision; the hospital cannot do it, where you require supervision, at the moment.

20,735. It would really be the curable case that you would take in?—The Cassel Hospital is a very good instance of that. In 1918 Sir Frederick Treves asked me to place a scheme before this benefactor of pioneer work, and I said I would give him the dream of my life, which I did, and he told me that I had got the money. Now that hospital has 57 or 58 beds for functional cases, and to-day we always have a waiting list of 40 to 50 patients waiting to come in.

20,736. These are non-certified cases?—Yes.

20,737. Is it a charity?—It is, partially. Most pay five guineas, and there are two wards at three guineas, but that includes everything—all nursing and medical attendance.

20,738. Mr. Micklem: Where is that?—At Penshurst in Kent; but that shows how it is sought after, and we follow up the medical cases; that is to say, we publish every year what has happened to patients who were there one, two and three years before, so as to see whether they really did benefit by the treatment, or whether they did not.

20,739. Chairman: Where the present system seems to fall short is in the provision for early treatment and in the provision for those cases which are short of certifiable insanity but which nevertheless require care and treatment?—That is so.

10 November, 1925.]

Sir MAURICE CRAIG, C.B.E., M.D., F.R.C.P.

[Continued.]

20,740. That seems to be where the gap is in the system?—That is so; and the great difficulty is in saying when a person is certifiable and when he is not. I have put this to many legal persons, and they have never given me an answer yet: if a person is sane for so many hours, and insane for so many hours, is he sane or insane in the eyes of the law? It is perfectly open for the medical man to be charged with not having done something, if something happens during the hours that the man is insane, and yet it is most difficult for the medical man to say is he sane or insane in the eyes of the law. I have never got an answer from any legal person as to how a medical man should treat such a patient.

20,741. Mr. Micklem: Would not such a person be clearly a person of unsound mind?—Well, the legal people do not say so.

20,742. That seems to be the definition in the Act?—It is, during the insane moments for some hours of the day; but if he was perfectly capable of discussing his position and discussing his profession and his work for the greater part of the day, and if at such a time he was interviewed by a solicitor or by a member of the Board of Control, they would say that person was sane. I have had plenty of instances of it.

20,743. Chairman: It is an extraordinarily interesting topic to embark upon, but is not the legal test propounded in the statute rather what one might call an objective test than a subjective test? Is it not certifiable insanity looked at from the point of view of the person's conduct and behaviour, as to whether it is a menace to himself and others or not? You know the terms of the certificate?—I do, but there again the legal answer is, when you are speaking of a person who is very sane during the greater part of the day, if he does abnormal things he is responsible for his acts. I have seen such a case, I have talked to him, he is fully cognisant of everything that is going on in the world, and he must be regarded as responsible.

20,744. Of course we lawyers are familiar with what is known as lucid intervals, but if you have an alternation of lucidity with darkness I can quite see the difficulty of medical diagnosis?—Some of those cases have a mental side, but we should prefer not to treat them as insane, because we should say we hoped to get the clear times lasting longer, and we will try to keep them as pure medical cases. Indeed, one can do it. If you say, "I am not going to treat you as a person of unsound mind. If you will trust me and listen to me I will do my best for you," many of these persons will do so.

20,745. Sir Humphry Rolleston: Is any answer of the legal profession to be gathered from the treatment of criminal lunatics in Broadmoor, because they recognise they are not insane all the time?—The epileptic case?

20,746. Yes?—Yes, certainly. It is really a question of fact, I take it, in law; it would be a question of what the condition was.

20,747. Chairman: Of course, insanity is not a thing that is susceptible of precise mathematical ascertainment. The border line, as we know, is always difficult to define?—Yes, but it is extraordinarily precise when a medical man makes a certificate, and he is brought up before a tribunal to answer for that certificate, and there is a large amount of evidence brought against him to show how sane the person was on the day the certificate was given.

20,748. Mr. Snell: Are there occasions when the alternation between lucidity and darkness occurs during the day, Sir Maurice?—Yes; in the day you may get it.

20,749. And on successive days?—On successive days. I remember one case some years ago which was stated to me—this was one of these difficult cases.

An examination had been held under the Board of Control as to whether the person was properly to remain uncertified. Now from the history I felt that that person was a proper person to remain. When I held my examination I had four other lay persons present during the interview. Now with that patient the Board were good enough to allow him to remain in a nursing home, and that patient did perfectly well. But there was a case very near where the legal side was leaning one way and the medical side was leaning heavily the other; and there are plenty of those cases.

20,750. Chairman: Of course the line of demarcation is not possible of exact ascertainment, and I suppose even in your own profession, Sir Maurice, taking a given case, it is quite possible that two experts might quite honestly arrive at different conclusions as to the state of the patient?—Yes, but there are not the same contingencies following and liabilities attached.

20,751. I was thinking rather of the possible definition of insanity?—Quite, but it is the other relationship that comes in and makes the difficulty.

20,752. But if you are looking at it entirely from the medical point of view, there must be many cases with regard to which two medical men of equal competence, having examined a case, would arrive at different conclusions?—Quite.

20,753. These are honest conclusions?—Quite honest conclusions.

20,754. And if there be no improper motive in arriving at the conclusion—which of course I assume when I say an honest opinion—that class of case is very difficult; because, as you say, the person, if certified, might feel aggrieved and might be able to adduce very imposing evidence to the fact that he was quite sane, and yet the doctor must discharge his duty according to the best of his knowledge and belief?—Quite.

20,755. Is that class of case adequately protected now? Is the medical man adequately protected?—I do not think he is, altogether. There is one case in which he is very unprotected, and that is the one in which I myself got into difficulties; that is to say, if you certify a criminal in prison you are unprotected in law. I had an action taken against me which lasted for two and a half days; it was the case of G., a very well known case, in which he was threatening the lives of certain Cabinet Ministers. In that case the medical man is unprotected, but I think a medical man ought to be absolutely protected if he gives an honest opinion, because he is always in this difficulty, that the patient may not absolutely recover; therefore he is left with a person whose judgment is not quite normal, even at the finish.

20,756. Mr. Micklem: Does not the Act apply in that case just as much as in any other?—No, not for the criminal. The Law Officers of the Crown decided that I was unprotected; it was not able to be quashed; that is a flaw in the Act, clearly.

20,757. Chairman: Of course, it is very undesirable, Sir Maurice, that a doctor concerned with the welfare of his patients should feel himself embarrassed in expressing his candid opinion of the case, by what one may call legal menaces lurking in the background. He ought not to be embarrassed in forming his opinion by the possible legal consequences.—Of course, he is very seriously embarrassed at the moment.

20,758. Properly speaking, as a medical man, he should approach a case without any consideration of the consequences whatever. He should give his opinion to the best of his knowledge and belief, without fear or favour?—Absolutely.

20,759. And if he does that, he ought to be protected, of course?—I think he ought to be protected—provided that he has got nothing else against him.

20,760. I am assuming it is in good faith, and we must rely upon the good faith of the medical man in many walks of life. There is a measure of protection afforded under the statute in such cases, that you can have the proceedings stopped if you can satisfy a Judge that the case is frivolous or that there is no substance in the case. Do not you regard that as sufficient?—Here, of course, I am coming on to a legal question. The question is whether there is not a way out of it now by bringing in the word "conspiracy"—whatever that covers; that is to say, that persons agree together that this ought to be done. Therefore there is a question whether that would be covered by the Lunacy Act as it stands.

10 November, 1925.]

Sir MAURICE CRAIG, C.B.E., M.D., F.R.C.P.

[Continued.]

20,761. One does want to eliminate from a doctor's mind, when he is addressing himself to his own task, those collateral ideas of the fear of legal consequences?—A very large number will not touch it now. I am constantly being rung up by people who ask what they are to do. I have to say, "I am so sorry I cannot help you." Indeed it is a term in the partnership deeds of some medical men that they shall not certify patients.

20,762. Mr. Micklem: I suppose in the case you were referring to, where you gave the certificate, you were not certifying for the purpose of detention in an asylum, but you were certifying for the purpose of protecting this man as a criminal?—No. I was certifying at the time his sentence was ceasing, and he was becoming a civilian. He was still finishing his sentence, but he was passing from the criminal order to the civil order. I should be certifying him as a civilian; he was still under the Home Secretary's Order.

20,763. Chairman: I suppose the question was whether he could be safely let out when his sentence expired?—That is so.

20,764. Mr. Snell: Would he be detained in the criminal establishment then?—Only for a short time.

20,765. Chairman: He is not like a person detained during His Majesty's pleasure. It was a case of a person who had a concurrent sentence, the sentence was about to expire, the prison authorities were in doubt as to the wisdom of letting him out on society; you were called in to advise as to the state of his mind; you advised he was insane and consequently when the sentence expired and he walked out of the prison he stepped into the asylum?—That is so.

20,766. Mr. Jowitt: Do you say you were under a legal liability in respect of what you did there, Sir Maurice?—Yes, I could not appeal that I had acted in good faith. I had to take his action against me for what I had done. It came up before Mr. Justice Bailhache and went up to the Court of Appeal.

20,767. Chairman: What was the result of the case?—He lost his case; he lost it in the Court of Appeal, too. He produced a typewritten copy of a letter, with regard to which Mr. Justice Bailhache said that if I had written it I ought to be in the mental hospital myself, with which I am in agreement; but that letter was the one upon which the plaintiff based his attack upon me. It was a letter alleged to have been written by me to a doctor regarding the Home Secretary, and indeed the case was adjourned for ten days for him to produce further evidence, over the whole of the Whitsuntide recess, so that he should produce this evidence to prove the truth of the letter, which of course he was unable to do; but certainly that is a point for the Commission. It is a very serious matter for medical men, because of course it was my own ignorance.

20,768. I do not know whether the case is reported. We can get the record of it, anyhow?—Yes.

20,769. Mr. Jowitt: About what date, Sir Maurice?—It would be about 1921, I think.

20,770. Chairman: We can easily trace it with that reference?—G. himself at the present time is doing three years, I think, for defrauding the Irish Relief; he is in prison just now.

20,771. Now coming back to the main topic of our discussion, is a cardinal drawback of the present system that before you get the benefit of mental treatment you have first to be so pronouncedly insane that you have got to be certified?—That is so; in fact you have to be a very long way advanced in your illness before treatment is available.

20,772. Of course that is contrary to all the ideas of modern preventive medicine?—It is like saying to a person with phthisis: "Yes, you have got phthisis, but I cannot do anything for you until you have cavities in your lungs and you have hæmorrhage and fever; and then I will look after you for the rest of your life."

20,773. That of course is contrary to all the ideas of modern preventive medicine?—Yes; it is wasteful on the economic side for the country, too.

20,774. Now while there are a large number of cases which are transitory, and where the hope of cure is such as would justify you in treating them in a general hospital, I suppose one must always reckon with a considerable proportion of persons who are incurable, at least so far as science has at present progressed?—Yes. The later that cases are treated, the more that comes in; the earlier they are treated the less.

20,775. We appreciate that, but there must of course always be, must there not, persons whose conduct, owing to their mental instability, renders them unfit for ordinary social life, and who must be detained?—Certainly.

20,776. And they will always be a considerable proportion?—Always.

20,777. But a proportion, I take it, which may diminish with the progress of mental science?—Yes, very markedly so.

20,778. I am thinking of the cures which are effected in general paralysis now, which was previously regarded as incurable; so into that region some ray of hope may enter?—Quite.

20,779. But would you then divide the cases broadly, from your point of view, into those which are susceptible of treatment to early recovery without certification, on the one hand, and on the other hand those cases of established mental instability, so far as you know incurable, for whom provision must be made on a permanent basis in a place where they have to reside as well as be treated?—Quite.

20,780. Of course, the essence of a general hospital is not residence, but treatment. The essence of an asylum is generally regarded as residence rather than treatment; at least, we have heard that criticism?—But you ought to have residence for early cases, so that they are not swamped with the chronic insane. That was part of my early experience, when one saw a person who was ill and was going to be so for three or four months, and yet he was going to be exposed to all the terrible suffering of seeing others so ill.

20,781. I must say nothing has impressed me more, and I think I can say so on behalf of my colleagues also, than the undesirability of a case of mental disturbance in its early stages being exposed to association with violent and unpleasant cases, just at a time when the mind is in its most critical state, and when very little may make the difference between turning to cure or proceeding to certain insanity?—I quite agree.

20,782. How is one to get over that, bearing in mind the resources which are available? One can see ideals, of course; but, accommodating oneself to the means at our disposal, how is one to get over that?—Even in the most old-fashioned type of mental hospital I should have thought it was quite possible to have special portions of the hospital set aside, where patients could be taken, until such time as the country can afford to have clinics and special places for them to be taken to apart from the mental hospitals. It ought to be possible to have that done.

20,783. I suppose one may deal with it under the general head of classification of cases?—Yes; it is done; in many mental hospitals they are very well

10 November, 1925.]

Sir MAURICE CRAIG, O.B.E., M.D., F.R.C.P.

[Continued.]

classified now, but, of course, the difficulty is in the old-fashioned buildings.

20,784. And I suppose one may take it that nothing is worse for a person who is upset than to be put in with a lot of other people who are worse than himself?—A patient is terrified of going insane, in a very large number of cases. It is the most common fear in normal life, and it is very markedly the fear where a person is breaking down, and if they are suddenly put into places of that kind they feel, "Now I am going insane."

20,785. Have not many people a dread of institutional treatment of any kind; even the idea of a general hospital or nursing home is distressing to some people?—Yes.

20,786. You know the type of person who wants to be operated on in his own home, and says, "Do not take me to a hospital or nursing home"?—Yes.

20,787. Even that may have in some cases, depending upon the individual temperament, an unhappy effect, may it not?—Yes, it does, even that. Of course, I always put it to a patient, "Now do not put me in difficulties"—that is to say, if his illness is not of such a nature that you cannot prevent it, but if he has got any will power left—"otherwise I may have to take very serious steps, because I am bound to, in your interest." I always talk to patients and tell them I do not want to do it, and I am not going to do it unless I am absolutely forced to do it.

20,788. But again there is another consideration, because there always seem to be two sides to every one of these topics. It may be exceedingly unfortunate for the family life for the case to remain in the home?—Yes; and for the children, very, very serious, of course.

20,789. Therefore removal to an institution may be very desirable?—It is absolutely necessary sometimes, and you have got to do it because it is so serious for the children.

20,790. And also it has often been the home environment which is the pre-disposing cause, and removal from that environment may alleviate the malady?—Yes, quite; many factors come in there.

20,791. Your view is then, I take it, that certification should be the last resort?—Always the last resort.

20,792. And as regards the expedients which should precede certification, that a system of clinics and, if possible, resident wards attached to the general hospitals should be developed?—Yes.

20,793. What would be the attitude of the administration of the general hospitals to any such recommendation?—The difficulties would be, if there were any great supervision required; that is where the hostility would come in. They will not want the hospital brought under any special legal position that would make them appear to be mental hospitals; that would be one of the difficulties.

20,794. But what if we were to assimilate this branch to the treatment of tuberculosis or to the treatment of venereal diseases?—Then I think it would be excellent.

20,795. If we were to do that, that would entail necessarily a certain amount of supervision, because it would involve the expenditure of public money, as you know?—That supervision is quite understood.

20,796. Would you wish independent institutions to be established, such as we have for tuberculosis and venereal diseases, or would you rather have them in association with existing general hospitals?—I do not think the general hospitals would be sufficient, and they are not always located in the right places, because we want them to be in places where the patients can get out of doors, and such like, because the patients may be ill for some months, so that they want gardens for exercise.

20,797. It is one thing to recommend a new type of institution, with the consequent expenditure of money, and it is another thing to recommend the development of existing hospitals with a view to treating cases of this type. These are two different ways of going about it. You may take the existing general hospitals and invite them to extend their activities and make provision for this type of case specially, or you may say, "We shall start de novo and establish special clinics and special wards for this province of medicine"?—I think you will have ultimately to have both.

20,798. Mr. Mickle: Would not the increased expenditure for some hospitals be a very serious factor?—Yes, it might be a very serious factor.

20,799. Chairman: Supposing a grant were made? One of the projects in contemplation is that, just as there is a grant from public moneys for the treatment of tuberculosis, so also a grant might be made for the treatment in general hospitals of mental cases. The grant in some cases, as with the Infirmary in Edinburgh, is paid over to the Manager of the Infirmary, and they are willing to undertake the treatment of those cases with, no doubt, certain obligations to report and certain liabilities to inspection and supervision. Would that conform to your ideas?—I think it would be a most helpful way of dealing with a certain number of them.

20,800. Of course at the moment we have a very large number of costly institutions which have grown up under the present system. It is not practical to scrap these and substitute an entirely new type of institution right away?—Quite.

20,801. Do you therefore suggest that some use might be made of those existing institutions in what we might call the transitory period?—Yes, where there are several mental hospitals in a County Council area then one or two hospitals might be allocated for special types of cases.

20,802. Of course the development of your project of treatment would naturally diminish the populations of asylums?—It ought to, greatly, I hope.

20,803. It would be a shifting of that population from the one type of institution to the other?—Of course, the general hospitals could not take it. Even with the best will in the world, and public money, they may not have the ground to build upon and the room to put these cases in.

20,804. Mr. Jowitt: Taking the existing institution as they stand to-day, have they bed room to take in this number of cases?—The existing general hospitals?

20,805. Yes?—No, they have not.

20,806. Then it is a question of buildings or new buildings and a question of whether they are built by the existing general hospitals or by anybody else?—That is so.

20,807. Chairman: Following out Mr. Jowitt's point, we have heard some evidence to this effect, that it is rather desirable to have your mental treatment associated with a general hospital, because you are enabled to lay under contribution all the expert advice which you can get in the same building for the physical states that are associated with the mental instability?—Yes, and the ideal thing would be for the general hospital to be the clearing hospital, so that the cases can be thoroughly investigated and passed on to any of the others, and then you would not block your general hospital with cases which may be there for many months, with no necessary benefit from the hospital itself.

20,808. Of course there are specialised hospitals for the treatment of cancer and epilepsy. Do most of the patients reach those special hospitals after having passed through the general hospitals, or do they go direct to them?—Some go direct to them and some are sent.

20,809. Sir Humphry Rolleston: With regard to the question that has been raised as to the relation of general hospitals and mental hospitals, would it not be true that any diminution in the number of inhabitants of the mental hospitals which was due to the general hospitals taking such cases would be met by putting back into the mental hospitals the

10 November, 1925.]

Sir MAURICE CRAIG, C.B.E., M.D., F.R.C.P.

[Continued.]

chronic cases which in many instances had drifted off to the Poor Law institutions?—Quite.

20,810. And those Poor Law institutions, if reformed, could perhaps become a kind of general hospital?—Yes. The point is to make your clinics and your general hospitals clearing hospitals for these early cases.

20,811. Chairman: I want to take up one point with you on this aspect of the matter, Sir Maurice. It has been suggested that a type of institution which received only certified cases of the kind we are now contemplating, that is to say, the established cases and the chronic cases, would be so dismal a place, a place where the inhabitants had abandoned all hope, that it might have a very depressing and unhappy effect. It has been put from the other point of view that it is much more encouraging where the population is, in part at least, on the road to recovery, and a certain element of hopefulness arises from that. Is there anything in that?—I have heard that. I am not impressed with it, because after all one has got to do most for those who are breaking down and to prevent it if you can; therefore they must stand first. From the medical standpoint I see it is rather depressing to feel that you are only treating what we speak of as chronic disease. On the other hand, even there it is better to try to get some of those well and throw yourself into saying "They were not chronic, after all." My own feeling is that I do not think that is a strong point, and I should certainly go for segregation of the two separate types in the interests, really, of both.

20,812. And one would assume that the inhabitants of the asylum in the future would be persons who would probably not be susceptible of impressions of that sort?—Yes. A patient gets used to his illness. Emotion dies down after a time.

20,813. Now in a clinic or in the ward of a general hospital would you be able to achieve that classification which you say is so desirable? I mean the prevention of the association of an incipient case with other violent and disturbing cases, which you point out is so unfortunate?—Of course, in a general hospital they could not take the very difficult cases; they would have to have special wards somewhere for those cases.

20,814. What are we to do with those cases, because, as you know, the most violent cases are often the most curable cases?—They would not take them in a general hospital. That is why you may have to have special portions of mental hospitals set apart for dealing with these cases themselves.

20,815. Without certification?—Without certification, yes.

20,816. Mr. Micklem: Do you think that the fact of certification is as important from the point of view of the patient as the fact of being sent to an institution and detained there—I mean as regards the stigma?—Certification is the stigma, undoubtedly; that I am certain of, from thirty years' experience.

20,817. Is it not the fact of detention in the institution?—No, it is not that. It is the feeling that "I have been certified." It is the same with the patient who has gone voluntarily to an institution: so long as he has remained voluntarily the whole time, he will not fear anything, but if he has resided in that institution and during his illness it should be decided that he must be certified, then he would be hostile to the new position.

20,818. Supposing he had been simply notified, would notification have the same stigma?—I do not know that it would. I think you will probably have to have some form of notification; I appreciate that.

20,819. Chairman: Do you think that from the social point of view the public would be nice to discriminate between the person who was certified and the person who was not certified, or would they simply say, "A.B. has gone to an asylum"?—I think that is ultimately what may come, now.

20,820. On the other hand, no stigma would necessarily be associated with the comment that A.B. had paid a visit to a clinic?—No; that is why, if we could have special institutions, it is so much better.

20,821. Mr. Micklem: Take the case of the Maudsley Hospital. If a person has been in a mental hospital for two or three weeks, is there a stigma attached?—No, but Dr. Mapother may be better able to answer that question than myself. I have known persons go there and they do not feel any stigma.

20,822. Mr. Jowitt: There you have neither certification nor compulsory detention?—Quite.

20,823. Chairman: But you have an institution?—Yes. A person does not mind being treated for a mental or nervous breakdown, but does strongly object to being treated as a person of unsound mind.

20,824. Mr. Jowitt: Or as being compulsorily detained?—Or as being compulsorily detained.

20,825. Chairman: Deprived of liberty?—Deprived of liberty, that is it.

20,826. Now with regard to the type of case you referred to a moment ago, the violent case but eminently curable case, you say the clinic could deal with that type of case?—Yes.

20,827. Sir Humphry Rolleston: From the point of view rather of our profession, supposing in cases of that kind you could largely obviate certification: would not the necessary control which must arise in a sudden emergency, for example in recurrent insanity, expose the medical officer to charges of assault?—It never has done. It is only common assault, after all, even if you detain a person in his own house or a nursing home. I have never known a case; I have asked many, many persons; I have never seen one in the papers. But it must have been done hundreds and hundreds of times, and yet no person takes any steps there.

20,828. Mr. Jowitt: It is not common assault; it is false imprisonment?—No one takes any steps, because they appreciate the justice of it.

20,829. Chairman: I have not yet got your scheme into my mind. We will take a concrete case. There is in a home a person who has suddenly developed, shall we say, acute maniacal tendencies; the doctor, the panel doctor or private medical attendant, is called in. Would you suggest that that case should never be certified right away, but should in the first place be taken to such a clinic as you have in mind?—Yes, that would be the first step.

20,830. For the purpose, if necessary, of detention there, because I am assuming a maniacal case that is obstreperous?—But he is not hostile to detention.

20,831. But he may be?—Yes, he might be, but he is not a very hostile person. He is hostile one moment and tractable the next.

20,832. I think you would need to contemplate that those clinics would require to be vested with some power?—I think you would, certainly.

20,833. Some power of infringing liberty, if necessary?—Yes.

20,834. But the safeguard to the public might be in this, that it is only temporary?—Yes.

20,835. The infringement of liberty which follows upon certification is of a more or less permanent type. I do not think the public would resent so much a temporary infringement of liberty, where it was merely incidental to treatment, provided it was sufficiently safeguarded by notification?—Quite. Medical men do not want to keep patients who are constantly demanding their liberty. The danger there would be that they would be sent to the mental hospital earlier. No medical man likes to be constantly keeping a person who is demanding his liberty; so the danger would not be very great on the public side.

Sir Ernest Hiley: Mr. Chairman, the illustration you have given us was where the panel doctor was the person who actively induced the patient to go to the clinic. What is going to be the position where the relieving officer is the person who is called in?

10 November, 1925.]

Sir MAURICE CRAIG, C.B.E., M.D., F.R.C.P.

[Continued.]

20,836. Chairman: Have you considered that, Sir Maurice? The relieving officer is often the intermediary, as you know?—He would have to be, in the event of it being a Poor Law case, so most of the panel doctors could only notify the relieving officer.

20,837. Of course, the relieving officer, for his own protection, would have to call in a justice or some such person?—Not if the law allowed him simply to take the medical man's instruction. As the law stands at present, he has got to.

20,838. Would you remove a patient or secure the removal of a patient to the workhouse?—If there were a clinic he ought to remove him straight to the clinic.

20,839. And still be responsible for him?—And be responsible for such time as he is there.

20,840. But if we were to go a little deeper into it, do you think the relieving officer ought to have any functions with regard to insane cases or incipient cases?—No. There must be someone else; or let the relations do it themselves. The panel doctor will not take it. There would be persons who would not understand what to do. There must be someone who is responsible.

20,841. Supposing this branch of medicine were made the concern of the local authority, as tuberculosis and venereal diseases are. They would naturally have a certifying doctor?—Quite.

20,842. Would the natural course not be to call in that doctor at once? The panel doctor would notify the local authority's department, who would naturally send at once their doctor to examine the case, and if that doctor was satisfied that the case was one which ought to be removed, could not he send the ambulance for it?—Quite.

20,843. Is not the relieving officer only brought in for two reasons; one is that at present there is no machinery for getting the patient away, and the other is that he is the representative of the Poor Law, because the patient is going to be chargeable to the Poor Law afterwards?—I am not enamoured of the relieving officer being brought in.

20,844. We had some very interesting evidence from Glasgow of Dr. Carswell's experience there. He was certifying doctor there, and he told us he was called up at all hours of the day and night to go and see cases reported to him. He went at once and decided to the best of his ability the proper destination of the case. Some machinery of that sort is rather attractive, because it would eliminate to a large extent the elements which you wish to eliminate?—Yes, it practically keeps it on a very much better basis altogether.

20,845. Then as some of the cases could not be treated in a general hospital, does your mind rather favour the idea of a separate clinic where all classes of patients could be treated, even violent patients?—Yes.

20,846. Of course there are pros and cons there. If it is not in association with a general hospital it will tend to develop a special reputation, which you wish to avoid if you can?—But still I think the public would soon learn the difference. I do not think there is any great difficulty there.

20,847. At that stage, through which we shall assume that all patients will have passed before certification—at that stage, what measure of power would you think it necessary for the doctor in charge of the clinic to possess in order to restrain patients contrary to their wishes, but in their interests?—That would be what I call the third class.

20,848. Yes?—Then I think in that case there ought to be a form of notification; he has this patient there for treatment.

20,849. All that I think the public would require would be some assurance that there would be no abuse or no room for abuse of that power?—Quite.

20,850. True, the control would be limited for a certain period, but if there were notification to the Board of Control that such a case had been received and that such measures would be required in that case, do you think that the authority of the medical man in charge, subject to that notification, ought to be sufficient, or would you use the law at that stage at all?—I do not think so.

20,851. You think the law could be dispensed with at that stage?—I think it could be dispensed with.

20,852. Always subject to this, that it would be for a limited period?—Yes.

20,853. Then the persons who have reached your clinic would subsequently, I suppose, either leave the clinic cured or relieved, or, if their malady progressed, would find themselves ultimately certified?—Yes.

20,854. Now would you be averse from permitting certification to take place in such institutions?—In the clinic itself?

20,855. On the view that these are places where the patients should only be subjected to some provisional detention and to some less rigid form of supervision?—Yes.

20,856. Of course one has to allow for sentiment to some extent in these matters. You are dealing with a highly sensitive medium, and you have therefore to some extent to take into account public feeling, even although the scientific man may regard it as immaterial?—Yes. If there were a place where a patient could go for a few weeks—I mean it is a very materialistic outlook simply to move a person from a hospital into a private place, like a condemned cell; then the person might know that it was a half-way house. It is very, very difficult.

20,857. I do not think it would appeal very much to a more balanced mind, but it has been put forward as a consideration that it is undesirable that an institution which professes to be a home for treatment should ever develop itself into a place where patients are certified, so that they have that menace hanging over them when they are in?—But I am thinking of the patient still, and that is when a patient is seriously ill. Merely to be taken out of an institution just because you do not want something to take place in the institution, would be to the disadvantage of that patient and relations, it may be—I feel that the public would be wise enough to see that. If the patients have had their period of residence there and unfortunately they have not got better, and in order that they may be able to be removed to another place, certain proceedings are necessary, my feeling is that the public would accept that.

20,858. Of course one has got to think in terms of the man in the street, and he is rather liable to say this: "Oh, well, if you go in there you will be certified sooner or later, you may take it from me." That point of view, of course, is undesirable, is it not?—But look at it in another way. He may say, "They will take you there and keep you for a certain time and then move you somewhere else, where they will certify you." They could easily say, "Yes, but they take you out of there and put you somewhere else." I should think of the patient every time, and I am certain, as I look at it at the moment (I am open to conviction), it would not be to the advantage of a patient.

20,859. Mr. Jowitt: But you want to attract people to go to these places?—Yes, and certification is the last thing we want to resort to.

20,860. You want to attract them to go at a very early stage?—Yes.

20,861. Does not it occur to you that if it becomes known that certification takes place in that building, people will think they are flies walking into the spider's parlour, and they will be frightened to death of going to the place?—Then I should recommend, in order to meet that difficulty, that there should be one more stage; that is to say, when he has

10 November, 1925.]

Sir MAURICE CRAIG, C.B.E., M.D., F.R.C.P.

[Continued.]

stayed in that institution for a certain length of time he shall be moved to the mental hospital, but under a provisional order which is capable of lasting for another three months or whatever it may be, and then if he does not get better in that time he should be certified. I mean, I should make another step.

20,862. Chairman: I do not think the public will appreciate that refinement?—I do not think they will appreciate it, unless they appreciate the good will in the institution itself.

20,863. Of course we can never hope to eliminate from the public mind a certain apprehension of mental disease?—No. Of course there is no reason why they should not go to a mental hospital for a length of time under a provisional order, too, and in many ways it might be a real advantage to the patient, because the patient might get well during that phase.

20,864. We have your view, without pursuing the matter too much into detail, that there should be facilities for the treatment of early cases, preferably in special clinics and wards, in every centre of population?—Yes.

20,865. And that these are places where the patients should only be subjected to some provisional detention and to some less rigid form of supervision?—Yes.

20,866. Then the asylum proper would be still the place to which the established and chronic case of insanity would have to go?—Yes.

20,867. I am interested in your classification of the three types: the willing type, the non-volitional type, and the unwilling type. As regards the willing type, that is to say, a person who is able to co-operate in his or her own treatment, is it your view that they should be admissible to any one of the different types of institutions?—They should go anywhere they like to go. Some patients would like to go back to the mental hospital if they got well there before, but they ought to be allowed to go in freely.

20,868. But these people would be residents on a voluntary basis?—Yes.

20,869. Now we have heard something of the possible dangers of that course. We have heard suggestions that persons entering an institution on the voluntary basis have subsequently been certified, and one is a little puzzled with this case. Willingness is of itself a matter of degree. A patient who enters an institution willingly may unfortunately become worse, and really have very little will left at all: what are you to do with that type of case? Are you to regard the initial will under which that person entered the institution as persisting, or are you to take some steps at the stage when the person is either willing or unwilling?—I put that very question to a certain person. Of course, it came into one of the Mental Treatment Bills when certain notifications had to be made. I asked the question: "Supposing that this is the last act he does in his consciousness—to say 'I would like to go there'—and he passes in a few hours into a confusion of mind? Is that to stand?"

20,870. That is the point. Is he still a willing resident if he has no will at all?—The answer was "Yes." This was the legal view. We will take that as a proper position. Looking at it myself, I think it is quite a proper way of looking at it. One would say: "As long as he had consciousness, he appreciated his illness, and I do not think he ought to be certified. I think he ought to be allowed to reside there on the voluntary basis."

20,871. Such a person, of course, in the case you figure, could not be permitted to be at large, manifestly?—No, certainly not.

20,872. And if the patient indicated a desire to leave the institution, having entered as a willing patient, of course, technically, he would be entitled to leave at any moment?—Yes.

20,873. On the other hand, the disease might have so progressed that the medical superintendent would have to say: "Oh, this patient, however willing originally, and however much entitled to the privileges of a willing patient originally, is no longer in a state to call upon me to release him, and I must restrain him."—Yes.

20,874. Supposing a willing patient has gone into an institution, confusion of mind has ensued, and the patient says: "I want to go out; furthermore, I propose to throw myself in front of the first train I see; I am determined to do that": in these circumstances a doctor would within 24 or 48 or 72 hours, or whatever the period was in law, have to release that patient. What is he to do?—I think he ought to detain the patient then, under the original position. But if the Legislature considered that there ought to be a notification that he had done so, it would be quite proper; but that patient ought not to be certified; I feel certain about that.

20,875. But is not the purpose of the interval of 24, 48 or 72 hours which must precede the emergence of the patient into ordinary life intended just to prevent risks of that sort and to enable the staff to take steps to secure certification, if necessary?—That is as the law stands to-day.

20,876. Yes, but is not that desirable?—I think there ought now to be a provisional stage brought in to deal with the position that has arisen. I would have a provisional stage there also.

20,877. Manifestly, the detention is necessary in such a case?—Absolutely.

20,878. Then the non-volitional patient is a very puzzling person; the person who is not really able to take any interest in his own case, who is not obstructive, but is after all really, as you may call him, a parcel of goods?—Quite.

20,879. With no will of his own?—Yes.

20,880. Are you to substitute the will of somebody else for that person?—Yes, I think that is the proper thing to do. Whatever you do, it has got to be the will of that other person who is going to take the steps that are necessary to bring about some result; that is to say, whether you are going to have him certified or not, it is some other person who takes the steps, and the law accepts that to-day. Therefore I think that if the law would accept a notification from that person, it would be the proper way to do it. My own feeling is that they need not even notify. They simply ought to say: "I wish this patient to be treated in this place," and leave it at that.

20,881. There, again, of course, if there were any certification or notification, it would be all on a provisional basis?—Yes.

20,882. But you think that such cases might be dealt with without any certification at all for a time?—Yes, I think so, perfectly safely.

20,883. Then would the release be on the application of the person whose substituted will had been invoked? Who is to control the career of that person in future?—I suppose the person who is in loco parentis would be responsible the whole time.

20,884. Then the obstructive case must, of course, be subjected to some measure of legal restraint?—Yes.

20,885. And in that case you contemplate a provisional stage before the final stage?—Yes.

20,886. But you talk of the possible abolition of certification: do you really contemplate that? I see one of your sentences is prefaced with the words "If certification is abolished"?—I only meant abolition for the early stages. I am sorry. That is badly worded.

20,887. There must be a certain class, I suppose, with regard to whose state of mind there must be some solemnity and some final ascertainment of their position?—Yes. That sentence ought to be corrected.

20,888. Mr. Jowitt: There is always, of course, the question of the care of property. You may have a man detained and deliberately not certified. He may be quite unfit to look after either himself or his property?—At the present time, of course, the two are in absolutely different courts and different hands.

10 November, 1925.]

SIR MAURICE CRAIG, C.B.E., M.D., F.R.C.P.

[Continued.]

20,889. But would you deprive a man who is detained and not certified of the power of dealing with his own property? — Detained, you mean, by provisional order?

20,890. Yes?—Yes. I have always held that if a person is considered to be not responsible for his liberty, it is not safe to allow him to deal with his property. He might claim at any time that he was at that time being treated as a person of unsound mind, and use that as a ground for objecting to some mistake he may have made.

20,891. Mr. Micklem: I suppose he would be lawfully detained there?—Yes.

Mr. Jovitt: Supposing he wrote cheques?

20,892. Mr. Micklem: He would come naturally under Section 106?—Yes, I think so.

20,893. Chairman: The willing case is supposed to be a sane person and still entitled to manage his own affairs. He goes in to the institution and becomes worse, but is not yet certifiable. Is he still to be allowed to sign cheques and execute deeds and so on?—Yes, I think so.

20,894. You cannot prevent that?—I do not think you can prevent it.

20,895. Of course, you can have a certain protection given by the appointment of a receiver, even if a person is not insane?—That is only owing to disease or old age, under sub-section (d) of Section 116; it is limited at present.

20,896. Sir Humphry Rolleston: Supposing this attractive scheme of provisional notification is substituted as far as it may be for certification, the question would arise as to how long it would be before this stage of notification carries the same stigma as certification now does?—Yes, that is a point; but then I take it the country will have advanced another stage, and another milestone will be passed, towards understanding even better still mental disorder, and therefore it may be necessary to go one stage further. It would be a big stage further, clearly.

20,897. Chairman: Now I want to ask you a question with regard to the administrative side. Do you contemplate the local authorities continuing to interest themselves in these institutions, whatever they may in future be?—Yes, certainly.

20,898. Do you advocate the grant of public monies in aid of this form of treatment?—Yes.

20,899. And have you also now come to be of the opinion that the Board of Control, with possibly some modification of its constitution and powers should remain the supreme authority in this department?—Yes. I have been very much impressed during the last few years by their altered attitude. At one time, as I honestly say in my précis, I felt that they were part, if I may say so without offence, of a bureaucratic outlook on things, and that the legal side seemed to be very strongly marked, and there seemed to be rather traditional methods of treatment which were not quite in accord with modern medicine. But they have so absolutely changed of recent years, that I now feel that they have learnt so much the same as physicians and other persons have learnt that they would be most sympathetic towards (I am speaking from the medical side as well as the human side) advancing such a scheme as this; because they have worked under the other scheme, they have seen its limitations, and they have seen the difficulties of it; and they have also seen the benefits of these improved methods.

20,900. Of course, whatever body is placed in charge of this department will necessarily be the target of opprobrium to some extent; all public bodies are?—Yes, and physicians must be, too; that one appreciates.

20,901. Your profession has not suffered much worse than my own in public "dis-estimation," may we say?—Honesty of purpose is the only answer every time. One may fail, of course.

20,902. In the larger world, even in commerce, of course the whole of commerce depends upon credit and good faith, but there are people who are fraudulent?—Perfectly.

20,903. But your considered view is that the Board of Control, with some augmentation on the medical side, should have the supreme authority?—Yes, quite.

20,904. Would you give it more executive power than it possesses now in relation to the local authorities?—I think it ought to have more executive power certainly, because at the present time it must be purely recommending.

20,905. Of course, you know how resentful local authorities are of interference from what they call "Whitehall"?—Quite.

20,906. One has to be careful not to deprive them of the sense of responsibility?—Quite. I mean even if they were not used, certain powers might be given in certain districts.

20,907. Then, for the time being, until your ideal is realised, Sir Maurice, you think the most practical recommendations would take the form of the development of the provisional certification, and the provision of institutions in which incipient cases could be caught early and treated without certification, or, at any rate, with only some modified form of certification?—Yes.

20,908. And all directed to this aim of assimilating the treatment of mental disease to the treatment of physical disease?—Yes; make that the key-note of the whole thing.

20,909. Mr. Micklem: I should like to ask you one question, Sir Maurice. I rather gather from the passages towards the end of your précis that you are in favour of extending the number of licensed houses?—Not necessarily licensed houses; recognised houses I mean; that is to say, where you have got some form of recognition. Of course, I feel that all nursing homes ought to be registered; and I feel that if they were brought in then the mental homes would come in with them; but I can see that that may be some little time off.

20,910. You suggest that there should be the widest powers for medical men to undertake the supervision of one or two cases?—I do, certainly.

20,911. You recollect the section, Section 315 of the Act, which provides that lunatics are not to be detained except in accordance with the Act. That section you would like to see deleted altogether from the Act, I take it?—That is for certain types of case and the provisional cases; it is only for a certain number of patients.

20,912. Yes; that is to say, the cases that come under Nos. 1 and 2 of your groups?—Yes. I think licensed houses ought to have all the same advantages and powers that outside people have, clearly; so that patients can go in there with absolute freedom, if they wish to; but with the willing patients and with the non-volitional type I think the relations ought to be able to place them where they wish.

20,913. Would there not be some risk of unscrupulous persons using powers over their person and property in those cases, do you think?—They have no power over property at all at the present time. They would be in exactly the same position if they went into a licensed house or mental hospital. If they hold powers of attorney, those powers of attorney could be used for a certain period of time after they have been certified. I do not think there is anything in law against that. I mean, usually after twelve months they seem to feel they ought to have a change, but they frequently are retained.

20,914. Chairman: I am afraid that will not quite do in law.—I am only saying what happens in practice; it does happen in practice. Many times a person may come and say to me: "I have been acting under this power of attorney for two or three years, and I am rather unhappy about it because this patient has been ill now for so long." This may not be a legal question, but they clearly do it.

10 November, 1925.]

Sir MAURICE CRAIG, C.B.E., M.D., F.R.C.P.

[Continued.]

20,915. Take the case where a patient had actually been certified; at that moment, in my opinion, the mandate contained in the power of attorney has fallen, unless specially qualified.

Mr. Jowitt: I respectfully agree.

Witness: It does not say so anywhere in the Act.

20,916. Chairman: The point is the persistence of the will. The mandate is always supposed to be inspired by a continuing will on the part of its grantor?—If I may say so, a person in an asylum who is very insane can make a will; there is no question of his sanity or insanity there.

20,917. That is a very special department, as you know, in the case of wills?—Yes; but the fact that he became insane after he had made his will would not invalidate his will, would it?

20,918. Not necessarily; certainly not?—No; and the same with trusts or with deeds that he has made; they still hold if he made them during a period in which he has understanding, mind and judgment. I am interested to hear that powers of attorney cease, but they certainly do not in practice, whatever they do in law.

20,919. I think one has seen that?—Yes.

20,920. Mr. Micklem: At the present time it would be impossible for a doctor, for instance in the country, to take in one of these patients, as the law stands?—He is not supposed to take a patient in if the patient is of unsound mind.

20,921. Chairman: Without certification?—Without certification.

20,922. Mr. Micklem: Your suggestion is that he should be able to take them at the patients' wish or as their friends desire for their benefit; that the present law should be altered?—Yes; that his house should be now recognised as an approved house. I am quite willing that that should be so: that his house must be approved.

20,923. Chairman: And if the house is approved, he should not come under the lash of that section?—No; he would not come under that.

20,924. Miss Madeleine Symons: Do I gather, Sir Maurice, on the topic of licensed houses, that you do not feel that the system of licensed houses does lead to abuses?—No, I do not think so. One has unsatisfactory reports from certain places at different times, and then they may change and get very good accounts; I mean, it so depends upon the persons themselves; and it is the same with big mental hospitals.

20,925. But you would probably agree, would you, that rather more general suspicion attaches to licensed houses than possibly to public institutions?—I quite agree; that is because of the question of gain to the person concerned.

20,926. That being so, you still do not attach any importance to it?—No. To me it is only giving a reason why that person should behave in that way. My own feeling is that the good licensed house is quite one of the best ways of treating patients; the patients are much more quiet; they have much the best treatment in many many ways; that is, in a good house; of course, you may have one that is not satisfactory. Personally, if I were ill myself, with all my experience, and I have dealt with every class, I would rather be treated in a private institution than in a public one.

20,927. I do not know that I quite followed your reason for thinking that not much importance should be attached to these suspicions. I mean it is rather natural, is it not, that people should think that money is being made out of it?—Yes; but that is true of everything in life; and that is a danger that is common to life.

20,928. But you do not feel that there is any difference between a case where people as it were are forced to remain while money is being made out of them, and other cases; you think there is no difference in principle?—No; because you are still dealing with the human factor. You have got to presume much in order to make your point good; that is to say, you have got to presume that all the persons and relations are equally of a degraded type, if I may say so; that is, they are perfectly willing for their relation to be with unscrupulous people, which is not true. I mean the very suspicion that these people have to work under makes them better in a sense. You get quite as many scandals, if I may use the word, in the public places as you do in any private place, perhaps more.

20,929. Then there was one question which a member of the audience was very anxious should be put to you, and that was whether, in this rather extended Board of Control that you suggest, you would be in favour of women medical members being included?—Certainly; I think it would be very good in many ways, looking after the details that a woman would want and things like that; it is most important.

20,930. Mr. Jowitt: I want to ask you, Sir Maurice, a question or two about the existing system first. I am impressed by the fact that, rightly or wrongly, the medical profession are very apprehensive of the danger which they think attaches to them today. What further specific protection do they want? Do you know?—That is a very difficult question to answer. I mean that medical men, even if they have got protection, are afraid of having their time taken up by actions, and things like that, even where the defence might be perfectly successful. It is most difficult to answer that question. Of course, really, the unrest has been caused by the actions that have taken place; and once you have got an unrest in the profession it is difficult to allay; their point is that this is not a medical proposition and never has been. To certify a patient is nothing to do with medicine, and therefore they say: "Why should we do it, if we do not do it properly?" That is their position.

20,931. Does it come to this: would the medical profession be satisfied supposing the statute made it perfectly plain that they are not liable for giving a certificate, even though they give it negligently, so long as they are honest?—As a profession, we should not like anything which said that we could do a thing negligently as against the public and the public not have redress against us. I should not like that at all. What I do feel is that it should be necessary to prove bad faith.

20,932. I want to see how far the medical profession want protection. Do they want to be protected in the event of dishonesty? Obviously I should say not. Or do they want to be protected in the event of carelessness?—They do not want to be protected in the event of carelessness, clearly.

20,933. Chairman: May I intervene there, because it is an interesting topic? It has been suggested to us by some witnesses from the medical side that when a doctor grants a certificate which leads to a magistrate's order, and in which he sets out certain matters of opinion and certain matters of fact, he should enjoy the complete immunity from action which is enjoyed by a witness in giving evidence in court, which is absolute at the present moment. As you know, a witness giving evidence in court may be negligent in his statements—in fact, I think he may do anything but perjure himself. He is absolutely protected because he is supposed to be serving the larger cause of justice; the sanctity of the witness box is so important to the general interests of justice. Now some of the medical evidence we have had has gone the length of suggesting that those opinions and those statements of fact which are contained in certificates should enjoy the absolute immunity which a witness enjoys in the witness box; that would cover everything, even malice. Would you go that length?—No; I personally should prefer it this way:

10 November, 1925.]

SIR MAURICE CRAIG, C.B.E., M.D., F.R.C.P.

[Continued.]

that any court which was going to decide whether an action should take place should be a Judge with two assessors; that there should be assessors, responsible persons, by whom the medical side could be put before the court; I mean persons who are altogether outside the case in question, but who could place the matters before the Judge.

20,934. Mr. Jowitt: Because, of course, it is vitally important to us to see that the medical men are not frightened out of this business?—Yes, and, of course, it is vitally important to the public; because it will mean that the doctors will not do it at all.

20,935. Do you think that perhaps medical men would feel greater confidence and greater security if the matter came before a Judge and not a jury? Is that what you are saying?—You mean when the case was tried?

20,936. Yes.—They want protection against the action itself, clearly; which they have got here, but it is not definite enough.

20,937. Chairman: Mr. Jowitt's question points to this: that this class of topic is so easily inflamed and can be represented in such a way as to elicit undue sympathy with the jury, and that possibly the medical profession might prefer to go before a Judge?—I quite appreciate that.

20,938. Mr. Jowitt: Although, of course, in an individual case, personally, I should like certainly a dishonest doctor and probably a careless doctor to suffer. At the same time the bigger issue is this: that to make this system work satisfactorily we must get the goodwill of the medical profession and their willingness to act?—Quite.

20,939. That is the difficulty I feel. At the present moment I do not quite see what they want?—Of course, they are wanting to keep clear of all these anxieties and troubles and to go on with their work.

Chairman: Yes, but every citizen is open to attack for what he does negligently or does dishonestly?

Mr. Jowitt: Except the Bar.

20,940. Chairman: Except the Bar?—We should like the Bar to have this matter, because it is dealing with the liberty of the subject after all, and up to a point the legal people ought to have it; it is their side entirely; it is nothing to do with medicine. Further, if they want to come in on a matter, which clearly they have to come in on in the interests of the public, they ought to take the responsibilities of their function, which is dealing with the liberty of the subject, but they do not do it; they are very careful to leave it to the medical profession, and then to criticise the medical profession on what they have done—I do not say unkindly.

20,941. I think you may take it, Sir Maurice, that we are very sympathetic to any points that may be made before us that would restore the confidence and comfort of the medical profession in discharging this difficult duty?—It is going to be very difficult to restore, because it is getting very, very deep.

Mr. Jowitt: Therefore we are impressed with the necessity of trying to restore it.

20,942. Chairman: Yes. If you are to have immunity in degree and not absolutely—?—It would never do.

20,943. The present idea is that you should be able to bring the matter into court and have what is practically a discussion on the relevancy of the allegations, as to whether they are sufficient?—That is the difficulty. Where you get the protection as given under the Act, and then there is a legal way out of it, by saying: "This is not covered by the Act itself," it is very much like saying that you shall go to arbitration on certain contingencies, and then having your action tried in the High Court as to whether it is a proper case for arbitration, even when you have decided between yourselves that there is to be arbitration. I am only pointing out the difficulties that one sees. The difficulty is to get the wording that really carries what the medical profession want in the way of protection. If this Section 330 carries that protection, they will probably be satisfied.

20,944. Earl Russell: Of course, that involves protecting the "black sheep," too? There are "black sheep" in every profession.—I did not mean that; but you have got to prove it is a bad case.

20,945. Chairman: But it is very easy to allege bad faith. The trouble is this, that a Court confronted with an allegation of bad faith is practically bound to let the case go on, lest it be true. The Court says: "These allegations, if proved, of course would establish the case, but we cannot say whether they are true or not before they have gone before some tribunal"?—Then comes the question of the provision of something like a Grand Jury, which tries this before.

20,946. A Judge in chambers, possibly?—By Judges in chambers—more than one.

20,947. Would you think that the fiat of the Attorney-General might be any protection?—He is so very over-worked; he might have great difficulties there.

20,948. Earl Russell: As the Chairman points out, no tribunal can tell the truth or falsity of these allegations till trial. That is the trouble if once the allegations are made?—Quite.

20,949. Chairman: You are very liable to have allegations made by the type of people who are concerned in these cases?—Quite. Of course, it strikes at the very fundamental basis and strikes at law more than medicine, because it strikes at the question of the liberty of the subject; and they are not going to attain liberty, if the medical profession refuse to act, which they will do ultimately.

20,950. We want to devise something which will re-assure the medical profession and which will at the same time effectively deal with those who may be dishonest in these matters?—But that is the question of being able to word the thing legally, so that it cannot be turned aside by simply saying: "We cannot settle this until it has been tried." That is what it comes to.

20,951. You see the legal members of this Commission are puzzled?—I appreciate that absolutely. I also appreciate how serious it is becoming in medicine.

20,952. Mr. Jowitt: I am much obliged. Now there is one other matter on the existing system I want to ask you about. I have been over a certain number of mental hospitals and have been very much impressed by the fact (I suppose it is inevitable) that in the reception wards into which new-comers are taken a great deal of noise takes place; there are people moving about, crying out, getting up at night, and so on; in fact, to a person like myself to go through the wards the whole experience is very distressing?—Of course, I am very much in favour of more single rooms and always have been. I have often asked: "How is a person to sleep in a dormitory with a very large number of other persons"? It is what I expressed the very first time I went into Wakefield 30 years ago. Exactly the thing you are saying was the thing I myself noticed; indeed, I spoke about it the first night I went round.

20,953. I ask you because at the last asylum I went over I talked to the medical superintendent about this, and he told me that in his belief it did not worry patients; and he told me that although he had complaints from patients about innumerable things he had never had complaints about these particular things?—I would not say that. Of course, patients vary. Some patients will ask you if they can sleep with others; and even where there is a noise they will sleep better; but many many persons would not sleep, and of course they cannot rest because of it. That has been a point, and I have never understood the building of these mental hospitals, where they have had so many dormitories and so very few single rooms.

10 November, 1925.]

SIR MAURICE CRAIG, C.B.E., M.D., F.R.C.P.

[Continued.]

20,954. Chairman: Separate rooms involve more attendants, you must remember?—Yes.

20,955. Mr. Jowitt: Of course, if we make any recommendations in this respect we shall very seriously have to consider the question of cost, because if we recommend too much our recommendations become impracticable. Do you think that the advantage of speedier cures and discharges which the community would gain would counterbalance any increased cost there might be in the way of additions to buildings and extra staff?—But you cannot measure human suffering in that way; that is the difficulty.

20,956. I know you cannot?—I do think you would get economic advantages too, because patients would get better.

20,957. Earl Russell: From the purely medical point of view, which you can tell us about, do you think that to the new patient coming into this noisy ward it is harmful and retards progress?—Certainly.

20,958. Mr. Jowitt: And so far as we can, from a financial point of view, it is undesirable to have it, if we can avoid it, because we are driving him over the border-line?—Yes.

20,959. Chairman: There is a credit side of the account as well as a debit side?—Yes.

20,960. Mr. Jowitt: So much for the existing system. Then with regard to your suggestions, you suggest the establishment of clinics, as you call them. They are to be places, I gather, not where people go merely to ask advice, but where they go to reside?—Yes.

20,961. They are to be run at the expense of the municipality—is that your idea?—A great many of them would be, yes—most of them.

20,962. And cases that want help or assistance in the early stages would either go voluntarily or would be recommended by some official?—Yes.

20,963. That is your idea?—Yes.

20,964. Then you do realise, do you not, the great importance of popularising those institutions?—Yes.

20,965. And making them trusted by the community as a whole?—Yes.

20,966. Does it occur to you that if there is a danger of certification or of compulsory detention in those institutions they will not be popular? It is the tendency, may I say?—I do not think you will ever escape from need for detention, because you will never get a number of patients together without having some that you will require to detain in a sense.

20,967. But if you want to popularise the institutions, it is desirable to limit that as much as you possibly can?—I agree absolutely; and the same with certification.

20,968. Supposing you have got, as I believe you often get in the early stages, an acute case, a maniacal case if you like, that very often comes on very suddenly, does it not?—Some of them do.

20,969. Do you anticipate that such a case as that would go to one of your clinics?—They ought to have a ward where they could take them quite easily; it would be a separate room.

20,970. You do anticipate that those cases should go there?—Yes. In the general hospitals you may not be able to do it, but in a clinic, yes, you ought to take those cases easily.

20,971. Will you help me to this extent: supposing you had a rule at the clinic that anybody might go out on 48 hours' notice, as a matter of practice how far do you suppose people would avail themselves of that power?—Most of your "willing" and "non-volitional" would not avail themselves of it. The difficult ones would be those who became very much worse and yet retained some volitional power.

20,972. I think we had some information given us with regard to Maudsley. Would it be comparatively quite exceptional for anybody to demand to go out?—I think so. Personally, looking after people in private, I very rarely get it.

20,973. Mrs. Mathew: I should like to ask, Sir Maurice, whether you have in your mind a design for an ideal asylum; you probably have your views?—An ideal place is practically like a hospital, with departments and specialised people there, attending the patients.

20,974. But I mean as to buildings?—Not too big; I do not want large-sized buildings. When we took the Cassel Hospital and we considered our numbers, we decided that we would get somewhere about 60 or 70, but of course, there is a very great difficulty in cost; I appreciate that; I mean it is almost prohibitive to run places like that. On the other hand we took 200 to 300, in the time of the military hospitals; that was the number we came to the conclusion was best handled—about 250 to 300, I think.

20,975. Was the Cassel Hospital built for the purpose?—No, it was adapted.

20,976. From a military hospital?—It was adapted from a private house.

20,977. Then another question I want to ask is this. Is part of your objection to treating a large number of patients together the fact that they so often, and, indeed, generally, have a stereotyped diet?—Yes. Of course all the things are important; and also the difficulty of getting a large enough medical staff to deal with them. You want to have a large medical staff for your acute cases.

20,978. How many do you suppose?—We put it down at about one doctor to 30 or to 50 patients.

20,979. Not more than 50?—No. A medical man could scarcely deal with it.

20,980. Chairman: You are dealing with acute cases, not with chronic cases?—I am only dealing with the acute cases.

20,981. Sir Humphry Rolleston: With regard to the present general reluctance on the part of the medical profession to certify and indeed to have much to do with cases of mental disorder, do you think that it might be advisable to have a specialised class of medical officers to deal with such cases in districts, like the tuberculosis officers and the venereal disease officers—I mean they will be conversant with the matter?—Yes; he would be very very helpful, clearly, to the general class of patient; he might be most valuable.

20,982. We have had some evidence, I rather think from the British Medical Association, deprecating a step of that kind?—He would not have to be in practice himself, clearly, or other practitioners would not like it; but if he were merely one whom they could call in for special work always in the district, he would be very helpful.

20,983. And to do what notification or certification was necessary?—Yes.

20,984. You think, on the whole, it might be advisable?—It should not be compulsory, it might be optional; but it might get over one of the difficulties that we were discussing, because a person who was holding a public position might be considered more trustworthy than a general practitioner, who might be get-at-able by the public or someone else.

20,985. Sir Ernest Hiley: Sir Maurice, would you have any objection to the scale of charges in licensed houses being subject to some supervision?—The difficulty in the scale of charges is largely the question of supervision; it is the cost of nursing very largely, because where you have got to have special nurses, and then there is their keep, it always raises the cost enormously.

20,986. But you would not object to the Board of Control, or whatever the Central Authority might be, having authority to prescribe a scale of charges?—I do not know about "prescribe." I think they ought to know; I think they do to-day; they always have been able to ask what a patient pays and to see whether he is getting what he ought to get; I think that is done to-day; certainly it is done as far as the Master in Lunacy is concerned, because it comes under the audit; everything goes before him.

10 November, 1925.]

SIR MAURICE CRAIG, C.B.E., M.D., F.R.C.P.

[Continued.]

20,987. You would not object to an audit of the accounts of the licensed house?—No. I do not think they themselves would object.

20,988. Chairman: It is a private enterprise, you must remember, in one aspect of it, very often conducted by a limited company. Do you fully appreciate the import of Sir Ernest's question—it might involve having their accounts published?—Publication might be an objectionable thing. I do not know that that is absolutely necessary, so long as it is known to certain departments.

20,989. You would not object to the Board of Control having the results of the audit placed before them?—I should not think they would have any objection.

20,990. But you do recognise that it is desirable that some form of supervision of the accounts of the institution should take place, because there appears to be very little supervision of the financial arrangements at present?—Quite. I do not see what objection they would have to that.

20,991. There is always a certain objection on the part of private enterprise to have its affairs made public?—Yes; but is it necessary to make them public if they are known to the department itself? I do think perhaps it would be objectionable in some ways. I mean one patient may be paying much more than another, and he may think that the other patient is getting the same advantages as he is.

20,992. But an official audit, you think, ought not to be resented, the results of which would be communicated to a responsible body entitled to criticise?—Quite. I do not think there would be any objection to that.

20,993. Sir Ernest Hilcy: Just one other question, Sir Maurice. One of the members of your profession told us here that in his view it was impossible adequately to treat an insane patient in a private house?—My experience is that in many ways they are the best, because you see the best licensed homes allow any medical person to go in; they allow the patient's own medical practitioner; you can send down any bacteriologist, or any person to see or to do anything. That is the reason why I said that I should like to be treated in one of them, because I should be able to get the best; of course, it is more costly.

Mr. Parker (representing the National Society for Lunacy Reform): I do not know, Sir, whether you think it would be proper to put to Sir Maurice a question on the present training given to medical students before taking their qualifying degree. I understand that is a matter upon which the Commission have been very desirous of having evidence; and in a report of the Council of Mental Hygiene I notice that Sir Maurice, as Chairman, has made an exhaustive enquiry into the examination papers set during the last four years. The conclusion is that "Some two-thirds of the medical students who qualified during the years 1921-24 were not required to show any knowledge whatever in their written papers on the subject of mental diseases."

20,994. Chairman: We have had that report, and I recognise the passage you have just quoted, Mr.

Parker. I think it is quite proper to ask Sir Maurice, who has had large experience as an examiner in this very subject, to explain in a sentence, if he can, what his views are upon the desirability of improved education?—We do feel that. The whole attitude of the public and everyone towards mental medicine really goes back into the education of the medical students; that is, it is at present treated as something apart from physical disease.

20,995. It is not only the public, but the profession also?—Yes; and what we want to do is to get it absolutely in line with physical medicine, and we would like to see mental diseases taught by the general physician in the ward itself.

20,996. One knows that the medical curriculum is being steadily increased and the student after all can only assimilate a certain amount, even in a five-year course, and he is a very hard-worked man nowadays. Would you consider that psychiatry should form part of the ordinary curriculum, or should it be a specialty, a post-graduate subject—I mean in any development of it? I suppose, every student must take some of it; but would you consider that further development should be in the form of research or post-graduate work? And just before you answer that, you must link that up with this, that if only some doctors are going to have the benefit of those fuller courses and special research, then it may be necessary to select only such doctors to exercise the functions of the Act. What is your view, Sir Maurice, as to the place of this subject in the curriculum?—Of course, I am fully aware of the overburdened life of the medical student, but in that the mental side comes into every disease in life and you have got no disease that has not got its reflection in the mental activities of a person suffering, and may, indeed, be the element which decides whether he is going ultimately to recover or not, it is absolutely essential that every medical person should know something about mind and its work.

20,997. Then you would give it more prominence in the medical course than it possesses just now, even if it were necessary to curtail some other branch of medicine?—Yes. We are proposing at Guy's to give one course a year on psycho-neuroses, on the earlier stages, so that every student has a course on that, and ultimately one hopes to see the mind side dealt with, as I say, in every case.

20,998. Of course, medicine, like every other science, is becoming so large now that specialist training is developing. Is this a subject which can be adequately mastered by a student in his ordinary curriculum, or is it one of those subjects which requires a specialist training?—If he is going to do specialist work eventually, he wants a specialist course.

20,999. But the moment he is capped and sent out into the world, he can certify at any moment?—Yes; but everything should be done to advance the study of the mind.

21,000. Just to conclude the matter, would you rather have an expansion of the study as a special subject, or would you rather have it more fully dealt with in the ordinary curriculum?—I think it must mean both.

Chairman: Sir Maurice, we are greatly indebted to you for your attendance here this morning and for the most interesting and helpful evidence that you have been good enough to give us.

(The Witness withdrew.)

Dr. FREDERICK LUCTEN GOLLA, M.B., F.R.C.P., called and examined.

21,001. Chairman: Dr. Golla, you hold the qualifications of Bachelor of Medicine, Bachelor of Surgery of Oxford, and you are a Fellow of the Royal College of Physicians of London?—Yes.

21,002. You are Pathologist and Director of the Pathological Laboratory in the Mental Hospitals Department of the London County Council?—Yes.

21,003. And I understand that you are here to-day to give us your views on the topic of research in psychiatry?—Yes.

21,004. First of all, may I take it that your general conclusion is that it is desirable that there should be facilities for pathological research, not only in individual mental hospitals, but also at central institutions throughout the country?—Yes.

[November, 1925.]

Dr. FREDERICK LUCIEN GOLLA.

[Continued.]

21,005. Your contemplation, I take it, is a system whereby you would have throughout the country at certain points central laboratories at work?—Yes.

21,006. Which would be resorted to for assistance and advice and training by all the staffs of the different asylums?—Yes.

21,007. At the same time you contemplate that each mental institution would have its own pathological equipment, but not developed, of course, to anything like the same extent as the central institutions which you have in view?—That is so.

21,008. Is that the method which is pursued by the London County Council who have one central laboratory and pathological institution to which all the asylums under the charge of the London County Council can resort for assistance?—Yes.

21,009. I wish you would just tell us quite informally (we have read your précis, of course) of the scheme under which you work here in London; it would be useful?—We have the central laboratory with a pathologist in charge, who acts as director of research for the work done in the laboratories of the various mental hospitals.

21,010. Where does that official work?—At the Maudsley Hospital.

21,011. And you are the official?—Yes.

21,012. So you are the pivot, I take it, of the whole system?—Yes.

21,013. Your work is carried on entirely at Maudsley?—Yes.

21,014. And do you carry on there both ordinary routine work and research work?—Yes.

21,015. What staff have you?—I have three skilled assistants, and then we have a system of seconding for three month periods four men from the various mental hospitals.

21,016. Are the three you have mentioned qualified doctors who are whole-time officials?—The three assistants are trained scientific workers but not qualified doctors. They are whole-time officials.

21,017. That constitutes the permanent and nucleus staff?—That, together with the clerical assistants and others.

21,018. Then you have told us that you have doctors seconded from the institutions of the County Council. How many of them do you have at a time with you?—Four at a time.

21,019. Are they drawn from all the mental hospitals under the charge of the London County Council?—Yes.

21,020. For what period are they with you?—They have a three months period.

21,021. On what principle are they selected?—They are selected by the superintendents on their own application.

21,022. Turning first to your work, what exactly is the sphere of your labours?—Primarily I have the direction of the routine work of the laboratory, which receives specimens from the various mental hospitals, and questions as to work that they are not quite competent to undertake themselves.

21,023. Do they address questions to you and send you specimens for examination?—Yes.

21,024. And do you conduct tests for them?—Yes.

21,025. Do you conduct, for example, the Wasserman test?—Yes.

21,026. Are all the Wasserman tests for the London County Council conducted at your laboratory?—They are all done at our laboratory.

21,027. That is routine work. In addition to carrying out that central routine work, do you also engage in independent research, or research initiated by yourself?—Yes, I engage in my own research work, and then I have the supervision of the research work that is being done at all the various mental hospitals and of people who work in my own laboratory.

21,028. Do you suggest topics that might be fruitfully investigated at the different institutions, and do you get the results of the investigations made there?—Yes.

21,029. Then what are the departments at Maudsley in your own charge?—We have a department for physiological psychology where we are investigating the physiological concomitants of mental disturbance.

21,030. Is that clinical work, or is that post-mortem work?—No, it is all experimental work on normal and pathological cases.

21,031. That is the physiological side. What other departments have you?—We have a biochemical department where we are investigating the changes of metabolism that occur in various mental disorders. Then we have a bacteriological department where we do these Wasserman tests, investigations of that nature and other questions. Then we have as part of the physiological-psychological department a department where we deal purely with questions of psychiatry. In addition to that, we keep a record of all the family histories of the 25,000 cases that go to the various mental hospitals which are related to one another. That is to say, we have a central bureau, and we note down all their inter-relationships, and we have got valuable material there. At present we are collecting it; it has been collecting for 10 years or so.

21,032. You are accumulating data?—Yes.

21,033. Is that work in your opinion of great importance for the furtherance of this branch of medical science?—I think it is of very great importance. What I was trying to convey in the précis of evidence I offered is how desirable it is for the ordinary medical officer to be encouraged to investigate cases. It always seems that a hospital for mental diseases is like establishing a hospital outside and taking in only people who have a high temperature. Similarly a disturbed conduct is only a symptom, and it is a symptom that characterises a great number of bodily disturbances, they are very slight disturbances; they are very difficult to find out, and it is only in the last few years that we have been accumulating evidence which has enabled us to make any progress in this matter. Their metabolism is different from other people's, and their reaction is different from other people's.

21,034. Then your work would assist in two ways. It would assist in diagnosis, and it would assist also in the suggestion of remedies?—Quite so. I do not think at present it is possible to have any system of diagnosis based on conduct, that is to say, on mental phenomena. We are only just beginning to touch the point when you can say that certain people with mental disorder really belong to some disease. They are simply unbalanced mentally, but they are people who have a certain bodily disease and can be treated as such.

21,035. Would you say, from your general knowledge, that the scientific investigation of this disease has lagged behind the scientific investigation of other manifestations of human disease?—Enormously. In fact we are only just beginning, and possibly the thing that has put us off for a long time was the discovery that the brain had to do with thinking. Most of these disorders of conduct are symptoms of bodily disturbance just like a person who has drunk too much, or a person suffering from typhoid fever.

21,036. Are you able to associate mental disturbance with various toxins, for example?—Yes.

21,037. Do you think there is a very fruitful field for investigation opening up before you?—I think it is enormous.

21,038. How long have you been engaged in this branch of medicine?—I was physician at St. George's, where I chiefly had to do with neurology, up to the war; and after that I felt I wanted to concentrate more on the research aspect; and I succeeded Sir Frederick Mott at the Maudsley hospital about two years ago.

21,039. So that your work is really only at its inception?—Yes.

21,040. But do you already feel satisfied that along those lines very fruitful possibilities may emerge?—I think we have got most astounding indications

10 November, 1925.]

Dr. FREDERICK LUCIEN GOLLA.

[Continued.]

even within the last few months. For instance, with regard to one type of insanity, dementia precox, one discovered that quite a simple abnormality of reaction is associated with it just as truly as the Wasserman reaction is associated with syphilis.

21,041. Now you spoke of the encouragement to the medical officers of institutions throughout the area of the London County Council. Do you find that they respond to the stimulus of three months' association with you?—Yes, I have been very encouraged with the results one has obtained so far. Of course, the difficulty has been rather to get them to feel that the research work and the work they do in their own laboratories will be considered as part of their duty as medical officers. There is rather a tendency to think that when they have been round the wards that includes all their duty. Various Committees of the London County Council have backed me up very much in that, and they have given them to understand that it is just as much part of their duty to investigate cases in the laboratory as it is to see them in the wards.

21,042. And do you find that they are responsive to your stimulus?—Yes, on the whole.

21,043. You have four of them for three months at a time, so that 16 of them will pass through your hands in the year?—Yes.

21,044. How many medical officers are there altogether apart from the superintendents who, I suppose, do not come to you? What is the number of the assistant medical officers in the London County Council area?—I should think somewhere between 70 and 80.

21,045. So that it will take about six years for them all to have had a three months' period with you?—Yes, but a lot of them do not stay. We get occasionally quite brilliant young men who just tide over a year or two, and then go into other branches of medicine.

21,046. Then is it part of your effort to communicate to those who are seconded to your establishment the importance of looking at the science of psychiatry from the experimental and from the laboratory point of view as well as merely from the clinical point of view?—Yes.

21,047. It is interesting that you should tell us that your view is that this branch of science has lagged so far behind, because there is a popular impression that these institutions are rather residences than places of cure; but science, I take it, has not hitherto really enabled the practitioners to any extent to resort to methods of treating insanity because its nature was not known?—That is so, Sir.

21,048. Apart from restraint of conduct and ameliorative influences of one sort or another, has there been any great development along the lines of curative treatment either by drugs or otherwise?—No, only within the last few years one has begun to detect symptoms to some extent; it is only beginning.

21,049. Then the medical side of insanity in your view has a great deal of arrears to make up?—I think it has, enormously; it is practically beginning.

21,050. And the way that can be done is by the institution of a properly equipped system of laboratories in charge of specialists who are engaged not only in routine but also in higher research work?—At a central institution; but at the mental hospitals I should leave the work in the hands of the medical officer under the supervision of the central laboratory.

21,051. Just take that aspect of it. You do not contemplate the cessation of the existing laboratories which we know exist in each of the London County Council asylums, but you think that co-ordination of those with a central institution would be advisable?—Yes, that is what we are doing at present in the County Council area.

21,052. And a certain coming and going between the officials and association and consultation between them?—Yes.

21,053. You would need to have a certain demarcation of the spheres of the central laboratory and the local laboratory, would you not? You do not want them duplicating work?—No, I do not think there is very much danger of duplication. The great trouble is to keep in touch with the young men whom we train, and to suggest research work after they leave us. That means constantly writing round and going and seeing them, and encouraging them as much as possible, and putting recent discoveries before them; it means a great deal of correspondence.

21,054. Do you recommend that the same system should be adopted in other parts of the country as you have initiated in London?—Yes.

21,055. How many institutions would you contemplate throughout the country; how many would reasonably cover the country, do you think?—I think a group of four or five counties together might support one institution. It would be a question of a relatively small number of these central institutions; but what I think is very much to be deprecated is that county councils with isolated laboratories and mental hospital should set up a local pathologist, or some official to do research work in their own mental hospital. They will never be able to pay a man sufficiently well to attract a person with sufficient knowledge, and I do not think there is any prospect that the work that would be done would be worth anything. It is a type of work that means a very broad knowledge of a great many various aspects.

21,056. Of course a lot of amateur research going on in various departments would be of very little use?—I think so, very little.

21,057. At present, if in the provinces it is necessary to have a Wasserman test, where is that done?—They generally have an arrangement with some local institution who do the tests at a small fee.

21,058. Perhaps one of the provincial Universities or something like that?—Yes, very often. In most of the big cities there are what they call research institutions. They are simply commercial laboratories for doing tests for typhoid and Wasserman tests.

21,059. But you would contemplate at the centre, so to speak, of each group of four or five counties a central institution where a skilled pathologist would be installed and would carry on all the testing and routine work for his district, and at the same time afford means of training and research such as you do in London to members of the staffs of the mental hospitals?—Yes.

21,060. Is there much research work done at the present moment outside London?—There is very little. At Birmingham a certain amount is being done under the direction of Sir Frederick Mott, and some work is being done at Cardiff.

21,061. Then as regards apparatus, is expensive apparatus required for your work?—I think one could fit up an adequate laboratory at any mental hospital the same as we did in the London County Council area for £300—possibly a little less. The central laboratory of course would be more expensive to run; that should have a lot of apparatus which is expensive and which it could lend out, if necessary, to the various hospitals.

21,062. Supposing, for example, one of the young men seconded to you showed special aptitude for research, as you hope, but had to return to duties at his own asylum, would you be prepared to give him apparatus to carry on that particular branch of research in his own institution?—Yes, that is what I do at present. I lend him the apparatus, and any chemicals or mixtures he cannot make easily we forward to him.

21,063. In that way you are able to stimulate him in his work?—Yes, and we keep him supplied with the latest results and medical literature.

21,064. I think in addition to your permanent staff and your seconded members you have voluntary workers, have you not, at Maudsley?—Yes.

21,065. Are they skilled persons carrying on research work on their own resources?—Yes, they are medical men and women, four or five; sometimes we have foreigners; at the present time we have some from the United States; we sometimes have Japanese, and a very small number of English people.

10 November, 1925.]

Dr. FREDERICK LUCIEN GOLLA.

[Continued.]

21,066. And I think you have one studentship which is the result of a bequest of Dr. Maudsley?—Yes.

21,067. Have you monthly re-unions of all your officers of the different County Council Institutions?—Yes; we endeavour to get them to come up and have informal discussions. I think that is one of the most valuable parts of the work, and that is what they miss so much in the provinces; they are absolutely isolated.

21,068. And do you find that this conception of the pathology of insanity is useful; not only does it make the medical staff realise that they are there to cure disease, but is it also appreciated from the patients' point of view?—I think so, very much; they feel that something is being done, and they very often co-operate; and I also notice that the atmosphere in a hospital where there is a lot of that sort of work taking place is very very different from a place where there is no investigation going on.

21,069. Does the patient feel that his case is being studied?—Yes.

21,070. And is that in itself encouraging?—Yes.

21,071. Have you considered on the administrative side how this work should be financed? How is your work financed?—We are financed entirely by the County Council.

21,072. Do they find not only the salaries of the staff, but also the apparatus and the accommodation?—Yes.

21,073. Out of public money?—Yes.

21,074. Of course, Maudsley is in a very special position, as we know. It is dealt with by a special Act of Parliament?—Yes.

21,075. Would you be in favour of local authorities being authorised by Parliament to make grants in aid of research to comparable institutions such as yours?—Yes; I think so, as long as such grants were under some Central Authority, to see that the money was not wasted.

21,076. Do you think that such expenditure might possibly prove remunerative in the end because of its results in enabling mental disease to be checked?—I think there is no doubt it would, in some aspects; it is almost doing so now. For instance, the malarial treatment of general paralysis enabled them to send out a number of cases; they are no longer charges on the asylum; that is the result of quite recent work.

21,077. Just one modern discovery has resulted in that practical benefit?—Yes.

21,078. Earl Russell: Do you regard that treatment as proved, as the result of your experience?—I think so. I was very much prejudiced against it when it started; it did not fit in with my ideas.

Earl Russell: I have heard people say that they will not have anything to do with it.

Chairman: I think, Dr. Golla, you have given us your views generally, and unless you have anything to add I do not propose to detain you, though my colleagues may have some further questions to ask you.

21,079. Mr. Mickleth: You say, Dr. Golla, that there is practically no research work being done in this country apart from what you are doing in London and that which is being done at Birmingham and Cardiff?—I instanced those as the principal centres; there is a certain amount being done, of course, elsewhere, but very very little.

21,080. I suppose most of the mental hospitals have good laboratories, have they not?—No; very few of them.

21,081. All the London ones have?—Yes.

21,082. And the better ones in the provinces?—Yes; but many large mental hospitals have no laboratories at all. I occasionally have young men from the provinces who come up to see me and work with me who say they have neither the facilities to do the work, nor are they allowed to; it is not part of their duty.

21,083. Miss Madeleine Symons: You remarked incidentally, I think, Dr. Golla, that you got a good many brilliant young men from the asylums, but that many of them did not stay. Have you formed a view as to a reason for that?—I think it is really so much a question of what one is trying to counteract in initiating research work. They do not like a man with any scientific attainments to spend his time simply being a custodian of people. He does not find he has enough spare time or any real recognition of his efforts if he tries to do original work of his own. He sees the prizes go, or they did in the past, to people who are purely concerned with administration, and he is rather disgusted and seeks other fields.

21,084. And you feel still in a great many cases that is the position?—I am afraid so, particularly in the provinces. I think it is very, very much less in the County Council service, because we are beginning to let it be understood that original thought and original work do count in promotion.

21,085. And you think that these developments you have suggested to us would both attract and keep better men?—I think so.

21,086. Mr. Jowitt: How do we compare with regard to foreign countries in this matter of research?—On the whole, we are very much behind.

21,087. Was the malarial treatment a discovery of ours?—No; it was chiefly worked out in Vienna.

21,088. And other countries have been going on with this thing for some time, have they?—Yes; but of course practically no country has had very much work done in psychiatry, because people have been so hypnotised with the psychological aspect that they have forgotten the bodily disturbances.

21,089. I have no doubt you have some means of keeping in touch with foreign developments and so on?—Yes.

21,090. Sir Humphry Rolleston: When you say we are not so forward as some people, is it not largely because of the help that has been given in places like Holland in institutions and so on?—Yes.

21,091. What you really want is more endowment, is it not?—I do not think personally I want any more endowments.

21,092. Mrs. Mathew: You do not concern yourself at all with the training of nurses at Maudsley, Dr. Golla, do you?—No; that is the department of the Superintendent and Medical Officers there; but we are often brought into contact with nurses in these cases whose metabolism we are investigating, and we find that the nurses take a very keen interest in any work that is being done. They offer themselves as victims to have control experiments done on.

21,093. Sir Humphry Rolleston: I think you might perhaps make a point of the enormous saving that does result and probably has resulted in the past in the prevention of epidemics, such as colitis, which results from having skilled bacteriological supervision. What is the position about colitis?—Enteric fever and dysentery are practically non-existent at present. There are a few cases of carriers; we get a few cases coming up from year to year; but at the present moment I do not think there is a single case suffering from dysentery in asylums.

21,094. That is an enormous saving in money and in life?—Yes. Of course the same was true of typhoid.

21,095. Do you envisage any scheme of a travelling pathologist who would go round investigating cases of that kind in the same way as officials of the Local Government Board used to do?—I think it is much better now in the hands of the central laboratory; we have weekly reports.

Sir Humphry Rolleston: There is one small point, Mr. Chairman, and that was when you were asking Dr. Golla about his position he said he had succeeded Sir Frederick Mott two years ago. He did not mention that he had been working with him for a long time, and it might appear that

10 November, 1925.]

Dr. FREDERICK LUCIEN GOLLA.

[Continued.]

Dr. Golla's first invasion of pathology was two years ago.

21,096. Chairman: We do not wish Dr. Golla to go down to history as such a novice as that! (To the Witness): You might give us your experience, Dr. Golla.—It was in 1918 when I came back from the War that I started at Maudsley; but previously to that I had been doing original work on the physiology of the nervous system practically from the time I was a student.

21,097. How long were you in association with Sir Frederick Mott before you succeeded him?—From 1918 to 1923.

21,098. And before that again you had shown your special interest in this subject by independent work and study?—Yes.

Chairman: Thank you very much.

(The Witness withdrew.)

(After a short adjournment.)

ALFRED FRANK TREDGOLD, Esq., M.D., F.R.S. (Edinburgh), Miss FLORENCE ANDREW and Miss EVELYN FOX, called and examined.

21,099. Chairman: This afternoon we have with us representatives of the Central Association for Mental Welfare, and they have deputed Dr. Alfred Frank Tredgold, Chairman of the Medical Committee of the Association, Miss Florence Andrew, Secretary of the South-West Lancashire Association for Mental Welfare, and Miss Evelyn Fox, Honorary Secretary of the Central Association, to represent the Association before us; and we are very glad to have their assistance in our deliberations. The Association has been good enough to place before us the printed memorandum of the evidence, Dr. Tredgold, which you desire to give.—(Dr. Tredgold): That is so.

21,100. You appreciate, I notice, that we have already had before us a very large volume of evidence dealing with most of the topics to which you advert?—Yes, with the exception of one, we thought.

21,101. If you please. I think the most useful thing we could do would be to amplify now any of the topics you desire to develop, because you may assume that we have all read the Memorandum and have it before us.—I think the topic that we desired to draw particular attention to was that on page 4 of our printed memorandum of evidence relating to adolescent mental disorder. This Association, of course, has been in existence for 12 years, as we state, and I think we may say that the experience of those 12 years has been to show us conclusively that there is a type of case which we call adolescent mental disorder which is not capable of being dealt with either under the Mental Deficiency Act or the Lunacy Act, and which, as far as I can see, you have not hitherto had much evidence about.

21,102. You have furnished us with a series of illustrative cases which we have read, and I must say that they impressed me as very striking—very trying and difficult cases for which there is, apparently, no adequate provision just now?—That is so; that is the point we wanted to bring before you. That is our main point.

21,103. The ordinary certified case is provided for?—That is so.

21,104. But the type of case which you are specially concerned with is really at the present moment almost uncared for?—Yes.

21,105. What are the practical suggestions of the Association as to that type of case: the type of mental disorder which is scarcely certifiable, and which at the present moment, as you suggest, is really not provided for?—Our practical suggestions are contained in the recommendations on page 6. We realise that possibly some of these cases would be dealt with under the Mental Treatment Bill if that Bill became an Act, but comparatively few of them.

21,106. That is the voluntary cases?—Yes, and we think that for most of them some special form of institution is needed, an institution which shall be capable of dealing with them over a fairly long period of time running into years, and which should also provide them with training, and with some sort of occupation as well as medical treatment.

21,107. I suppose there are really two types of cases, are there not? There is the type which is recoverable, and which with the passing away of the stage of adolescence may possibly emerge into quite efficient citizenship on the one hand, and, on the other hand, there is the type that is permanently deficient, and must always have a certain amount of shelter and assistance?—That is so. We have rather tried to separate those cases in our evidence, and under the heading of adolescent mental disorder we are dealing in the main with the recoverable type of case. Of course there would be some who would subsequently turn out to be cases of dementia praecox, or incurable insanity; but we think with regard to the great bulk of them, if proper means were provided, they would be curable and would be capable of returning to social life.

21,108. One has to remember this, that multiplication of institutions means the multiplication of the cost, and one is anxious to consider how any of your proposals could work in with others that have been brought before us. It appears to be recognised on all hands that some form of permanent asylum will always be necessary for the chronic type of case; but we have heard a good deal of evidence on the desirability of establishing clinics and institutions in association with general hospitals where incipient cases, or cases short of certification, might be treated. But your type is a little different, as it occurs to me, and I should like your view on this. You seem rather to contemplate the home than the hospital?—Yes. We have in view a rather different type of case altogether, and I think perhaps a type of case of which this Association has rather special experience; probably these cases in any number would not come before any other body; it is a type of case which breaks down during adolescence, and possibly there is some hereditary tendency, but the main thing is the stress of adolescence and the environment at that time. They break down and for a period of years they are quite asocial or anti-social; they are suffering from mental disorder, but that mental disorder is not of a kind which can be certified, and we do not think that the ordinary treatment at a clinic such as would be suitable for cases of incipient insanity would be adequate. We think they must have treatment, but that treatment must be combined with home life in a small home of about 20 persons where each person could be under the personal supervision of an understanding superintendent, where they could receive industrial training of some kind or other, and at the same time where they could be afforded opportunities for the development of their character, which is essential if they are to become efficient when they get back into normal life.

21,109. The degree of deficiency, you say, is short of certification?—Yes.

21,110. Are they persons whom you could not describe as of unsound mind?—Yes, I think they are.

21,111. On the other hand, you rather indicate that they are a menace to themselves and a menace to society in their present condition?—Yes.

21,112. You see your suggestion would mean that we should have to have yet a third type of institution: the asylum, the general hospital or clinic, and a type of home?—Yes.

10 November, 1925.] ALFRED FRANK TREDGOLD, Esq., M.D., F.R.S. (Edinburgh), [Continued.
Miss FLORENCE ANDREW and Miss EVELYN FOX.

21,113. Possibly intermediate between those two, or at any rate different from those two, where cases of that sort might be received?—Yes.

21,114. Do you contemplate that the cases would pass out ultimately into the world?—Yes, we do. I may say that at a very large and very well attended meeting of the Medical Council we faced this question. We realised that we were proposing another type of home altogether.

21,115. That is just the point; we should like to hear you upon it?—We realised it, and we faced the question. We realised that the only way of dealing with these cases in a satisfactory manner was to provide a different type of home altogether, which should not be an asylum and which should not be an ordinary clinic.

21,116. I notice in your efforts to assist a number of those cases you have been able from time to time to get them into different types of homes or institutions of one sort or another?—Yes.

21,117. I gather they were mostly charitable institutions?—Yes, all of them, I think.

21,118. How far do you think that this type of case can be met by charitable efforts?—I think probably Miss Fox will be able to give you better information on that point, because she is more concerned with the practical administration of the Association.

21,119. It is a very important point, as you will appreciate. Perhaps, Miss Fox, you will give us your experience?—(Miss Fox): Judging from our practical experience in getting these cases cared for in the existing homes and institutions, those homes and institutions, as they are at present financed, are unable to deal with the cases in at all a satisfactory way. They have a large percentage of mixed cases coming from all sorts of different places, and of a different type very often; they are run on very economical lines; they cannot provide the rather special surroundings and the rather special staffing that this class of case requires, if it is to be returned to normal life in the course of a few years.

21,120. But you do not think that ordinary philanthropic effort could cope with it?—No, because philanthropic effort generally wants to see a very definite end to its exertions; and in the case of the homes which we have tried the longest time allowed, I think, is for two years, and in some instances it is obvious that a girl wants rather more than that in a special surrounding; it may be three or four years. The period of instability lasts a considerable time in some of these cases.

21,121. What do you do with a case where the instability persists past adolescence into mature life?—At present there is nothing done, but I should imagine in future that those cases when they had had every opportunity of training would have to be referred for treatment probably under the provisions of the Mental Treatment Bill. If they persist for ever it is obvious that no training home can cope with them for ever.

21,122. I am afraid there must be a certain percentage of the cases which will remain unstable, notwithstanding the best training and treatment that you give them?—Yes, there must be some.

21,123. And yet will always be short of certification?—I think so.

21,124. A very difficult type of case to deal with?—Very difficult; but I think the percentage would be very much smaller if the young person from 14 upwards can be given special training, with the aim of returning that person to ordinary life.

21,125. You regard that particular stage of life as one where there is the greatest risk to stability of mind, and therefore a stage at which some protection might be devised for the weaker vessels?—Yes.

21,126. Do you find that there are no institutions at the present moment which you can resort to for such cases?—Practically none. Miss Andrews' Association in Liverpool has just started a small experiment on those lines; and there are just a few — perhaps three or four homes I know of in the country—where by chance the superintendent is particularly interested in this type of case, and does make a special effort to deal with them; but it is not easy to do so with a lot of other cases, because where you might want a certain form of discipline for the normal girl you might need to have something quite different with the abnormal girl who is wrestling with special temperamental difficulties; it is not always easy to manage them both together.

21,127. Suppose it were possible to establish institutions such as you figure, would you require some power of compulsory detention?—No.

21,128. Because I could imagine that that type of undisciplined young man or young woman is just the type who might go into your home and leave again in a few days?—I think there would be a risk of that with some of the cases, but I think that one would be able to have a very large number who would remain, provided the environment of the home was of the right sort.

21,129. Then you contemplate that it should be purely voluntary treatment?—Yes, at present we think it ought to be voluntary.

21,130. Miss Madeleine Symons: Do you find, or do you think, Miss Fox, that a good many cases of the type you have in mind, in so far as they are under 16, find their way now into institutions like industrial schools and reformatories?—Yes, I think they do. We have no statistics as to the proportion.

21,131. May I ask you on that, do you advocate for children of that kind that they should be placed in the special homes that you are suggesting to us, or do you advocate that they might have better facilities for treatment in the existing institutions?—It seems to me that both are really needed. You really want some industrial schools that lay themselves out for these temperamental cases, but I think even then there would be a few cases that would benefit by being moved to such a specialised place as I suggest—not all, because of course your aim is to keep the surroundings as normal as possible, and one does not wish to withdraw any individual, however handicapped, from the society of his normal fellows if it is possible for him to remain with them to his advantage. I think there are some who cannot remain with the ordinary boy and girl, and who do benefit by the quite different discipline.

Chairman: I think Miss Symons' suggestion is that, without starting new institutions, some adaptation and possibly an extension of the industrial school system might go far to meet your difficulty.

21,132. Miss Madeleine Symons: I was really wondering what the view of the Association was on it: whether they agree that the type of case they have in mind does find its way there; whether they were satisfied with the treatment received there, whether they wished to suggest further treatment in those institutions, or whether such cases should be all removed into homes?—I do not think we could make any statement so sweeping as that they should all go, but I do not think that having special industrial schools for these types of cases would meet the need, even of the industrial school population; I think you want something else besides.

21,133. Chairman: Have you any conception of the number of cases of this sort in the country as a whole?—No.

21,134. But in the experience of your own Association during the period of its operations have you come in contact with a large number of cases of this type?—We think that probably 10 per cent. of the cases which are referred to the Association belong to the uncertifiable type of case; that is as near as we can go.

21,135. That is only of those cases that come actually within your own cognisance?—Yes, we have had about 34,000.

21,136. Ten per cent. would be 3,000 or 4,000?—Yes, but then I do not think that represents the proportion there is, because some of our Associations are called Associations for the Mentally Defective, and that would mean that many of these borderland cases would not come to them.

10 November, 1925.] ALFRED FRANK TREDGOLD, Esq., M.D., F.R.S. (Edinburgh), [Continued.
Miss FLORENCE ANDREW and Miss EVELYN FOX.

21,137. If you take the typical cases you put before us they seem extraordinarily difficult to deal with. They are not all children, by the way. I notice that some of the cases are over 20?—Yes; they started younger.

21,138. But would people of that sort be disposed voluntarily to remain in a home where they would be subjected to a type of discipline that they might not welcome, however good it was for them? I mean you are assuming it is all to be voluntary?—Yes, we think that of the cases with which we have had to deal a really considerable proportion of them would stop voluntarily, and I think Miss Andrew, who has actually sent some of these cases to a home, agrees with that.

21,139. Some cases of course are amenable and others are not really amenable to treatment?—Yes; but on looking over the sort of cases that we have had, they have received such unsuitable treatment—not from anybody's fault—that most of them have constantly run away, and I do not think they would have done so if it had been possible to place them in the right environment when they were still young. We pick them up too late very often.

(Dr. Tredgold): With reference to that point may I say this: this was a matter which was very carefully considered by the Committee, because there are one or two members who took the view that it would be quite impossible to get these people to remain in an institution and that we ought to apply for some power of detention.

21,140. That was what was troubling my mind at the moment, Dr. Tredgold.—Quite so. That subject was very carefully considered; we had got a great deal of experience, and the conclusion that we came to was this, that on the whole, if the superintendent was sympathetic, and if the atmosphere was suitable, the majority of cases would stay in the homes; there would be some who would not be detained and who would go away, but we felt that on the whole it was better to lose that small number rather than to attempt to apply for powers of detention for a totally new class who were entirely outside the Lunacy Act. We felt it was quite impossible to ask that Parliament should give powers to detain another class of person, who was not suffering from the amount of mental disorder which would justify his being dealt with under the Lunacy Act; and we felt that the number of cases that would refuse to stay would be comparatively small.

21,141. Then how would you propose to reach and discover this class of case?—We have no difficulty about that; I mean they are applying to the Association almost daily.

21,142. The relatives, I suppose?—Yes, there is no difficulty about reaching them. (Miss Fox): And the homes have them. All these voluntary homes, of which there is a very large number in the country, especially the preventive and rescue homes, and certain homes for boys, are always referring cases to us because they cannot deal with them; they are not in the least mentally defective but they are unmanageable, and I think if there was any provision possible those cases would go to the specialised homes instead of being in the scattered homes. I think also a great many would probably come through the observation wards.

21,143. At present is the only type of place to which such young people can be sent some voluntary home run as a charity?—Yes. In those homes there is a considerable proportion of cases at the moment which are paid for by boards of guardians; in the main they are the cases that are chargeable to the guardians.

21,144. But how do you suggest that your homes would be better able to manage those incorrigible or unmanageable cases than the existing institutions?—No existing institutions take these cases specially. The charitable funds are provided for rescue and preventive work, perhaps for one type of case, and perhaps for another; and none are provided for this special type of case; therefore they have all sorts, and they cannot adapt their work to all sorts of cases.

21,145. Then your homes would be adapted to deal specially with this type of case?—Yes.

21,146. As to the financing of it, I see that you propose that the local authorities should be empowered to establish such homes?—Or to contract.

21,147. And you contemplate that the money should come, in part at least, through a grant from the Exchequer?—Yes.

21,148. So that the institutions would be partly on the rates and partly on the Votes?—Yes.

21,149. Where would you have the institutions situated; what would be the distribution of these homes?—The majority of them, I suppose, would be in or near the vicinity probably of towns, because, after all, the majority of these people would have come from urban areas, and they have got to be trained for the work which they would naturally turn to. Some would have to be in the country, probably, but I think the majority would be where the voluntary homes are now.

21,150. That is to say, distributed among the centres of population?—Yes.

21,151. In the towns, or would you suggest that they should be in the country adjoining the towns?—I think that would be better and healthier; it would give them more scope for outdoor work. But you have got to realise that the girls do not like outdoor work as a whole; they will not go to it afterwards.

21,152. Do you not think that this particular province of good work could be covered by charitable effort?—No, I think charitable effort has recognised the need for it, but it has not covered it.

21,153. I should rather have gathered from what you have said that some of the charitable efforts had been possibly a little misconceived in the existing institutions, and that what you really wanted was a new direction for charity?—I should not like to say that; but they have not aimed at catering for this special class of case. There are many others for which they cater in different ways.

21,154. What I meant was this: it is a modern development to appreciate this kind of social defect?—Yes.

21,155. If that was brought sufficiently prominently before the public, would not the public respond as they have responded in the past in the other cases?—I do not think they would. Of course, one has got to realise that they are responding less and less.

21,156. Perhaps the means of response are being curtailed?—That may be so; but there is very much more difficulty in raising funds for any charitable work now, and it is almost impossible to raise funds for any new development.

21,157. Have you considered at all what the expense of such homes would be?—Yes. I think the expense would be rather higher than the ordinary rescue and preventive home. It is very hard to say, but I should think it would vary from 18s. to 25s. a week; I could not say really. It would depend upon what arrangements were made.

21,158. 18s. to 25s. all in? Does that include establishment charges and everything?—Yes, I should think about that, judging from what is paid at present for those sort of homes.

21,159. Would that include also payment in respect of medical attendants and teachers?—It would include some payments, but I should imagine they would probably go to clinics for treatment.

21,160. But you would require a teaching staff and materials, of course, for any trades you were teaching, would you not?—Yes, you would have to have opportunities for very varied industrial training.

10 November, 1925.] ALFRED FRANK TREDGOLD, Esq., M.D., F.R.S. (Edinburgh), [Continued.
MISS FLORENCE ANDREW and MISS EVELYN FOX.

21,161. That means paid teachers, does it not?—Yes, but not skilled craftsmen, or teachers of young children under Board of Education Regulations.

21,162. Would the work done in your institutions be a source of revenue? Would the young people who did that work get the produce of their labours, or would it be done on behalf of the institution?—If you have a small home, and you have, say, 20 to 25 of these rather difficult young people, you cannot set them all to the same sort of work, because one of the methods of treatment is to give them the right type of practical training. Therefore I should think that the money that would be got from that work would be very small.

21,163. Have you considered whether this work could not be covered by the Mental Deficiency Act?—No; they are not in any way certifiable under the Mental Deficiency Act.

Mr. Jowitt: Does this come within our terms of reference, Mr. Chairman?

21,164. Chairman: I doubt very much if it does. It only comes within our reference in so far as evidence is being offered to us upon the mild forms of insanity which occur in adolescence and how they should be treated. (To the Witness): Of course we cannot deal, as you understand, with mental deficiency?—We carefully excluded any reference to it. It has nothing whatever to do with mental deficiency.

21,165. That is what I cannot quite understand, because these people seem to me to be at least temporarily mentally deficient?—I do not think you can be temporarily mentally deficient.

21,166. Can you not?—I trust not; mental deficiency implies some permanence in the condition.

21,167. Probably organic, or something of that sort?—If it is mental deficiency it is permanent.

21,168. What you have in mind is really a mild form of insanity incidental to a particular period of life?—Yes, mental disorder. I do not know that insanity connotes a legal form.

21,169. A mild form of mental disorder incidental to adolescence—is it that class of case?—Yes. (Dr. Tredgold): Yes, that is so. We definitely exclude cases of mental deficiency, and we want to make that point quite clear, that none of these cases are cases that can be dealt with under the Mental Deficiency Act.

21,170. Mr. Micklem: In the illustrations you give us of several cases, are not many of them cases which come directly under the Mental Deficiency Act?—I think you will find in all those cases, whilst (on the face of it) it is suggested that they are mentally defective, none of them have been proved to be capable of being dealt with under that Act. I think that applies to all the cases we have put forward—that in actual practice they cannot be dealt with under that Act.

21,171. It is not easy to follow that. The cases that are given on the face of them look very much as though they were precisely covered by the Act—some of them?—I quite agree they do, but in actual practice they cannot be dealt with. I think I am correct in saying that several of them we tried to put under the Mental Deficiency Act. (Miss Fox): We have taken the cases that no one would certify.

21,172. Mr. Jowitt: Take a case like your case "E," there seems to be nothing the matter with the case except what happens to everybody who leads an immoral life. I suppose, any criminal tendency is due to mental disturbance?—This case "E" has been seen by various specialists, and though they said she was not certifiable they were quite certain she wanted some treatment.

21,173. Sir Humphry Rolleston: Do you take cases of dementia præcox?—(Dr. Tredgold): We have excluded cases of dementia præcox; I do not think there are any of those cases here. I may say that all these cases have been selected from a very large number, and in all of them there has been no doubt as to mental abnormality. It is perhaps rather difficult to express that in the brief notes which we have given you, but the cases have come before the Association because of definite mental abnormality.

21,174. Mr. Jowitt: Is it in your view a symptom of mental abnormality that a girl employed at a photographer's should go outside the shop?—(Miss Fox): This girl has had I do not know how many different places and she has been seen by several specialists, as her conduct was such that nothing could be done to her; she has been seen by a great number of specialists who said that she was not certifiable in any way.

21,175. Mr. Micklem: But so many of these cases seem to me to be cases of what the common person would call vicious or criminal disposition, on which punishment has very little effect, and they want looking after. Prima facie a case of that kind would come under the Mental Deficiency Act?—In selecting these cases I do not think there was one who was not examined by more than one expert as to the possibility of certification under the Act.

21,176. Was not that certification under the Lunacy Act?—Yes, and the Mental Deficiency Act also.

21,177. Chairman: The four classes under the Mental Deficiency Act are idiots, imbeciles, feeble-minded persons and moral imbeciles—in each case with a definition?—Yes.

21,178. Moral imbeciles are defined as "persons who from an early age display some permanent mental defect coupled with strong vicious or criminal propensities on which punishment has had little or no deterrent effect." Some of these cases are not unlike that description?—(Dr. Tredgold): That may be so, Sir, but, as a matter of fact, I have no hesitation in saying that none of these cases could be dealt with as moral imbeciles, and I go further and say that none of them could be dealt with under the Mental Deficiency Act. I think one has to distinguish very carefully between mental defect and mental disorder. If they could be dealt with under the Mental Deficiency Act we should be only too glad, because our difficulties would be very much lessened; but it was because we find in actual practice that they are not mentally defective but suffering from mental disorder—in other words because we find that they cannot be dealt with under the existing Act—that we ventured to place them before you as a special class for consideration. It seems to me that with regard to vicious and criminal propensities the position is this: Whilst vicious and criminal propensities one may regard perhaps as the unfettered sway of certain lower instincts—we will put it that way—when the control is inoperative, then one's natural instincts tend to have unfettered sway and may manifest themselves in vicious or criminal misconduct. That may arise in the case of the mental defective as a result of the non-development of control; he has never acquired control over those instincts; he has been mentally defective from birth or an early age. But the type of case we have in mind here is where conduct at one time has been good and normal and has conformed to the laws of society, but the control has broken down as a result of mental disorder or disturbance, and whilst it has broken down then we have this misconduct. I think one does want very clearly to distinguish between those two cases: the type of case in which the person has not only never developed control, but is incapable of developing control, and the person who has at one time had control, but whose control has broken down. We suggest that these cases, whilst they are not capable of being certified under the Lunacy Act for practical purposes, nevertheless do come within the terms of your reference in this particular term: "The extent to which provision is or should be made in England and Wales for the treatment without certification of persons suffering from mental disorder." We hold the opinion very definitely that they are suffering from mental disorder.

10 November, 1925.] ALFRED FRANK TREDGOLD, Esq., M.D., F.R.S. (Edinburgh), [Continued.
Miss FLORENCE ANDREW and Miss EVELYN FOX.

21,179. Of course there is a school which regards all vicious propensities as indicative of a certain amount of mental disorder?—Yes.

21,180. Mr. Jowitt: Does the doctor accept that view?—That is rather another question.

21,181. Do you accept that view?—I do not know that I would, because I think that certain vicious and criminal manifestations are due to this: the individual carefully balances the consequences and decides whether it is going to be to his advantage to commit this particular crime or not, and whether he is likely to be found out or not. It is a case of carefully balancing the consequences. If he decides that on the whole he is not likely to be found out, and he will reap a material advantage from committing the crime, then he deliberately takes the risks.

21,182. Chairman: I do not think very many philosophise the situation quite so carefully as that. It is instinctive, I am afraid, in a good many cases. —Yes, but on more than one occasion I have heard an accused person actually use that expression in accounting for the delinquencies. "Well," he said, "I just thought it over, and I decided to take the risk," and I think that is what a lot of criminals do.

21,183. Mr. Jowitt: May we get this clear, which seems absolutely fundamental to your position. I go back to case "E." Here we have a case of a girl who is quite unable to stay long in a situation, who goes as a help to somebody and only stays two weeks, and then as a companion to an elderly lady, where she stayed three weeks; she then goes to a photographer's shop and looks out of the window instead of attending to her business, and finally runs away and lives with a man somewhere. Suppose I told you those facts about any girl, would you draw the conclusion that that girl was in any way suffering from mental disorder and ought to be placed under restraint?—A case where a girl does that, in spite of careful upbringing, may I add—

21,184. If you like, certainly. In spite of the careful upbringing, she is unable to stay longer than about a fortnight in any situation, neglects her opportunities when she goes into business, and, if you like, is found periodically living with men. Would you predicate on those facts some type of mental disorder?—In other words, she is following a line of conduct which is greatly to her disadvantage?

21,185. Certainly.—I should say, on the face of it, that that implies some mental failing of some kind or other, to my mind.

21,186. Chairman: This class of case is a little difficult to describe. One is quite familiar with the type of child who is obviously dull and unresponsive to stimuli and unreceptive of education; that is, no doubt, the typical mental defective. Then you may have, of course, the child who is really of unsound mind. But in this class of case you apparently infer abnormality of mental state from unsatisfactory conduct, if one may put it in general terms?—Yes.

21,187. Unreliability of conduct evidenced by untruthfulness and petty thefts; and from that kind of social abnormalities you infer that that person is suffering from some form of mental disorder?—Yes.

21,188. It is not the generally accepted view that that is necessarily mental disorder, is it? It is, in a sense, mental disorder, because it means that the person does not conform to ordinary standards of conduct; but is it disease?—I think I should certainly take this view, that if you have a child who has been well brought up, whose environment has been satisfactory, where she has been subject to good example and good precept, and yet, in spite of that, she has persistently given trouble, she cannot conform to the standards of the home, she cannot conform to the standards of society, she breaks the law, she has no idea of personal cleanliness, she is dirty in herself, and she embarks upon a course of conduct that is obviously to her disadvantage—in other words, which entails some sort of punishment—I should certainly conclude that there was something wrong with that person's mind. One would want to know more details to decide what was wrong, but I think one would certainly conclude that there was something wrong.

21,189. And the cure, according to you, would be found in a species of moral discipline?—Assuming that that state of mind was due to a disorder, the cure would be found in treatment, in prolonged training and supervision in such a home as we suggest. If it were due to an absence of any capacity for developing control, in other words, if the person were a moral imbecile, then I do not think anything would cure it, because I regard the moral imbecile as incurable.

21,190. Where would you accommodate a case of that type?—I think there is only one thing to do with a moral imbecile, and that is to get him under control, the sooner the better. From what I have seen of them I think they are absolutely incurable.

21,191. Then this class of disease you are contemplating, this mental disorder, is not the type which would be appropriate for treatment in a general hospital?—No.

21,192. If this young woman to whom Mr. Jowitt refers, had gone to a hospital they would have said "There is nothing wrong with you, what are you here for?"?—Yes.

21,193. Then you would say "Oh, but this person's conduct is so unreliable, so unsatisfactory, that there must be something wrong with her mental make up"?

21,194. Sir Humphry Rolleston: I gather that the probabilities are that institutional treatment would put these people more or less into a position of being released after ten years or so?—We should hope they would be released before that.

21,195. But do you imagine that in the case of these young women you would get a similar relapse at about the age of 45 to 50?—I think it is possible that one might.

21,196. It is one of the examples of puerperal disorder?—Quite so. I think it is quite likely that at the other end of life one might get a similar relapse.

21,197. Are those cases provided for?—I suppose not. They are not provided for.

21,198. And you would be prepared to take up those cases?—Certainly. I think they would be provided for by very similar institutions to those which we suggest.

21,199. Chairman: Of course you may have a disturbance in the case of boys at puberty also, may you not?—One does have the same disturbance. Of course we are speaking here from experience as an Association, and in actual practice most of the cases are girls, but undoubtedly one does have the same condition in boys.

21,200. Some of the instances you give here are of boys and men?—Yes, some are. In private practice I see quite a number of those cases. Boys in well-to-do circumstances, boys attending public schools or the Universities may break down in the same way.

21,201. We have the mental deficient on the one side, we have persons of unsound mind on the other, and you say there is a category that falls between the two, neither mentally deficient nor of unsound mind, but exhibiting at one phase of life such abnormality as to require special treatment?—That is so, Sir. I put it this way: that to be capable of being dealt with under the Lunacy Act a person has got to suffer from a particular kind of disorder of mind which amounts to unsoundness of mind or legal insanity. We say that there is a type of mental disorder which is short of that, which nevertheless is a disorder of mind which affects a person's conduct, which renders him in need of treatment and which is curable, but yet which practically cannot be certified as a case of unsound mind.

10 November, 1925.] ALFRED FRANK TREDGOLD, Esq., M.D., F.R.S. (Edinburgh), [Continued.
Miss FLORENCE ANDREW and Miss EVELYN FOX.

21,202. Mr. Micklem: And towards whom you would not exercise any compulsion?—No, we do not suggest any powers of detention.

21,203. Sir Ernest Hiley: Notwithstanding that they are morally depraved?—Well, some of them are morally depraved. I do not know. Moral depravity is rather a difficult term to define.

21,204. Chairman: But I can see a great difficulty in Sir Ernest's point. Suppose you take in what we call commonly a bad boy or a bad girl who was unamenable to discipline, and was exercising a very bad influence upon others; you could not very well send that child away, because the whole reason why the child is there is that it has those manifestations. How are you going to handle a case of that sort without any compulsory power. Supposing the child is 14 or 15 years of age: you could not very well resort to corporal punishment with a girl of that age. What would you do?—One can say this, that in such a case as you suggest if one really considered that the amount of mental disorder was such as to make the child quite asocial or anti-social, to disturb his conduct to that extent, one would have to consider then whether that person could not be dealt with under the existing Lunacy Act. It seems to me quite possible that in some of those cases you would have to deal with them under the Lunacy Act.

21,205. What powers would you seek to have conferred to you in the way of disciplinary measures?—I take it that the powers would be those that are given to a guardian. I am not quite certain what are the legal powers of a guardian.

21,206. You would be dealing with children of a larger growth; they would not be of a school age, they would be of a rather older age, 15 to 20 is about the range, is it not?—There is a somewhat analogous instance I think in the case of approved homes under the Mental Deficiency Act. There are approved homes, and in those homes there are certain feeble-minded persons without any detention order, and yet I am told that, although they could go away if they wished to-morrow, it is exceedingly rare for them to leave the home. I think myself that, after all, these people are human beings; they are capable of appreciating sympathy and understanding, and I think the majority of them, if the superintendent were suitably chosen, and if the environment were satisfactory, would stay. We quite admit that some of them would not.

21,207. Mr. Micklem: Are they not just the class who do not understand the kindly and sympathetic treatment, because in many of these instances that you give, every possible thing seems to have been done for them, and they have thrown it over on every occasion?—I do not think that is our experience. (Miss Fox): Our experience is that we tried all sorts of unsuitable methods, because with very few exceptions we could not find the suitable ones. They went to unsuitable places, and every effort was made to try and get something for them, but we could not get the right environment.

21,208. Chairman: It may be that the reason was that they were temporarily unfit for any form of settled occupation, because certainly one or two of them seem to have tried their hands at almost everything with unsatisfactory results?—Yes.

21,209. Mr. Jowitt: Do not you think they are just the class of rather vicious people who might benefit enormously from the value of homely discipline?—But they would have discipline in these homes.

21,210. I should have thought if they went into these homes and were able to go out whenever they wanted to, that is just the one thing you could not possibly secure for them?—As a fact, a great many of these types of cases do go to these voluntary homes, and, although, of course, they can all leave at any moment, I think our experience is that they do not leave at any moment.

21,211. Is the discipline severe and strict?—In some places, but it is not the severity of the discipline, it is the quality of the discipline. It is not necessarily a severe discipline that is the right training for them; it may be in some cases; I think it is in some cases; some cases I think are just dreadfully spoiled, and they do require discipline; but in many other cases I think they are wrestling with their own temperaments, and therefore the discipline which is needed is one which will help them to discipline themselves.

21,212. Chairman: Please do not imagine for a moment that we underestimate the difficulty of this type of case, but the immediate problem is whether the proper way to deal with it is the provision of a new type of rate-aided homes; that is really putting it in its simplest form; a new type of mental institution which would not be strictly a mental institution, but would have as its objective the correcting of certain faults of conduct and mind resulting possibly from early neglect and so on, which was unfitting these people for the ordinary duties of citizenship. That would be your aim: to correct these things by reasonably disciplined life and by good moral influences and regular employment. We are really concerned with the question of how that is to be achieved. It does strike one as the kind of thing which is, if I may put it without offence, so indefinite in its scope that the less rigid bounds of charity might meet the case more readily than some official scheme with all that an official scheme means. Of course, officialism always means a certain sacrifice of independence, and you cannot do what you like when you are dealing with public money, whereas in the administration of charity a much wider discretion is given. I suppose your fundamental answer is, "Well, we have not the money"?—Might I ask Miss Andrew, who has had experience of raising money for these purposes, to deal with that matter?

21,213. Yes, we should like to hear Miss Andrew's views. You are connected with the South West Lancashire Association, Miss Andrew?—(Miss Andrew): Yes, I have had experience in South West Lancashire, and I have consulted 12 charitable institutions where they have been dealing with all these types of girls for a number of years. The time has now come when they do recognise them as a type of case for which they can no longer provide. They are themselves considering setting aside one house as an experiment where they would gather together these cases. We have tried associating them in one home; four definite cases of this kind out of a total of 16, and we have found that they really cannot be associated, not to benefit them. The other difficulty arises from the length of time for which it is necessary to keep them. The longest time you expect to keep a girl of that type in a home is two years, and that is not long enough.

21,214. Are those institutions you are speaking of all voluntary institutions?—Yes, all voluntary institutions.

21,215. Are they managing to get along in spite of the difficulty of getting money?—Do you mean as regard these cases?

21,216. As regards all their cases?—The difficulty of raising money is acute; we are finding it more difficult every year; but the great difficulty is that the managers of these homes are recognising them as a class and refusing to take them.

21,217. Is that because they are so unmanageable?—Yes; because they think they cannot get the best results by mixing them.

21,218. Do these cases in your experience yield to treatment; do you find you get moral recoveries?—A proportion do yield to treatment.

21,219. Is it hopeful work?—I think it is, yes.

21,220. Sir Ernest Hiley: About how many cases do you get a year in your Association, Miss Andrew?—I should think in any year in the last three years we have had at least 40 to 50.

10 November, 1925.] ALFRED FRANK TREDGOLD, Esq., M.D., F.R.S. (Edinburgh),
Miss FLORENCE ANDREW and Miss EVELYN FOX.

[Continued.]

21,221. And that takes in Liverpool and all that populous part there?—Yes; we might have had a larger number, but we would not accept them as cases that we felt we could help.

21,222. Chairman: Do you think there are many more that have not come under your notice?—I know there are, because we are consulted as to which cases we will take.

21,223. Mr. Micklem: Have you 12 homes in that district?—No. Those are rescue and preventive homes, Salvation Army homes and homes of that type.

21,224. Chairman: You have been studying their methods, and you tell us that these people are experiencing difficulty in dealing with this particular class of case you have in mind?—Yes, they are referring them to our Association.

21,225. And your Association has not got any homes, I understand?—No; except that we have raised the money to support these beds in an existing home.

21,226. Then all you can do at the moment is to assist with advice?—Yes, and place them where we can.

21,227. Try to find employment for them in suitable circumstances and give them good advice and encouragement, and I suppose exercise a certain amount of surveillance over their future so far as they will permit it?—Yes; it always means a change of environment of some kind.

21,228. Miss Madeleine Symons: How do you arrange about the advice? Do you have in every centre doctors attached to your Association who examine cases referred to you?—We usually ask the advice of a doctor who is likely to know them. In the experiment I spoke of, there we had the advice of the medical superintendent of the mental hospital.

21,229. I mean if people come to you, or if parents of these young people come to you, have you certain doctors who do this work for you?—Yes, we have certain doctors to whom we can refer cases of this kind; sometimes voluntarily, and sometimes we pay fees.

21,230. Sir Humphry Rolleston: Have you any kind of estimate (of course it would be purely provisional) of what the number would be that would have to be provided for?—(Dr. Tredgold): I am afraid we could not give that.

21,231. Sir Ernest Hiley: What is the nearest you have got to the estimate?—The nearest we have got was the number of cases coming before the Association, and that amounts in the course of the past 12 years to something between 3,000 and 4,000. But, of course, one has got to remember in regard to this, that until the past few years, the last two years I think, the Association has been rather particularly identified with mental defectives; it was called the Central Association for Mental Defectives; so that in those early days these cases would not come before us at all. It is only within the last two years that its scope has been enlarged.

21,232. Chairman: I think, Dr. Tredgold, we understand the point you wish to bring before us to-day, and the difficulty which you have experienced in dealing with this particular type of case. I need scarcely say that we will give every consideration to the memorandum you have put before us; but unless you have any further point that you wish to develop I was not going to pursue it with you?—I do not think I have anything further to add.

21,233. Now do you desire to refer to the other topic of your memorandum, which deals with the psychological examination of persons charged with offences?—We would like to draw attention to that, Sir. We do feel that if anything is to be done, or before anything can be done, with regard to the treatment of these cases, they have got to be recognised and diagnosed, and we do feel that at present the facilities for the diagnosis of mental abnormality in cases that come before the Courts are totally inadequate. We have no doubt that a very considerable number of the cases of delinquency are due to mental abnormality. As I say, we think that some means should be established whereby those facts could be ascertained.

21,234. That, of course, is a topic of much general interest which is being largely discussed at present: the relation of the young criminal to mental disorder?—Yes; but the point that we rather wanted to insist upon, as I say, is that at present there is practically a complete absence of any means of finding out whether they are mentally abnormal or not. We think there ought to be some better means of examining these cases which come before the Courts.

21,235. Better machinery made available to the presiding magistrate?—Yes.

21,236. Sir Humphry Rolleston: I should be rather interested if Dr. Tredgold would give us any information as to how an epidemic of encephalitis is likely to affect this problem, and whether the problem may not be made much more urgent in the future than during the last seven or eight years?—With regard to that I have no hesitation in saying that it is being made much more urgent now.

21,237. Chairman: You allude to that in paragraph 13 of your memorandum?—Yes. We have an increasing number of cases coming before us, and the problem is really at the present time a very acute one; and, of course, if the epidemic is going to continue it is going to become much more serious; at the present moment it is a very great problem indeed. I see children who before having had an attack of encephalitis were perfectly well behaved and moral children in every way. After an attack of encephalitis they become absolute little fiends, they are uncontrollable, they lose all affection for their parents, they become liars, they become thieves, and there is no doing anything with them. I see quite a large number of children of that type at my clinic, and they are constantly coming before us.

21,238. Chairman: It is a very grave social menace?—Very grave.

Sir Humphry Rolleston: There is a point which has occurred to many members of the Commission, and that is whether this need is not really one that might be met by adding to and modifying the Bill with regard to mental disorder.

21,239. Chairman: The same idea was passing through my mind, too, Sir Humphry: whether the existing definitions may not be too rigid. It is very undesirable to start, if you can avoid it, new and different types of institutions; because the multiplication of institutions does not always mean necessarily the multiplication of benefit?—No.

21,240. If it were possible to fit your type of case, which we recognise, into one or other of the existing schemes, or, indeed, into any of those schemes modified as we may recommend (because, of course, we have in view a number of modifications of the existing system)—if we could fit in your homes suitably into the cadre of the administrative system without starting a new system of homes and a new bureaucracy, it would be the better plan; but it is not very easy to devise it?—No, we quite appreciate your point. All we are desirous about is getting treatment of some kind.

21,241. You are here to urge upon us the importance of catering for this class of case?—Yes. (Miss Fox): Might I say one word about that point? We did look through the old Mental Treatment Bill, and it seemed to us that with very small adaptations the Bill could be made to cover what we have in mind. The question of time and of hospitals with a training basis seemed to us as if it would meet the need.

21,242. I see your point, Miss Fox. That Bill, of course, did contemplate a certain number of approved institutions?—It did.

10 November, 1925.] ALFRED FRANK TREDGOLD, Esq., M.D., F.R.S. (Edinburgh),
Miss FLORENCE ANDREW and Miss EVELYN FOX.

[Continued.]

21,243. And you think that possibly along the lines of that Bill might be found the solution?—Very minor alterations as it came out of the House of Lords would make it possible to take in this type of case. Of course, it gives what we suggest should be given—a power and not a duty to authorities to deal with them, two very different things, and it does away with that bureaucratic element which you referred to, Sir, and means generally the use of what is available rather than the creation of new things.

21,244. That is a very useful suggestion, Miss Fox, that we will take note of. There is one other thing I wanted to ask you. There is another society called the National Council for Mental Hygiene whose prospectus I have looked through. It seems to cover to some extent very much the same type of work as yours, a certain number of distinguished persons are members of both associations. What is the frontier between your spheres? Do you co-operate?—Yes, we are strongly represented on both associations. The Mental Hygiene Society is going to cover absolutely the whole work, and is rather more a propagandist body than we are. One of our main things is to do practical work in different parts of the country; but there is no real division between the two.

21,245. We have had evidence from them already, and quite a number of their recommendations chime with your own ideas on this point.—Yes, I am on their committee.

21,246. Mr. Micklem: Dr. Tredgold, have you considered whether these are cases which should come under the jurisdiction of the Board of Control?—(Dr. Tredgold): The cases that I am alluding to, do you mean?

21,247. Yes.—I should say they do not, inasmuch as they do not come within either the Mental Deficiency Act or the Lunacy Act.

21,248. That is just what I was thinking. Supposing the Mental Deficiency Act were amended in some way to bring in this class of case, or the Mental Treatment Bill were passed, then they would naturally come under the Board of Control?—Then they would come under the Board of Control, certainly.

21,249. That you would contemplate?—Yes, that we should contemplate. I think we allude to that in one of the paragraphs.—(Miss Fox): Yes, we say they ought to be registered by the Ministry of Health.—(Dr. Tredgold): But that was rather in view of the Board of Control being a department of the Ministry of Health.

21,250. There is just one other point I would like to mention. Mr. Jowitt will know more than I do about the High Court, and so on; but you must remember that in cases that come before the magistrates in the country, they are very careful to enquire as far as they can into the antecedents of these children, before passing any sentences and dealing with them on probation. It is the commonest thing now to proceed on those lines?—It is a very much more common thing than it was, but I think I am correct in saying that even now there are many cases that are not dealt with on that line at all, where for the lack of evidence a defective is not treated as a defective but is sentenced to prison. I think we have quite a large number of cases that we could put before you showing that.

21,251. Chairman: The recent Act may help that, may it not, Dr. Tredgold, in providing for much more extended probation work?—That is so; I think it probably would.

21,252. Mr. Micklem: In many cases there is a missionary attached to the Court, and before any convictions are decided upon enquiries are made?—Yes, there is a much greater tendency for that to be done now, but I am afraid it is not done so often as it should be.

21,253. Miss Madeleine Symons: I take it that in connection with the medical examination of children you are advocating something rather on the lines of the Belgian system?—Yes. My own idea was that any child, who is before the Court in charge of the Court missionary for an offence, should be referred to the medical man for examination, and that sentence should not be passed until the Court is in possession of the evidence as to the state of the child's mind, and as to whether he is suffering from any mental defect or mental disorder; that is what we have in mind, I think.

21,254. Mr. Jowitt: These are just the sort of children in many cases whom one has seen sent to Borstal, are they not?—Yes.

21,255. And I think it is common knowledge now that Borstal has proved a very successful experiment?—Of course they do not take mental defectives at Borstal.

21,256. These are not mental defectives, are they?—No, that is so undoubtedly, and I think there is no doubt that Borstal does meet the needs of this particular type, the delinquent type, because before they can get to Borstal they have got to commit an offence.

21,257. I should like to see if you have really got any adequate justification for saying that you can deal with these cases without the discipline which Borstal involves. You have come across these cases being treated in homes?—Yes.

21,258. Can you say from your own experience that they do not want to leave the homes?—Yes, I can say that from my experience of very high grade feeble-minded cases. I can say that from my experience of some of these cases that I have met with in rescue homes and preventive homes. They have been quite content to stay there, but the homes have not been suitable for their proper treatment.

21,259. In other words, so long as you have the right sort of personality in charge of the home, even although there is no strict discipline, the personality may effect the cure, and at the same time may make the person willing to stay?—I think that is so. Of course we do realise that there will be a certain proportion who will not be amenable, and there is no way of getting control over those except by a detention order. We quite realise that.

Chairman: Then it only remains to thank you for your kindness in coming here this afternoon, and for your valuable evidence.

The Witnesses withdrew.

Adjourned.

5, OLD PALACE YARD,
WESTMINSTER, S.W.1.

FORTY-FIRST DAY.

Thursday, 10th December, 1925.

MEMBERS PRESENT :

THE RIGHT HON. H. P. MACMILLAN, K.C. (Chairman).

THE EARL RUSSELL,

SIR HUMPHRY ROLLESTON, BART., K.C.B., M.D.

SIR ERNEST HILEY, K.B.E.

SIR DAVID DRUMMOND, C.B.E., M.D.

MR. N. MICKLEM, K.C.

MR. H. SNELL, M.P.

MRS. C. J. MATHEW.

MISS MADELEINE SYMONS.

MR. P. BARTER (Secretary).

MR. W. FAIRLEY (Assistant Secretary).

Further Evidence (on behalf of the Board of Control) of Sir FREDERICK J. WILLIS, K.B.E., C.B.,
Mr. S. J. FRASER MACLEOD, K.C., and Dr. C. H. BOND, C.B.E., D.Sc., M.D., F.R.C.P.

21,260. Chairman: Perhaps I should inform the public that the purpose of our meeting this afternoon is to take the evidence of Sir Frederick Willis, Chairman of the Board of Control, and his colleagues, upon certain questions of a general character with regard to which we desire to ascertain their views, in supplement of the evidence which we had from the Board of Control at the outset of our proceedings. The sitting this afternoon will be quite brief, and will be confined to those particular topics.

Sir Frederick, we have had already the advantage of evidence from the Board of Control; but now, as we are approaching the conclusion of our investigation, we have thought it right to ask you to be good enough to attend again and to express to us your views on certain general questions that have emerged in the course of our enquiry. In particular we wish to have the views of the Board on the incipient case and the voluntary case; and I think the most convenient course will be for you yourself to state to us the considered opinion of the Board on these matters?—(Sir Frederick Willis): Yes. I might say that we have very fully discussed this matter at the Board of Control, and all my colleagues are in agreement with the views which I will put before you on this point.

21,261. You see we feel that on this matter we may possibly find it necessary to make recommendations of a novel character. This is to some extent a development of the existing law; and we are anxious to see that any recommendations which we make may be practicable.—Quite. Our views are based, of course, on an immense amount of experience in dealing with cases of mental disorder, and, as I say, we are all in agreement. Shall I read this summary of our views?

21,262. I think that would be the most convenient course, if you please?—"For the purpose of settling the procedure to be adopted for the treatment of persons suffering from mental illness, it is desirable that patients should be divided into the following three classes (1) Voluntary. (2) Non-Volitional but passive. (3) Resistant." We have taken those terms from the Questionnaire which you addressed to us. We rather think we should prefer to call them "Willing," "Non-Volitional," "Unwilling," but it is the same thing. "As regards the voluntary case, the willing case, we suggest the patient might be received for treatment on his own written application, or, if a minor under the age of 18, on the written application of his parent or guardian, accompanied by one medical recommendation, and we suggest that the case might be received in any mental hospital, registered hospital, licensed house, general hospital, nursing home, or private care, subject to the following conditions."

21,263. Will you pause there just a moment? On the classification of the three types of cases, the willing case is comparatively easy to appreciate, because that is the case where the patient realises the situation, is desirous of treatment, and is willing to submit to the conditions of treatment?—Quite.

21,264. On the other hand, the non-volitional case, which is passive and is not able to participate at all in treatment, is in rather a peculiar position, because the exercise of any restraint on such a case is, strictly speaking, illegal; it is not done with the co-operation of the patient. It is treating a person who has no volition, without authority, so to speak?—Of course we are suggesting that authority should be given in an Act of Parliament.

21,265. Yes. The resistant case, or the unwilling case, is comparatively easy. It is a symptom of the ailment in that case that the behaviour or conduct is so deranged that certain restraint is necessary in proper cases?—Yes.

21,266. But the non-volitional, or intermediate, case is rather a peculiar one, because there is neither resistance nor non-resistance; the patient is more or less in a negative condition. It would not be proper to treat such cases without some authority?—No.

21,267. In the voluntary case you have the authority of the patients themselves; in the non-volitional case there is no authority at all, unless you borrow an authority from a relative, as has been suggested?—Yes, or from a public official.

21,268. Or from a public official. Then one other observation occurs to me on this. You say that the voluntary cases, the first class, might be received not only into institutions of all kinds, but into nursing homes, or private care. In regard to the nursing home I am sensible of a practical difficulty. You cannot classify patients very well into mental and non-mental; in point of fact there is no such scientific line of demarcation. How are you going to say of a patient who goes to an ordinary medical nursing home, but who is to some extent mentally disturbed, that this is a mental case and that another is not a mental case. Are you contemplating nursing homes of a particular type,—neurasthenic nursing homes?—I suppose you would get the designation from the medical attendant. He would say "I think So-and-So ought to go into a nursing home, and I suggest such and such nursing home is a suitable place."

10 December, 1925.]

Sir FREDERICK J. WILLIS, K.B.E., C.B.

[Continued.]

21,269. That would be one of the ordinary private homes?—Yes, or even a new type of nursing home eventually.

21,270. But at the present moment, if the case is not a certifiable case there is nothing to prevent any citizen going into a nursing home, if he or she wishes?—The difficulty is this. Under the present Lunacy Act you may not take a person of unsound mind for treatment. Some of these voluntary cases are clearly cases of unsound mind, although they have got volition; and probably it would be illegal, as the law at present stands, to take them into a nursing home although they said they wanted to go in.

21,271. Do you think there is such a clear line of demarcation between the cases that you could say to the person who wanted to go into a nursing home "You are a mental case," and to another one "You are a physical case"?—I quite think if the law were altered as we are suggesting it should be altered, a certain number of these cases would be treated, and these conditions we have laid down would not be observed because a doctor would say "I do not consider this is a mental case at all." Of course that goes on to-day. There is a very great deal of treatment carried on to-day which is not admitted by the law.

21,272. You suggest a certain code prescribing restrictions in regard to such cases. If that is to be imposed in a nursing home, which is an institution run for profit by a doctor or nurse or somebody else, I have a little difficulty in seeing how you are to say of the various patients in the nursing home "This is a person receiving ordinary treatment for physical ailment," and "This is a mental case to which certain special requirements attach." Can you get the line of demarcation between the patients?—Is your difficulty this, that the medical man in charge might say "I am not going to do any of these things that you suggest for the voluntary mental case, because I do not put this case in that category"?—

21,273. Yes. The voluntary case is a case where the patient generally signs some document saying he is willing to receive treatment. I could imagine a person who was conducting a nursing home in perfectly good faith saying "I do not think this is a person from whom I should exact that requirement." Another medical man might say "Well, you know, I think the mental disturbance which is a concomitant of the disease in this case is so marked that you ought to have that precaution taken." How is one to get a classification, particularly in the cases we are figuring here which are not marked cases of mental disturbance?—I do not think by any Act of Parliament you can secure uniform action in those cases by all doctors. One doctor may say "The Act provides that voluntary cases may be treated in this nursing home; I shall notify that case." Another doctor would say "Well, notwithstanding that Act of Parliament, I do not consider this case as belonging to that category, and I am not going to take that action." That is inevitable.

21,274. It would provide a safeguard, however, to what is regarded at present as rather a menace. In a case where the doctor was apprehensive of mental symptoms developing he would at once report, and so the difficulty would be obviated?—Quite. That is all we ask, that that case shall be notified to the Board of Control, with a copy of the medical recommendation on which the case was received.

21,275. When you say that voluntary cases would be receivable in a nursing home you are contemplating the ordinary nursing home which we all know; but, because of the symptoms which the case is exhibiting, certain additional precautions should be available?—Yes.

21,276. Sir David Drummond: I should like to know exactly what class of case Sir Frederick is referring to now?—I am inclined to think myself it is incapable of very precise definition. At present the Act of Parliament allows voluntary boarders to be received into registered hospitals and licensed houses.

21,277. Chairman: That is fairly easy; once they are in that place they are under a code, so to speak?—Yes, but one doctor would say: "I think this case ought to go as a voluntary boarder"; another doctor would say: "I do not regard this as a mental case at all; I am not going to take any steps." That sort of thing is inevitable, I think; but if you made the law, as we suggest, and you then found that really serious cases were being treated without any notification or visitation and so on, you could quite fairly, I think, then drop on the medical man concerned. Because you had provided a code which was quite a lax code, it did not hamper him to observe it, and he had failed to observe it; whereas at present my difficulty is that under the law the case cannot be treated at all unless it is certified.

21,278. Earl Russell: The object of the procedure is to enable the doctor to treat him without fear?—That is the object.

21,279. Sir David Drummond: But in practice that would break down, I take it; because it would be impossible to indicate in an individual case, that this was a case to be notified, and this was not to be notified?—Would it be impossible?

21,280. I take it so?—I should have thought the doctor would say: "This is a case suffering from mental disorder, but it is a case with volition, and the patient himself understands that he is suffering from a certain mental illness, and wants to go to such and such a place and be treated there."

21,281. Earl Russell: Does it not work in this way, that the doctor, if he has any apprehension, can put himself right by notifying the Board of Control, and by that means he is not committing a breach of the law?—That is so.

21,282. Chairman: Would there still be reluctance to notify the Board of Control, and so more or less publish the fact that there was some mental affection involved, just as there is now a certain reluctance in bringing about certification?—On that point, Sir, I have discussed these proposals not only with my colleagues but with three or four doctors who are practising in connection with these cases, and they have said they would be quite content with this code, that they would work it, and that it would be useful for them; and that they would feel greatly relieved. I can mention to you privately the names of the medical men I have consulted about this, if you like.

21,283. I can quite understand that, at present, a doctor who has a home and a patient in it who might be regarded by somebody as of an unsound mind, is in an uncomfortable position because he is liable to prosecution. He could protect himself in future in any such case by the precautions which I see you suggest here, which are precautions conceived not only in his interests but in those of a patient?—Quite.

Sir David Drummond: I am afraid that the fact that all these cases are to be notified would militate largely against the early treatment of some of them.

Chairman: That is what I was wanting to put to Sir Frederick. There might be a similar reluctance to notify as there is a reluctance to certify.

21,284. Earl Russell: Notification is not public in any sense really?—(Mr. Macleod): What would happen

10 December, 1925.]

Sir FREDERICK J. WILLIS, K.B.E., C.B.

[Continued.]

in practice is this: Somebody feels himself mentally unstable; he goes to his own medical man and says: "What course do you think I should adopt?" The medical man says: "I recommend you to be treated as a person whose mind is unsettled. I give you a recommendation to go as a voluntary boarder." On that we get notification to us.

21,285. Chairman: You would wish him to be able to go to an ordinary nursing home which would not be a nursing home specially for mental cases, so that it might be said among his friends, "He has just gone to a nursing home"?—The same as we say he can go into private care. (Sir Frederick Willis): Nobody would know about it at all.

21,286. Sir David Drummond: The answer to that is that these patients will insist that they are not mentally affected, but that they are sleepless, and this, that and the other. For that reason they come to the nursing home?—(Mr. Macleod): They need not go as voluntary boarders; it is only because they are mentally affected in some way that they go to these nursing homes as voluntary boarders. They need not go as voluntary boarders at all.

21,287. Chairman: But what about the case where they fail, as Sir David says, to recognise their own condition? Their condition may be, as all will accept, a condition of mental disturbance. The patient does not recognise that and says, "Oh no, it is my digestion which is wrong"?—He need not go as a voluntary boarder. (Sir Frederick Willis): Supposing you were a doctor dealing with that case you need not say to the patient, "You are mentally affected." You, as the doctor, would simply say: "I think you ought to go into such a nursing home; you want rest. If you write and request that Doctor So-and-So will take you into his nursing home, I will see you get a bed there"—and that is all the patient would know about it. That is all we ask. The case would go into that nursing home on that request, with a written recommendation from his own doctor that it was a desirable thing that he should go there for treatment. The patient knows nothing about that at all.

21,288. Earl Russell: And is treated as having voluntarily consented to a form of treatment of which he has no real apprehension?—Yes.

21,289. Chairman: I am not sure that I like that way of setting about it, Sir Frederick. I think it would be a great pity if people were not able to go to a nursing home when they want to go to a nursing home for rest and treatment, because the person who conducts the home is afraid of the consequences if the illness happens to have mental symptoms. I can quite see how in the case of registered hospitals, or licensed houses, a voluntary patient could go in there on his own application quite easily; but I have much more difficulty with regard to the private nursing home as to how you could devise a method which would not deter people from going there?—But you would not meet the needs of the situation if you limited the places to the registered hospitals and licensed houses. You must throw the nursing home open, or single care open to that case; otherwise you are really not meeting what is needed.

21,290. I fully recognise that point of view. I think it would be most undesirable if people could not get treatment in nursing homes; but my difficulty is this, that in the nursing homes there will then be cases some of which are mental and some of which are physical cases. With regard to the mental cases a different duty is imposed upon the owner of the establishment from that imposed upon him with regard to the physical cases. You may go in there, and the doctor in charge visits you, and you may have your operation, and then you come out; but how is one to say which of the cases are those with regard to which special precautions are to be taken?—I think the medical man concerned with the thing must decide that for himself.

21,291. Suppose he recognises that this is a case where these precautions are appropriate; he ought to see the patient and say, "Now in your case I am afraid I must ask you to give me your written consent to stay here because the law requires that"?—We do not suggest we should have his written consent to stay there; we suggest he shall have the right to leave that place at any time on giving 72 hours' notice.

Earl Russell: That is all founded on a written consent to enter the home.

21,292. Chairman: All the patients in a nursing home can get up out of bed and walk out of the door at any moment?—Quite, but that is of the very essence of our recommendation, that there is no detention here. If a case goes in voluntarily and still maintains his volition, he shall at any time have the right to leave on 72 hours' notice.

21,293. But you are going to exact from certain of the patients who enter the nursing home a requirement which you are not going to exact from other patients. If I go into a nursing home to-morrow I am received there without any requirement at all. On the other hand, you are figuring a class of case where a patient desirous of going into a nursing home, and willingly, is required to sign a consent beforehand?—Yes.

21,294. What I want to know is this: How are you going to classify these people? How are you going to say to one person who knocks at the door of a nursing home "I will take you in if you will agree in writing to stay here," and to the other applicant "Come along in; we do not require any consent in your case"?—I should have thought the medical man in charge of the case would know which was a case of mental illness and which was not. He would know whether the patient was coming in to have his appendix removed, or whether he was suffering from insomnia, hearing noises, and so on.

21,295. Sir David Drummond: Is it not your point that all cases of neurasthenia are to be notified?—I do not know what Dr. Bond would say about that. (Dr. Bond): I would rather not answer that question quite like that, Sir David. I would rather say that where the doctor regards the case as possessing mental symptoms, he should use these provisions mainly with the object of protecting himself, as was said just now, lest the case should turn out differently, when the rigours of the existing Lunacy Act would be applicable. It is the fear of the rigours of the existing Lunacy Act which prevents early treatment. If those could be wiped away by this very simple procedure, we believe that many more cases would receive early treatment than do to-day. But how we can lay down exactly which cases it is going to apply to I think would pass the wit of man. It is a question of diagnosis and medical opinion, and I should be very sorry to see any attempt to schedule the exact cases on their symptoms or to attempt to demarcate.

21,296. If you cannot, how is the practitioner to do it?—I take it that where he is so sure that there is no necessity to take advantage of these new provisions, he will not attempt to do so. But where he now hesitates, or rather where the holder, the receiver, the householder, now hesitates, is because of the terrors of the Lunacy Act.

21,297. Earl Russell: Let me put this to you—it is a question of degree after all. In the early stages it is very difficult to say which case you think will require notification, and which will not, but should I not be right in saying that it is quite a long step from that doubtful stage to a stage where you think it necessary to institute proceedings under Section 315?—Surely.

21,298. Sir David Drummond: Not in every case, as Dr. Bond will know; there is no long interval?—You mean sometimes there is a sudden breakdown?

21,299. Yes, sometimes a case comes in without practically any indications of the kind Lord Russell is referring to?—I think the point there, if I may say so, is that at present we (unfortunately) are the prosecutors in those cases; and I do not think that any case of the kind that Lord Russell or yourself has just mentioned has ever reached that stage of prosecution. We have never attempted to visit the provisions of the Lunacy Act upon a sudden evolution of mental symptoms like that.

10 December, 1925.]

Sir FREDERICK J. WILLIS, K.B.E., C.B.

[Continued.]

21,300. But the provisions are there?—The provisions are there; but the trouble is that to put a case as the law now stands on a proper footing, the only course when those symptoms come on is full certification, and that is the thing that people resent so much; whereas under the simpler procedure these terrors will be gone.

Chairman: Let me put it in this way: I think perhaps the difficulty is met. The voluntary patient is a patient who realises the necessity for treatment; therefore he must realise that to some extent he is suffering from mental derangement. There are many people who are technically quite sane, and who recognise they are temporarily suffering from some instability or upset. The essence of the voluntary case is that such a person recognises that he requires mental treatment and willingly agrees to undergo that treatment. Therefore to such a person there would be no difficulty in the doctor putting this requirement: "If you wish to receive treatment in a nursing home then you must of course, because the law says it, sign a document which states your willingness." That is all it comes to.

Earl Russell: "For my protection."

Chairman: "For my protection"—and that having been done, the difficulty seems to me to disappear.

Sir Ernest Hiley: Does the patient understand that he is going to submit to a three days' detention?

21,301. Chairman: I take it the form will make these things abundantly clear; it certainly ought to. The case assumes that the patient has sufficient intelligence to appreciate these things and says "I am quite willing to submit myself to these conditions." But that is not a case of taking patients into a home and saying nothing about the conditions or anything else, and not letting them know that there has been some procedure about them?—(Sir Frederick Willis:) I was only thinking that probably in some cases it is undesirable to tell them anything.

Earl Russell: What would be said to you, Sir Frederick, in civil matters if you asked a man to exercise his volition on a subject which you did not explain to him?

21,302. Chairman: I do not think that is practicable. It is of the essence of the voluntary system that the patient voluntarily submits to something he is told?—We suggest that he should make a written application to go there.

21,303. That is looking at it from the point of view of the patient himself, who is willing to submit to certain terms which are made clear to him. If, on the other hand, a patient does not recognise his condition and presents himself at a nursing home, in that case it would be for the doctor to say "I am afraid I cannot take your case unless you agree to treatment in my establishment; because your case is the type of case I am not now allowed to receive except in the status of a voluntary patient, and if you are coming into my place you must read this over and see whether you can agree to it?"—Yes.

Sir Humphry Rolleston: Would the voluntary patient know that he was going to be notified?

21,304. Chairman: I think he ought to know that?—(Sir Frederick Willis:) Why should he know that?

21,305. Earl Russell: I wonder if he need know that. It does not affect him or his treatment; it is really a provision for his protection?—I should have thought it was unduly alarming him to say "If you go in there your name will be notified to the Board of Control."

Sir Humphry Rolleston: I think if I went into a nursing home and found I was notified without having been warned, I should have felt my liberty had been interfered with.

21,306. Chairman: Are you not entitled to know what are the consequences of your acts? If you are asked to do something, are you not entitled to know what that means? If a patient does not know what is the consequence of becoming a voluntary patient, and that in particular one of the consequences is that he shall have his name recorded in the archives of the Board of Control, may he not say afterwards "If I had known that, I am not at all sure that I should have signed that document?"—We want to facilitate his treatment in the easiest way one justifiably can.

Sir Ernest Hiley: If he happens to get scarlet fever and calls in his doctor, the doctor is under an obligation to notify, but he never says anything about it to a patient.

Chairman: That is quite true.

Sir David Drummond: That is rather a different matter.

21,307. Earl Russell: There is this difference: that in a scarlet fever case things unpleasant to the patient do not happen in consequence of the notification, whereas they might in the other case?—Nothing happens in this case.

Chairman: The question as to whether there should be notification or not we can consider, but we might proceed now to obtain from you in detail what is the code which you think should be made applicable to a voluntary patient for the protection on the one hand of himself, and, on the other hand, of the owner of the nursing home or establishment?—We suggest the voluntary patient shall make a written application to be received, or, if a minor under the age of 18, on the written application of his parent or guardian. And these are the conditions we suggest: "That notification of the admission of the case together with a copy of the medical recommendation is sent to the Board of Control; and that a medical report on the case should be sent to the Board within seven days of the admission, and thereafter at intervals of six months."

21,308. Earl Russell: Do you suggest there must be a medical recommendation before the patient goes in, even when he or she is of full age?—Yes, we do suggest that.

21,309. That would not meet the case of a poor patient going to a county asylum and saying: "I know I am going to be bad and would like to be taken in here." Have such patients to be sent away to find a panel doctor, when there is a superintendent there quite competent to decide? I do not want to prevent a person getting treatment?—None of us does. I should think in that sort of case it would be quite easy to get a medical recommendation.

Mr. Snell: What would you do? A person in that state of mind and anxiety asks for admission and shelter and protection?

21,310. Earl Russell: Yes; they throw themselves on your mercy?—I should be quite willing myself to say in that case that the medical superintendent or any doctor on his staff could, for the purpose of this Act, make the recommendation.

21,311. If you say that, that would meet the point?—I should say that in the case of a public institution, certainly.

21,312. Chairman: Of course that would happen in the case of a public institution. People do not present themselves at the doors of nursing homes in that way. Even in the case of public institutions that comparatively rarely happens, because in an ordinary case a person would have had attention from a doctor?—Yes, but there would be no objection to saying that the recommendation could be made by one of the doctors at the public institution. It is different in the case of a private profit-making place.

21,313. Then there has to be the medical report within seven days. What class of report are you suggesting? Is that to be a report on the mental state of the patient?—I should think so. "Each report should contain a statement that the patient is in need of further treatment and is willing to remain." The doctor making that statement would be responsible for the accuracy of it.

21,314. Mr. Micklem: That means each six monthly report; not the first?—Yes. I should think that in the case of every one, even at the end of the seven days, a doctor ought to make that statement.

21,315. They have not had any treatment you see: you say "further" treatment?—He has had seven days' treatment.

21,316. If it were made at the end of seven days, yes, but it may be made at the beginning?—Yes.

10 December, 1925.]

Sir FREDERICK J. WILLIS, K.B.E., C.B.

[Continued.]

21,317. Chairman: It is within seven days?—Yes. Of course our condition was mainly designed for the six monthly reports obviously.

21,318. Miss Madeleine Symons: Do you mean, Sir Frederick, that the statement that the patient is willing to remain should be made every six months by the patient, or by the doctor?—By the doctor—that he should take the responsibility of saying so. Then our next condition is: “That the Board of Control should have the right to inspect the institution or place where the patient is receiving treatment.”

21,319. Chairman: Should they have a duty?—I think they should have a duty.

21,320. A duty to inspect also?—Yes.

21,321. Then it would come to this, that no person could receive a case for voluntary treatment in a nursing home, unless that place had been inspected and really, in effect, licensed by the Board of Control?—No.

Earl Russell: Not previously.

21,322. Chairman: Suppose the Board do go and visit and are dissatisfied with the conditions, what sanctions are to attach to that?—We have the right to order the discharge of any patient if, when we visit it, we consider the case unsuitable to remain on that footing.

21,323. You are told there is a person there, a voluntary patient; you are told about the condition of that patient in the medical report that you receive; you have a right, perhaps a duty, it might be, to go and inspect that place, and if you are dissatisfied with the place, then you are to be empowered to order the removal of the patient from that place?—Yes.

21,324. Sir David Drummond: Do you propose to see the patient?—No. We do not say that, you know. The main object of taking a power to inspect is to satisfy ourselves that the place is being run in a bonâ fide manner. That is the main object, as I look at it: to see that there is nothing wrong going on; but we should have power to see the patient.

21,325. Chairman: I think that is essential?—Of course we are very anxious not to do anything for this class of patient that is going to interfere with the treatment of the patient in any way.

Earl Russell: I quite agree, but, on the other hand, it surely would be proper that you should satisfy yourself of his willingness in some way; you could not do that without seeing him very well?—Quite.

21,326. Chairman: You should at least have the power to do it?—Yes.

21,327. I agree with Lord Russell. I think the last thing you want to do is to bother people in nursing homes?—Certainly. As we look at it, we want the minimum number of safeguards necessary. We feel that some safeguards are necessary for dealing with this type of illness, and we want the minimum that will afford real security.

21,328. Now you touch in your next paragraph a really rather difficult case. I see you suggest as a further condition: “That if at any time the patient ceases to possess real volition and this condition continues, he should within a month be dealt with under the provisions relating to the passive or resistant cases or be discharged.” It is very difficult to say at what moment a voluntary patient may cease to be a voluntary patient?—I quite realise that it is sometimes very difficult.

21,329. In a case which is going from bad to worse, the degree of volition may vary from day to day. How are you to say when the continuing will has really ceased and the patient has passed from being a willing resident of the institution to a person who has ceased to have any volition?—There is obviously no sharp line, but some of the physicians whom I saw said to me, “We will see a patient to-day, and the patient says he is going to leave the place; then we talk to the patient and say, ‘If you will leave it until to-morrow—I shall be coming to-morrow, and we will see about it.’ We come the next day and the patient says, ‘I am quite content; I am going to remain on. I see it is the best thing for me.’” We do not want to compel people to be removed merely because of a whim as it were.

21,330. You see the voluntary character may expire at any moment. The consent may cease to operate because the person is incapable of consent. The whole idea is continuing consent, and there comes a moment in the course of the disease where the person is really not capable of a consent at all?—(Mr. Macleod): That same question arises now to a certain extent under Section 20 of the Act of 1891, because it says there: “If the Commissioners after enquiry are of opinion that the mental state of any boarder received into a licensed house or hospital is such as to render him unfit to remain as a boarder, they may order the manager of the licensed house or hospital either to remove such boarder, or to take steps to obtain an order for his reception as a patient into the licensed house or hospital.”

21,331. Chairman: That is a very useful reference?—That is a question we have so frequently to decide now. We have to try and find out, visiting there, if in fact a patient has volition. I went to see a patient who I was told had volition. He was in bed and had two attendants waiting on him. I said “Now you came here for treatment.” He said “No, I do not want treatment.” I said “Why are you here?” He said “I have been persecuted by so-and-so.” He added “They are all in the next room now picking raisins,” or something of that sort. So I came to the conclusion that he had no volition whatever; but the doctor told me he had; he said “You will find in two or three hours’ time the man is as rational as you are and wants to remain.” I said “I will let it stand over.” The report came in the next day to say that in the meantime the condition had cleared up; the patient realised his position perfectly and he desired to remain.

21,332. Earl Russell: And did you go and see him again?—Dr. Bond did.

21,333. Mr. Snell: Was it a case of recurrent trouble?—(Dr. Bond): Yes, evanescent symptoms.

21,334. Chairman: This was not a certified case?—(Mr. Macleod): No—a voluntary boarder. The point I had to decide was whether he was fit to remain as a voluntary boarder.

21,335. That is a curious case; it is not a case of a gradual degeneration of the will power, but it is a case of ups and downs?—Yes, evanescence.

21,336. Sometimes capable, and sometimes incapable of consent?—Yes, but that, I think, frequently arises in the course of our visits to licensed houses and hospitals.

Earl Russell: An interesting example.

Chairman: And what are you to do with a case of that sort?

21,337. Earl Russell: That is one of your reasons for the 72 hours?—Quite. (Dr. Bond): And one of the reasons for experienced inspection. One might add, with a knowledge of this case and many others like him, that he himself would be the first to say that one of the worst outrages one could have practised upon him was to order his certification.

21,338. Chairman: Then the last of the conditions you propose is: “That the patient has a right to leave the institution or place at any time on giving 72 hours’ notice in writing and in the case of a minor under the age of 18 the notice should only be given by his parent or guardian.” There has been some controversy as to whether 72 hours is a necessary period?—(Sir Frederick Willis): The reason for giving the 72 hours’ notice is to allow of time to communicate with the friends, if the case is serious and cannot be dealt with in some other way. We think anything less than that does not allow sufficient time—a Sunday might intervene of course. (Mr. Macleod): It is now only 24 hours, and that means in some cases you cannot communicate with the friends.

21,339. I do not think there is very much in the difference between 24 and 72 hours?—(Sir Frederick Willis): No. That is our only reason for suggesting 72 hours.

10 December, 1925.]

Sir FREDERICK J. WILLIS, K.B.E., C.B.

[Continued.]

21,340. To enable communication to be effected with the relatives?—Yes. Our experience is that 24 hours is frequently insufficient.

21,341. One can imagine that being so. Take the case of a person who had entered an institution as a voluntary patient, a typical case of a voluntary patient; the illness has unfortunately progressed; the patient is entitled to leave at once if there were no limitation of time; he goes up to the medical superintendent and says "I propose to walk out now." The medical superintendent says "You are entitled to if you like," and the patient may say "I am going straight out to throw myself into the canal." The medical superintendent would have no power to restrain him at all, except the general power of preventing a person committing a felony. In this case if there were a period of 24, 36, 48, or 72 hours the doctor would say probably "I think you had better think it over," and in the meantime he would get into communication with the relatives and say the case had unfortunately developed suicidal tendencies, and they had better get the case moved and dealt with elsewhere?—Yes.

21,342. A moratorium of some sort is necessary?—Yes.

21,343. Mr. Micklem: You would not want this moratorium to apply to a recovered patient?—No.

21,344. Chairman: If the medical superintendent were satisfied that a voluntary patient was quite well, you would not insist, as a matter of form, that the patient should stay out the 72 hours?—No, he would be discharged then at once. I do not think we have mentioned that point.

Mr. Micklem: It is not dealt with in those regulations.

21,345. Chairman: But suppose the voluntary patient instead of coming along and suggesting he was going to commit suicide, said "I want to go away; I really have benefited so much that I am quite well," and the medical superintendent says "I think you are completely restored now; I shall not insist on keeping you here for 72 hours; you may go now." Would you contemplate that case?—I should certainly allow a medical superintendent that power if he were satisfied about the case.

21,346. Then it is not necessary that they should live out the 72 hours, so to speak?—No. (Dr. Bond): Under the 24 hours' notice, no medical superintendent if he is satisfied on the lines you have sketched out, hesitates for a moment to let the patient go at once.

21,347. It is a power to retain for 24 hours in a case where it is advisable to do so?—(Sir Frederick Willis): Yes.

21,348. Then the patient is really free to go out at any moment subject only to this—if the medical superintendent thinks it is desirable in the interests of the case to detain the case for 72 or 24 hours, he is bound to do so.

21,349. Earl Russell: You allow as in the other case a barring notice for 72 hours?—Yes.

21,350. Chairman: We may now pass to the non-volitional case. Where do you think such cases should be receivable?—There we say "into any mental hospital or registered hospital, and if the institution or place has previously been approved by the Board for the reception of such cases, then into any licensed house, general hospital, nursing home, or private care."

21,351. In this case the approval of the nursing home, general hospital, or licensed house, must precede the reception of a case?—Yes.

21,352. Is that because the case is a more serious case?—Yes; it cannot at all look after itself, that is to say, the case we are now thinking of; we have to be satisfied that the place is being run properly, and we should not give our approval unless we were satisfied.

21,353. These would really be approved houses?—Approved houses.

Sir David Drummond: I thought it was proposed that all houses should be approved?

21,354. Chairman: Not for the voluntary case, I think?—No. For the non-volitional case we should be willing to entertain an application from any nursing home. We say "any licensed house, general hospital, nursing home, or private care." Any of those can say "We want to take this type of case; will you approve our doing so?" We should make our enquiries about the application, and if we were satisfied we should give our approval.

21,355. But an antecedent approval is not necessary for a patient who is voluntarily there?—No. Here we suggest that the application should be made by a relative or friend or public official for the reception of this case, and there should be two medical recommendations.

21,356. In this case the patient, of course, is brought?—Yes.

21,357. Why do you think that two medical recommendations would be necessary? This is not certification of course at all?—No. We think it is a further safeguard. There is no magistrate; there is no formality of that kind brought in; and we felt it was quite reasonable in that case to say there ought to be two medical recommendations.

21,358. Earl Russell: And no exercise of volition by the patient, of course?—No exercise of volition by the patient at all. That is the essential difference in the two cases.

21,359. Sir David Drummond: Is not this a case that is so pronounced that only one certificate is necessary? Anybody could indicate the nature of the case?—We want to get away from a justice's order as far as ever we can; we want to dispense with formal certification; and we are suggesting these other safeguards which, in our view, are quite adequate for the protection of the patient. We think that with the non-volitional case it is a certain safeguard to have those two medical recommendations.

21,360. Chairman: This, of course, would apply to a pauper patient as well as to a private patient?—Yes.

21,361. Here again you desiderate notice to the Board?—Immediately; and that copies of the two medical recommendations should be sent to the Board; that we get a medical report on the case within seven days of admission; and that the institution should be open to the inspection of the Board. More or less, these conditions now are the same as we have specified for the other cases.

21,362. Earl Russell: (c) is a new one?—(c) is a new one, "That the Board has the right to order the discharge of the patient from the passive class should they consider him unsuitable to remain on that footing."

21,363. Chairman: Then: "That the person on whose application the patient was received for treatment should at any time have the right to remove the case on giving 24 hours' notice." That is the petitioner as we call him?—Yes.

21,364. Earl Russell: There you go back to what I rather dislike in the policy of the existing Act. You are making the petitioner the custodian of the person of this lunatic. Ought he to be the sole custodian of this person without some authority saying that he may have it? Is it right to give him the sole power of disposal of this non-volitional man or woman, and of taking him or her to any other place at 24 hours' notice? It is a very large power to give to one private person?—(Dr. Bond): He has been given the power to get him there with the aid of two medical recommendations.

21,365. That is quite a different thing to the power to take him away and more or less to do what he likes with him?—(Sir Frederick Willis): Our reason for that is this: that we do not want there to be any detention of these cases. In our view real detention should only take place after a justice has authorised it; and giving the person on whose application you have received the case the right to take the case away seemed to us necessary if you are going to maintain the principle that there is to be no detention of the uncertified case. (Mr. Macleod): Somebody must look after the patient; that is the whole thing.

10 December, 1925.]

SIR FREDERICK J. WILLIS, K.B.E., C.B.

[Continued.]

21,366. Chairman: And, of course, this is entirely a non-volitional case?—(Sir Frederick Willis): Yes.

21,367. Earl Russell: Of course the person who does take him away would be subject to all the legal penalties if he had him treated in some improper place?—Absolutely.

21,368. Mr. Micklem: You do not provide for the six-monthly reports in this case?—No, because the case is only there for six months in the first instance, under this procedure; or he may be there for a year. "We think that the non-volitional but passive patient should only be received on this footing for a period of six months in the first instance, but that there should be power to extend the period for a further six months, if two independent medical practitioners recommend that in the interest of the patient such further period of treatment under the conditions obtaining is desirable, and if copies of the two medical reports are furnished to the Board. If, after being treated under these conditions for a year it is considered that the patient should be detained for further care and treatment, he should only be detained if fully certified."

21,369. Chairman: Of course, with this class of case, the non-volitional case, if there is no recovery within six months, or even a year, it is pretty obvious that it is a pronounced case, is it not?—In most cases it would be quite obvious, I think; at any rate, that is the greatest latitude we felt justified in suggesting.

21,370. This case has escaped certification altogether up to date. There has been no necessity to get the warrant of restraint which certification gives you, because the patient is not resisting?—Quite.

21,371. Then you provide for the case of the patient recovering volition?—Yes.

21,372. He is a non-volitional patient, uncertified; he recovers volition while there; probably in the course of his convalescence?—Quite.

21,373. What is to be done then? You cannot dispose of him after that merely as a non-volitional case, and so I see you propose that he should be allowed to leave on giving 72 hours' notice; in short, he is passed over into the category of a voluntary patient?—That is the position; that is what we suggest.

21,374. Without, however, ever having signed any document?—Quite; an application was made for him, by his relative or friend, before he went in.

21,375. In this case he would ex hypothesi go to the medical superintendent and say "I want to leave," and the medical superintendent would have to gauge whether or not he really was making an intelligent request. If he was, but was still, in the opinion of the medical superintendent, dangerous in any way, the medical superintendent would say "Very good; you can leave, but you must wait 72 hours more," and that would give him an opportunity of taking any steps that were necessary in the patient's interest?—Quite; that is it.

21,376. Supposing your non-volitional case becomes an obstreperous and resistant case, there again you would enquire, and I see you propose that he would have to be dealt with by certification?—Yes, that is our position: "That if at any time the non-volitional but passive case becomes a resistant case, he must within a month thereof be dealt with under the provisions relating to the resistant case or be discharged."

21,377. Mr. Micklem: When you speak there of two independent medical practitioners, do you mean independent of each other, or independent of the home?—Independent of the home. I think, possibly, if you are dealing with a public institution, they might be two of the medical practitioners on the staff of that institution; but if you are dealing with a profit-making place, then I should certainly say they ought to be independent practitioners.

21,378. Chairman: Then I think we may pass to the third class of case, the resistant case. What is your view of that case? We have dealt with the voluntary case and the non-volitional case, and now we come to the last case of the resistant patient?—We suggest there: "That the resistant case should only be detained after full certification on a petition signed by a relative, friend or public official and an order signed by a judicial authority, subject to the following limitations: that a case may be received on a provisional order signed by a relative, friend or public official and accompanied by one medical certificate. Under this provisional order and certificate the patient may be detained for a period of 14 days if, in the opinion of the medical officer of the institution or place, or, in the case of patients in single care, the medical attendant, the case needs detention for that period. A copy of the provisional order and certificate should be sent to the Board on admission. If at the expiration of the 14 days the medical officer or medical attendant aforesaid should be of opinion that the patient should be detained for a further period of 14 days for purposes of observation and treatment, the patient may be detained accordingly provided the doctor certifies in writing that this further detention is desirable. A copy of this certificate should be furnished to the Board."

21,379. This is all designed to postpone certification?—Entirely. Then we suggest that "during that provisional stage these cases should only be received where suitable accommodation and expert medical treatment and nursing are available. They might go to any public mental hospital, registered hospital, or licensed house, and, if the institution or place had previously been approved by the Board for the reception of cases under a provisional order and certificate, in any general hospital, nursing home or single care or Poor Law institution."

21,380. And the limit of that period of provisional treatment and detention is 28 days?—28 days.

21,381. Two periods of 14 days?—Yes.

21,382. Now I suppose you recognise it is necessary to retain means of dealing with urgent cases—emergency cases?—Yes; it is essential to have some means of dealing with them such as you have now got under Section 20 of the Lunacy Act.

21,383. But in their case you would contemplate a provisional order which would not amount to a full certification, and you would give those emergency cases the benefit of the postponement of certification and the possibility of recovery without certification?—Yes.

21,384. Then as to the fully certifiable case, if the provisional order expires and the patient has not recovered, in such a case the full certification should ensue, I suppose?—It should ensue then, whatever you decide is to be the full certification.

21,385. Then it would become the last resort instead of the first resort?—That is our view, yes.

21,386. And as to the places where the fully certified cases should be dealt with, what is your view?—We suggest that: "they should be dealt with in public mental hospitals, registered hospitals, licensed houses, or in single care"; that is, of course, as at present. "They might also be received in Poor Law institutions or nursing homes, provided they have been previously approved by the Board of Control." We consider that the public responsibility for providing for all mental cases should rest with the visiting committee of the local authority and not with the guardians of the poor, and if any Poor Law accommodation is used it should be used in pursuance of a contract between the visiting committee and the guardians. Of course, as you know, at present most of these cases go straight to the workhouse, and unfortunately the arrangements are frequently very unsuitable for the reception of these cases. We want the public responsibility placed on the county council through its visiting committee.

21,387. Mr. Micklem: Would there not be a little risk under this provisional order that you suggest? That order is not the order of any authority; it is an order of a relative with one medical certificate?—Yes.

21,388. Would that be binding upon an institution? You take it without any judicial authority; you just get the direction of a relative and one doctor. Do you say that every institution should be bound to accept those cases?—Do you mean every public institution should be bound to accept those cases?

10 December, 1925.]

SIR FREDERICK J. WILLIS, K.B.E., C.B.

[Continued.]

21,389. Yes?—I think they should, if they have been approved as suitable for the reception of those cases.

21,390. Yes, but would there not be some, at all events, slight risk, that cases might be certified by a relative who had an object in doing it, and a doctor?—Do you mean that the medical officer of the institution or place should not have a right to say "I do not consider this case is insane at all, and I will not take it"?

21,391. Yes, or to say "I want something better than an order by" say a wife or a husband?—No, he would not be entitled to say that, I think, if the case was clearly insane.

21,392. But I am assuming a case where subsequently it was said the man was not insane at all?—We have not very fully dealt with that in this answer, but, if that case, after being admitted, was in the opinion of the medical superintendent sane, it would be the duty of that medical superintendent at once to discharge the case; but your question was: Would a medical superintendent think this sufficient authority, the order of the relative or friend?

21,393. I was rather asking, should it be a sufficient authority, a mere order of that kind without any judicial authority at all?—I think it should, always preserving the right of the medical superintendent to say: "This case is not insane at all." He should always preserve that right. (Mr. Macleod): What we say is this "Under this provisional order and certificate the patient may be detained for a period of 14 days if in the opinion of the medical officer of the institution or place, or, in the case of patients in single care, the medical attendant, the case needs detention for that period." He only keeps him for that time if he thinks it necessary.

21,394. What is in my mind is this: there is in the minds of some of the public, let us say a minority of the public, a view that people may get put away too easily. Is not this introducing a plan by which there might be some risk of their being put away easily?—(Sir Frederick Willis): Of course, it exists now.

(Mr. Macleod): This is introduced to try and prevent certification.

21,395. But you must now get an order?—Not in an urgency case; they can keep them for seven days. (Dr. Bond): Section 20 is without a doctor at all.

21,396. Chairman: Of course this is only an authority of brief duration, 14 days only?—(Sir Frederick Willis): Yes, and of course we limit the places to which these cases can be taken. We suggest a public mental hospital, a registered hospital, or a licensed house, or, subject to our previous approval, certain other places.

21,397. Mr. Micklem: But Section 20 is a very different one. Section 20 invokes a public officer. The case suggested is that of a private person with some special object in getting rid of the patient?—(Mr. Macleod): But look at Section 11 of the Act of 1890.

Earl Russell: You and I can have a man taken to an institution and kept there if he is a lunatic. It is Section 11, sub-section (1). He may be received and detained as a single patient on an urgency order made, possibly, by the husband or wife.

Mr. Micklem: But under that Act that must be either preceded or followed immediately by a petition.

Earl Russell: But for seven days you can detain the patient.

21,398. Mr. Micklem: But in the meantime you must have presented a petition for certification?—(Sir Frederick Willis): Not for seven days; you can keep him for seven days on an urgency order. (Mr. Macleod): You cannot keep the case for more than seven days unless you get a petition and an order of a justice; but if in the meantime the patient recovers, the superintendent discharges him.

21,399. Chairman: The only question is whether you should base this power of detention upon a justice's order?—(Sir Frederick Willis): That is what we do not want. We want to give a clear 28 days for observation.

21,400. For medical treatment, detached from the legal aspect as far as possible, but with certain powers or restraint?—There will be full power of restraint during that time, if necessary.

Chairman: I think you have now given us your views on these topics, and that concludes our public sitting to-day. We are much obliged to you.

(The Witnesses withdrew.)

(Adjourned to to-morrow at 10.30 a.m.)

5, OLD PALACE YARD,

WESTMINSTER, S.W.1.

FORTY-SECOND DAY.

Friday, 11th December, 1925.

MEMBERS PRESENT :

THE RIGHT HON. H. P. MACMILLAN, K.C. (Chairman).

SIR DAVID DRUMMOND, C.B.E., M.D.

MR. N. MICKLEM, K.C.

MR. H. SNELL, M.P.

MRS. C. J. MATHEW.

MISS MADELEINE SYMONS.

MR. P. BARTER (Secretary).

MR. W. FAIRLEY (Assistant Secretary).

Mr. H. W. S. FRANCIS, O.B.E. (Assistant Secretary of the Ministry of Health), called and examined.

21,401. Chairman: We had hoped this morning to have the attendance of Mr. Brock, Principal Assistant Secretary of the Ministry of Health. Unfortunately we have just learned that owing to indisposition he will not be able to be present to-day. He has already furnished us, however, with some information in writing, which will be considered by the Commission. We have with us Mr. Francis, Assistant Secretary of the Ministry of Health, whose province, I understand, is particularly related to the Poor Law?—Yes.

21,402. Mr. Francis, you have of course appreciated that under the existing code of lunacy administration in this country there exists an intimate relationship between Lunacy and the Poor Law?—Yes.

21,403. The Royal Commission in the course of their investigations have been considering the general question of that relationship and possible modifications of it. We shall be glad this morning if you can assist us with any observations which the Minister, through you, may desire to make on the question of extricating, so far as possible, the lunacy administration from Poor Law administration. We have appreciated that there is a feeling, as matters stand just now, that there is an unfortunate element of pauperisation associated with lunacy; and we naturally desire to consider whether that can be modified or altered in any way. In the course of our consideration of the matter one or two practical points have arisen, and it is upon these that I think your assistance will be of value to us. Take, for example, the question of accommodation. A considerable number of patients at present are accommodated, are they not, in Poor Law institutions?—Yes, both certified and uncertified.

21,404. And are these patients directly under the charge of the guardians?—Yes.

21,405. Now, first of all, as regards this accommodation, that also is provided by the guardians, I take it?—Yes.

21,406. And accordingly the patients who are inmates of those institutions are regarded as paupers who are receiving treatment because of the ailment which has overtaken them?—They are paupers.

21,407. They are paupers; but I take it that of those who are found in those Poor Law infirmaries some are persons who had become paupers before the onset of the malady?—Yes.

21,408. While others have become paupers because of their having become mentally afflicted?—Certainly.

21,409. There seems to me to be a certain distinction between the two cases because, of course, a pauper who is already a pauper may become mentally afflicted just as he may have any other illness, and then he is sent, I suppose to the infirmary, or to the lunacy ward of a Poor Law institution?—Yes, probably; he is kept in whatever ward seems to be appropriate for him; I cannot put it more precisely than that.

21,410. On the other hand, take the case of a person who has had hitherto no relation to the Poor Law; in consequence of his becoming mentally afflicted, the existing machinery seems to have the result of rendering him a pauper and consigning him to Poor Law administration?—The existing Poor Law machinery provides for the use of the Poor Law institutions as the receiving houses for lunatics.

21,411. And the fact that he is received in a Poor Law institution stamps him under the Statute as a person who is then a pauper?—He is a pauper; I should not say it stamps him.

21,412. He is a pauper by reason of the fact that he receives Poor Law relief in that shape?—Yes.

21,413. As regards the accommodation, provision is made, is there not, in Section 26 of the Act of 1890 for the lunacy authority, in other words, the visitors, with the consent of the Local Government Board and the Commissioners, and subject to such regulations as they may respectively prescribe, making arrangements with the guardians of any union for the reception into the workhouse of any chronic lunatics not being dangerous who are in the asylum and have been selected for that purpose. Is that taken advantage of to any extent?—I do not think there is a very large number of agreements under that section. Most of the lunatics in workhouses are there under other provisions of the Act.

21,414. They are persons who have not been in asylums at all?—I would not say that. I think they may quite well have been in asylums, but they are not discharged under this section.

21,415. What I am anxious to get at for the moment is where does your lunatic population in your Poor Law institutions come from?—It would have, I think, three elements: the element that come into

11 December, 1925.]

Mr. H. W. S. FRANCIS, O.B.E.

[Continued.]

the workhouse as a receiving house which may be on their way to an asylum, or which may be discharged without going to an asylum; the second element would be the person who is already a pauper, possibly in a workhouse, who becomes insane; and the third element would be people who are moved from the asylum, discharged from the asylum, and go back to the workhouse, where they are maintained, not under Section 26, but under other provisions of the Act.

21,416. The patient who is received and kept in the workhouse may be under Section 24?—Yes.

21,417. Where statutory provision is made for the patient being received in the workhouse and remaining in the workhouse subject to certain statutory precautions?—Yes. The difference between Section 26 and the other provisions is, I think, that Section 26 keeps the lunatic in slightly closer touch with the lunacy administration—the county administration.

21,418. Because he continues to be a patient on the books of the asylum?—Yes.

21,419. The other two cases are different, obviously?—Yes.

21,420. Now if it were thought desirable to extricate the lunacy administration from its present association with the Poor Law, having regard to the existing accommodation, it might be necessary, might it not, still to use Poor Law premises for mental patients?—I should think almost certainly, to some extent.

21,421. Just because you could not have a complete fresh outfit of premises? — You could not have a complete new outfit of premises, and it is impossible at present to arrange for the conversion of Poor Law workhouses into county institutions for lunatics.

21,422. Now have you any practical suggestion as to how that accommodation could be used, under a system by which the lunacy administration should be in the hands of the local authorities rather than of the Poor Law?—It would have to be by the use of Section 26.

21,423. Then would these Poor Law premises so used become ad hoc branches of the local authority's lunacy system?—I think the section requires a little more development to make that completely so.

21,424. That is what might be helpful. If the idea was that lunatics should not be accommodated in Poor Law premises but should be accommodated in premises which belonged to or, at least, were under the control of the local authorities, to achieve that you need to enter into different relationships with the Poor Law authorities?—Rather different. A parallel would be the use of Poor Law institutions for the reception of maternity cases which are sent there by the local authority.

21,425. That is an interesting analogy. Take a maternity case that is sent to a Poor Law institution: that case is not pauperised, is it?—I am not quite sure what you mean—it is not entered on the books of the guardians as a person receiving relief from them.

21,426. It is not characterised as a rate-aided case?—It probably is one.

21,427. It is receiving benefit from an institution which is rate-aided?—If the cost is borne completely by the local authority then, I think, you could say it could not be characterised as aided from the poor rates, though it is aided from some other rate. I am not quite sure there is any substantial difference.

21,428. If arrangements were made under Section 26, with possibly some amplification of the provisions of that section, whereby patients could be received in existing Poor Law institutions, would these persons so relieved necessarily become paupers in the full sense of the term?—If the lunacy authority pays for them, they would not be chargeable to the rate raised for the guardians' purposes.

21,429. In these circumstances would a payment have to be made to the guardians for the use of the accommodation?—Quite clearly.

21,430. Then the premises really become transferred from Poor Law accommodation to asylum accommodation?—The form would probably be a lease of a certain part of the institution to the lunacy authority, the terms of the lease providing that the guardians shall staff and maintain the leased part of the institution and the patients in it, but reserving to the lunacy authority certain powers for the benefit of the inmates, which at present they have not got.

21,431. Who would do the staffing in that case?—The guardians. It is not an essential part of the system, but it almost inevitably would happen.

21,432. Would they be paid by the guardians?—Certainly.

21,433. Would the guardians be recouped for that expenditure on staff?—Yes. We could not agree to the arrangement on any other basis.

21,434. So that the premises would be rented and the staff would be paid apart from Poor Law administration altogether?—The staff would be paid by the guardians, and the whole cost of the place, staff, feeding and everything else recouped to the guardians by the lunacy authority.

21,435. So that the expense of this administration would not fall upon the guardians at all?—No.

21,436. In the first place, the expenditure would be theirs, but as they would be entirely indemnified it would not really be expenditure chargeable to the guardians' rate?—No.

21,437. Provision is made in Section 261 for a visiting committee actually taking a lease of premises?—Yes, but that I think refers to the whole premises rather, does it not?

21,438. Well it says "any land or buildings which they are authorised to purchase" and they may take a lease thereof. Of course they might not be authorised to purchase the Poor Law premises?—No.

21,439. However, that is a matter of machinery; but do you think that with some modification of the statute such arrangements could be satisfactorily worked?—They could be.

21,440. It would become a matter really of administrative machinery?—Yes. Of course the success of any scheme of the kind depends upon a certain reasonableness on the part of both authorities.

21,441. However it would be quite easy to provide the necessary machinery if the policy was thought to be desirable?—Quite easy.

21,442. And you think it could work in well enough with the existing Poor Law machinery?—Yes. One feature of it would probably be that the guardians would expect the lunacy authorities to take over lunatics, who are in the workhouse and perhaps would not have been sent to the asylum.

21,443. Do you recognise any distinction or do you apprehend any difficulty, from the existence of that class of persons who are already in receipt of poor relief and become mentally afflicted while there in that state, as distinguished from those who would be sent there by the asylum authorities, or would have reached the institution simply in consequence of their affliction?—I do not quite see why there should be substantial difficulty. It seems to me quite arguable that if these people become lunatics, and there is a lunacy authority under whose care they are placed, that authority can quite properly pay for them.

21,444. During the time that they are afflicted?—Certainly.

21,445. And then if the patient, who initially was a pauper and became mentally afflicted and as such came under the visiting committee or other local authority for lunacy, recovered, he or she would simply return to the category of a pauper in the poorhouse?—Either become independent or have to come for relief from the guardians.

21,446. You do not apprehend any difficulty as between these various classes; you think the accommodation could be utilised for all those classes, the common ground being that they are all mentally afflicted?—Is not that the basis of classification which you must use once you are approaching it as a lunacy matter?

21,447. Yes, I follow that. By that means, I take it, the stigma, as it is called, of pauperisation could be eliminated, could it not?—So far as it exists.

11 December, 1925.]

Mr. H. W. S. FRANCIS, O.B.E.

[Continued.]

21,448. There is another matter which comes, I think, within your purview, Mr. Francis, arising from the question of the chargeability of patients. At the present moment, of course, there is a code which deals with the chargeability of pauper patients?—Yes.

21,449. Would it be necessary, do you think, to alter the scheme of chargeability to any extent?—Quite clearly. At present the bulk of the lunatics are union cases, and are chargeable to the union. You want to say that they are lunacy cases which are for the lunacy authority. It seems to me that they must become chargeable to the lunacy authority's area as a whole, and not to a part of it.

21,450. Just as at present the lunacy authority has charge of, and is financially responsible for, the lunatics within their area?—Yes.

21,451. So their responsibility would be expanded to include all types of lunatics, whether they were Poor Law cases or not?—I do not think that is quite so; the lunacy authority at present is not responsible for all the lunatics in its area; the lunacy authority is responsible only for maintaining institutions to which lunatics are sent by the Poor Law authorities, and the lunatics are chargeable to the Poor Law authorities, the union area. If you wish to separate the connection between lunacy and poor law, you must say the responsibility of the lunacy authority is to extend to all lunatics in the area. It is possible that you might have a difficulty over the willingness of the lunacy authority to accept a charge for what they would call a lunatic that did not belong to them. That could be got over, if grants are going to be increased to the lunacy authority, by saying that it is a condition of the increased grant that they should take these cases without raising any question.

21,452. Let us just understand this a little more clearly. The lunacy authority is responsible for the provision of accommodation, is it not?—At present, yes.

21,453. It must provide adequate accommodation?—Yes.

21,454. And then the patients which reach the asylum reach it at present through the machinery of the Poor Law?—Yes.

21,455. Then for the maintenance of the patients in the institution, which has been provided by the local authority, is the Poor Law responsible?—Yes.

21,456. Does the Poor Law pay over to the lunacy authority the cost of the maintenance of the paupers?—Yes.

21,457. There is a grant, of course, in addition?—Yes.

21,458. If the responsibility for the maintenance of the population of the mental institutions were taken over by the lunacy authority, then the Poor Law would be relieved of that expense?—Entirely.

21,459. Are you figuring, if that were done, that the lunacy authority would require to receive some assistance from some source?—No, I do not know that that is so. It depends upon what is proposed. If the Commission do propose that there should be larger grants, then a condition of those grants might be that, say, Bedford is not to raise any question with regard to a lunatic found in Bedford though the man properly belongs to Gloucester.

21,460. But in the case figured would not the Poor Law authority be relieved of a considerable expenditure?—Certainly.

21,461. Mr. Mickle: There would be no question of settlement at all, would there?—I do not think there ought to be.

21,462. Chairman: The responsibility would just rest where it fell?—Yes.

21,463. But if there was that large relief to the Poor Law authorities by reason of their being exonerated from the responsibility of maintaining the lunatics, and that burden were transferred to the lunacy authority, do you regard that as being merely a question of nominal transference of liability, since the ratepayer ultimately responsible would be the same person?—It is a matter purely of form, except so far as you have a larger area of charge and a rather more equalised charge.

21,464. There might be a diminution in the guardians' rate, but there would be a corresponding increase in the lunacy rate?—There would be a diminution in the guardians' part of the poor rate, and an increase in the lunacy part of the poor rate.

21,465. They are both parts of the poor rate at present?—Yes.

21,466. But as an incident of any such re-arrangement, do you contemplate that a claim might be made for increased grants?—I have not really considered that. Most developments in local government seem to involve a demand for increased grants.

21,467. I am afraid that is so?—If the Commission are considering grants of that kind then that condition could be attached.

21,468. But I gather that as a question of administration you would favour the lunacy authority being responsible for all cases arising in its area, irrespective of Poor Law settlement?—Yes, quite irrespective of Poor Law settlement.

21,469. At present the relieving officer, who is a Poor Law official, has very important functions to discharge under the Lunacy Act, has he not?—Yes.

21,470. Have you any views as to how those services, at present rendered by the relieving officer, would be rendered if a change such as we have been discussing were instituted?—It does not seem to me that the matter presents any substantial difficulty. The relieving officers and the guardians have their places in lunacy law, because at the time of the development of the lunacy law the guardians were the only authority of a simple single form working all over England and Wales.

21,471. It was an existing machinery?—It was an existing machinery to which it was obviously easy to assign anything of the kind. They were also the only machine which possessed a relieving officer responsible for every district in the country. The position is totally changed now.

21,472. You might just develop that a little, Mr. Francis, and tell us how you are looking at the development?—I am not at the moment saying whether the Poor Law machine is the right one or not.

21,473. We are contemplating possibilities?—If you approach the subject now, you have a number of possible alternative machines which could be used.

21,474. We should be very glad to hear your views upon that. Without committing your Ministry in any way, one would like to hear the possibilities of the situation?—One possibility is that the Lunacy authority itself should do the work.

21,475. The whole work?—The whole work.

21,476. Not merely providing premises, but looking after and maintaining the lunatic population?—Yes. The situation is completely altered by the motor car and the telephone.

21,477. How have these modern innovations altered the situation?—You have the difficult case which has to be dealt with at once for which you require someone to be on the spot. I am thinking of the case of a man who goes suddenly violently off his head; you have got to get a neighbour to sit with him, and you get hold of the relieving officer as the responsible officer as quickly as you can.

21,478. Who is on the spot?—Pretty well. You send for the relieving officer; you telephone for him. It would not take very much longer to telephone to the asylum and have an attendant arrive with an ambulance, if required.

21,479. Yes, but one difficulty still occurs to me, and that is that the relieving officer, being as you have said a localised official, has special knowledge of the population under his charge, and is in touch with the people?—Yes.

21,480. Must not there always be somebody at hand even to send for the ambulance and who can be referred to at once in the case of an emergency?—

11 December, 1925.]

Mr. H. W. S. FRANCIS, O.B.E.

[Continued.]

There are the police and the medical officers of health in larger areas, of course.

21,481. I am just thinking of it practically. Suppose such a case as you have figured arises, what is the unhappy husband or wife or son or daughter to do; to whom are they to refer in their difficulty?—At present they go to the relieving officer, I understand. And they know him.

21,482. They know him, and he takes charge of the situation and tells them what ought to be done. Suppose it were not the relieving officer, whom would you substitute to perform that really very important function?—I should have thought the medical officer of health.

21,483. Then take a county area; the medical officer of health is probably in the county town, not in touch really with the population, that may be scattered through his area, to the same extent?—The medical officer for a rural district should be in touch.

21,484. Sir David Drummond: But the panel doctor would be the first official to be called in?—The panel doctor, of course, is more easily available.

21,485. He would be called in, in the first instance, and it is he who sets matters moving?—Yes.

21,486. Chairman: I was just trying to figure out practically how the thing would work. Supposing the relieving officer were no longer the person to whom people referred in their difficulties?—I believe at the present time it is more often a doctor who says you must send for a relieving officer.

21,487. In that case the doctor, instead of saying you must send for a relieving officer, would say you must send for the official of the asylum?—Yes.

21,488. Then would you contemplate that in cases where accommodation was sufficient the patient should be taken direct to the mental institution, without passing through the Poor Law institution at all?—Yes, assuming you have a development of this practice under Section 26. If that section were largely applied, there would be receiving houses available.

21,489. They would be the same premises, but they would be labelled differently, and under different administration?—That appears to be a great object of reform now.

21,490. Then in that case, on the panel doctor or the medical officer of health seeing the case and regarding it as an emergency case, steps could be taken at once by communicating with an institution for the reception of that case?—Yes.

21,491. Mr. Micklem: That would mean, would it not, providing at the Poor Law institution something further than is suggested in Section 26, which only deals with chronic patients?—Yes. I was assuming a development of the Section.

21,492. Chairman: But whatever development took place in the Poor Law, even if the Poor Law is abolished as such, would there not always have to be some official still corresponding to the relieving officer, even if his name were changed and his duties were different?—There would certainly be relieving officers all over the country. I was considering the point that there was a desire to get the Poor Law entirely out of lunacy.

21,493. That is a suggestion that we are discussing?—If that is desired, it can be done. I am not going to say there may not be inconveniences about it; there certainly will be inconveniences about any change.

21,494. I do not know whether the relieving officer who is still under any system of reform to continue to exist could not still be used in another capacity. He might have to double an appointment; he might be a Poor Law relieving officer and a lunacy officer?—There is no change in the situation there; the relieving officer's lunacy duties are always held to be distinct from his Poor Law duties.

21,495. They are?—They are now.

21,496. But they are discharged by him under the same name?—Yes, they are assigned to him under that name.

21,497. And he is, of course, just paid as the holder of one office?—Yes. He frequently receives three or more salaries, but there is no separate salary for lunacy work, as a rule.

21,498. That, of course, rather tends to give the impression that it is mixed up with the Poor Law, does it not?—So it is.

21,499. The practical difficulty I was really envisaging just now is how you could get hold of any person who was so closely in touch as the relieving officer is at present, and so well known in the district as the person to whom you could refer in such a difficulty?—That, of course, would be a difficulty, so far as you are thinking of a case where no doctor comes in; but as soon as the doctor comes in I should imagine that the medical officer of health, or his representatives, are better known to the doctor than the relieving officer is.

21,500. Then you would contemplate that the doctor who was called in, in the first instance, would, if he thought the case required immediate treatment, communicate with the medical officer of health, who would then put the appropriate machinery in motion?—Yes.

21,501. You see some cases have to be dealt with at very short notice?—Of course.

21,502. And you want to have the machinery at hand and available with the least possible delay, do you not?—The machinery consists of somebody to take care of the patient in the house for the moment.

21,503. Putting it in its simplest way: to tell the poor people what they had got to do; that is what we all want to know when we get into a difficulty?—I should have thought the doctor would do that.

Sir David Drummond: In practice there is often great delay at present; the relieving officer is away attending to some other matter. Hours, and sometimes quite half a day or more, would elapse before the relieving officer can deal with these cases. That is one of the complaints in practice in populous districts, that the relieving officer is unable to deal with the case promptly; he has too many duties.

21,504. Chairman: Of course he cannot be everywhere at once, but I am afraid that would apply to any official?—That would apply to every system.

21,505. You cannot have a man standing by, so to speak?—If you had a man standing by, he might have two cases at once, of course.

21,506. That is a practical difficulty which just has to be met. But it is the substitution of someone to perform the duties of the relieving officer that is a little puzzling us, because he seems to be such an important functionary under the existing law?—All I was suggesting was that there are alternative machineries all over the place now; you are not bound to the Poor Law in the way you were.

21,507. Just because of the growth, since the original lunacy law was framed, of those other systems of administration?—Yes.

21,508. And you think they might be called in aid and adapted for this purpose?—Yes; I see no reason why it should not be done.

21,509. That really is the practical conclusion of the matter. On the whole you suggest the medical officer of health and his staff as affording the alternative machinery?—I should have thought that was the first line of enquiry at any rate.

21,510. At the present moment what is the relation of the central lunacy authority, the Board of Control, to the workhouse accommodation in which mental cases are treated?—The Board of Control inspect all workhouses in which there are lunatics at the different prescribed intervals, and they report to the Minister, who communicates with the guardians on the report. The reason for that of course is that the workhouse is only partially a place for lunatics. There are other considerations.

21,511. The Board of Control can only inspect that portion of the workhouse premises which is specially dedicated to the treatment of mental cases?—They are primarily concerned to inspect that portion.

11 December, 1925.]

MR. H. W. S. FRANCIS, O.B.E.

[Continued.]

21,512. So that already in a sense part of the Poor Law accommodation is dedicated to mental treatment, and is under the control of the lunacy authorities?—Yes.

21,513. It might not present any very great difficulty just to carry that process further and separate it from the guardians' immediate province?—I think you would have great difficulty, if you cannot make arrangements for the guardians to staff and maintain the wards, possibly as the agents of the lunacy authority.

21,514. And that, of course, might well arise, might it not, in cases where you are dealing with rural areas, where it would be impossible to have a separate staff for the very small number of cases involved?—Even if you had a larger number of cases it is very difficult to have two staffs or two masters in one institution.

21,515. Of course this might be merely a temporary arrangement pending more complete severance of the two, but one has to deal with the thing practically. At the present moment, if the workhouse accommodation were cut off altogether, there would not be sufficient accommodation for mental cases in this country?—I believe not.

21,516. And therefore the existing accommodation would certainly for a time have to be used; and then comes the question that you put as to the staffing, and your suggestion is that the premises might be taken under Section 26, and the staffing done by arrangement with the existing workhouse authority?—So long as the whole cost is borne by some other authority, I think you would find that the stigma of pauperism would not be raised; and there would of course be arrangements for other purposes.

21,517. You speak of arrangements for other purposes—are there any analogies that you can suggest to us?—I suggest maternity cases. I am not saying there are a large number of them; it is a question of the best arrangement being made where local circumstances indicate the use of Poor Law premises.

21,518. Can you give us a clue as to where we shall find the arrangements made with relation to maternity cases?—Edmonton would be a good example.

21,519. What is the arrangement obtaining there?—The guardians have provided a maternity ward in the ordinary course. By agreement with the district council they receive in that maternity ward—I am not quite sure whether it is even in a separate ward—but they receive certain patients who are sent by the district council, who come in by a different door, and are then treated and fed with the other inmates.

21,520. And what is the financial arrangement?—The district council pays.

21,521. Pays for the maintenance?—Yes.

21,522. Do they make any contribution to the establishment charges of the institution?—Their contribution is supposed to cover the whole cost.

21,523. Are there any other analogies besides the maternity case?—There are some instances, I think, where tuberculosis cases are received in that way.

21,524. I have no doubt we can ascertain how that is done in practice quite easily?—Yes.

21,525. Now you pointed out that the Board of Control report the result of their inspection of workhouse premises direct to the Minister?—Yes.

21,526. And then the Minister in turn communicates with the guardians?—Yes.

21,527. If arrangements such as we have been discussing were initiated and the lunacy authority leased premises from the guardians and recouped the guardians for the cost of maintenance of lunacy cases, there would, of course, still have to be inspection by the Board of Control, would there not?—Yes.

21,528. In such cases would you contemplate that the results of the inspection would still be reported to the Minister?—Yes, certainly the Minister should know; but I do not see any reason why the Board of Control should not communicate directly with the lunacy authority.

21,529. But not with the guardians?—But not with the guardians. Perhaps I may say that in certain institutions which take nothing but mental cases arrangements have already been made with the Board of Control by which our inspectors do not go there at all; the Board of Control do the inspection.

21,530. There is a point which is more or less incidental, but perhaps you might give us your view upon it, Mr. Francis, because it has been brought to our notice, namely, the position of patients in institutions in relation to their old age pensions. What is the position at present in that matter?—The old age pension is payable during not more than three months' stay in a Poor Law institution, if that stay is for medical treatment; substantially that is the position.

21,531. And if the patient remains longer than the three months is the Old Age Pension suspended?—It stops, yes.

21,532. Mr. Snell: The guardians in that case take it, do they?—At the end of the three months?

21,533. Yes?—No; it stops.

21,534. Chairman: It is absolutely suspended. I think, Mr. Snell. May not rather serious hardship result from that, Mr. Francis?—I believe the ground of the rule is that where a person is being maintained at public cost there is no reason for paying twice over.

21,535. Mr. Snell: But he presumably has to keep his lodgings going or his home. What happens?—I am afraid I do not know. I do not imagine that they do perhaps keep lodgings going, where you have a person over 70 going into a workhouse or infirmary for more than three months.

21,536. You think his other expenses would cease, as a general rule?—As a general rule.

21,537. Miss Madeleine Symons: But supposing a man had a small pension, from another source, you would not necessarily take it all from him—I mean the guardians would not?—The guardians would not necessarily take it all.

21,538. Does it not seem rather curious that if it happens to be an old age pension it should automatically stop; if it happens to be any other form of pension it should be decided on its merits?—I suppose the Treasury would say they do not see why they should pay an old age pension to relieve the rates.

21,539. Chairman: But suppose the patient has saved a little money, perhaps has saved £200 or £300, and is in enjoyment of an old age pension as well, and is able thus to carry on; the patient becomes mentally afflicted and is kept for more than three months in a mental institution; the pension automatically ceases; and then, I take it, the guardians would have recourse to the savings of that patient, the £200 or £300 I have figured, and exhaust it?—Yes.

21,540. And the patient, assuming recovery, would be restored to ordinary life with the whole of his savings gone, and be in a very much worse position financially than if he had not suffered this ailment at all?—That might happen.

21,541. Does not that seem rather hard?—I am not concerned, on behalf of the Minister, to defend the arrangement. The arrangement represents a compromise which was made in 1919, and was embodied in the Old Age Pension Act of that year.

21,542. Of course there may be two rival theories coming into conflict there: one being that the old age pension, being a payment from public money, the patient who is receiving the benefit of public money in residence and treatment in an institution should not draw both?—Quite.

21,543. The other view, of course, may be that the pension is a quite independent right?—But it is not, as the law stands.

21,544. As the law stands it is not treated as an independent right?—It is not a right.

21,545. Mr. Micklem: You mean the 1919 Act makes it not a right?—It settles the question. You have no right to it after three months.

11 December, 1925.]

Mr. H. W. S. FRANCIS, O.B.E.

[Continued.]

21,546. Chairman: That is rather reasoning in a circle. Apart from the fact that the statute peremptorily says that your old age pension shall terminate at the end of three months, if the patient had not had to go to the mental institution of course he would have continued to draw his old age pension?—Yes.

21,547. Mr. Micklem: When you say it was a compromise, between whom was it a compromise—the Treasury and the local authorities?—I think one might say 'Yes.'

Mr. Micklem: Not between the parties interested.

21,548. Chairman: Is there not an answer to the point that Mr. Francis is putting? Mr. Francis says the patient is being paid for out of public money, and therefore it is anomalous that at the same time the patient should be receiving public money; but if in point of fact the patient is not being paid for out of public money, but is being paid for out of his own £200 or £300 of savings, then that patient is not being maintained by public money at all; he is being maintained by his own money?—Perhaps I might suggest that you should hear evidence from the Treasury on the subject.

21,549. You are referring us to a very stony quarter; but I wanted to put the point because it is naturally a point related in some respects to the pauperization of the patient?—The Ministry would be quite glad if the present limitation were withdrawn; but they would feel great diffidence in supporting its withdrawal for lunatics and not for other persons in public institutions.

21,550. Mr. Snell: Does this argument of yours apply to cases where there is a contributory pension scheme under the new Act?—The same rule exactly has been applied, I believe.

21,551. So that a man might have paid for many years, and yet in three months his pension would stop?—Yes.

Chairman: It would operate a forfeiture of his pension, and, in addition to that, he might be maintaining himself out of his own savings, because the guardians recoup themselves.

Mr. Snell: Yes.

21,552. Chairman: Prima facie there seems a hardship there. I merely wanted to draw attention to it, because we are concerned to see that the persons who are unfortunately afflicted in this way are not distressed during their confinement, and possibly have their recovery retarded, by financial anxiety. I can well conceive a person, who had a small amount of capital saved which he is looking forward to living upon, being very much worried by the thought that that fund was being gradually dissipated; and when the patient returned to ordinary life this would all be gone, and gone to recoup the guardians, while at the same time the pension had been stopped because the guardians were supposed to be paying for the patient. There seems to be an anomaly there?—I can see, if I may say so, that that applies more to pensions under the new Act because they are young people; but I should have thought that the cases of people over 70 drawing old age pensions in which that was a substantial consideration, would be few.

Chairman: However I wanted to put it to you in order to show that it was a matter that had been brought under our notice, and, prima facie, it seems to involve some hardship. These are all the matters I want to ask you about, Mr. Francis, and perhaps my colleagues may now wish to ask you further questions.

21,553. Miss Madeleine Symons: Mr. Francis, you were telling us about the practical possibilities of continuing to use the Poor Law accommodation if the responsibility were transferred to the lunacy authority; but could you give us your opinion on the present position? Do you think that the accommodation and treatment and facilities for observation are in all cases generally satisfactory, as provided by the guardians?—I should have thought generally they reached a fair standard. In some instances they are very good; in some instances I am afraid they are not good.

21,554. That is what I was wondering, frankly. Assuming that you considered an alteration of the authority necessary, are you satisfied that a mere change of name is all that is needed?—Whether there is or is not a change of name, I know of instances in which, if it were not for the present need of economy, I should be putting pressure upon the guardians to improve their accommodation.

21,555. I was asking you that, because earlier on we had evidence of that kind from Poor Law witnesses themselves, and I wondered what your view about it was?—I do not think I can say more than that the present need for economy in public money does prevent securing improvements for which otherwise the Ministry would be pressing.

21,556. Otherwise you would be in favour of an improved scheme of receiving houses, whatever the accommodation was?—The accommodation certainly requires improvement in some respects.

21,557. Chairman: And if the premises were taken over under Section 26 by the lunacy authority, the duty would then pass to them to see that the accommodation was made adequate and the treatment was improved where necessary?—And to pay for it.

21,558. Mrs. Mathew: I should like to pursue that question, in order to bring the treatment of lunatics up to a certain standard. If the Ministry of Health made a grant, would they not be able to enforce a certain measure of improvement in the treatment and care of the patients?—I do not think the position would be very different in that respect. You would get the advantage of a rather closer application of experts' ideas to the guardians' institution than you get now; but on the question of making improvements the difficulty is, when you can afford to press it, to get the local authority to pay for it; that difficulty will still arise.

21,559. Chairman: You think their activities might be stimulated?—Of course if you like to pay for it, that is a different thing.

21,560. Mrs. Mathew: I think it might encourage them to a higher standard in some of the rural or backward areas?—I think there would be that substantial advantage: that you would get experts in closer touch with the thing.

21,561. And a better standard all round—to bring it up to a better level?—In some instances, yes. I am not prepared to say that it is bad all round.

21,562. Chairman: I do not know whether you would say that the status of the new lunacy authority might be a rather higher one than that of the guardians? I do not know whether that is a question really upon which you could speak?—No, I should not like to say that. They are very largely, of course (allowing for the fact that the lunacy authority has smaller numbers) the same people in the country areas.

21,563. Sir David Drummond: It appears to me that there is a great want of uniformity throughout the country in these workhouses in relation to the accommodation for lunatics. What steps would be taken to bring up the standard so that there would be a greater uniformity?—Is there a greater lack of uniformity than there is between the lunatic asylums in the country?

21,564. I think so. In some of the country workhouses things are far from right?—I do not know about that. This proposal, if it is carried out, that the lunacy authority should themselves control the accommodation in the workhouses, would of course meet that to a certain extent.

21,565. Quite so. That is your answer to the question?—Yes. Apart from that, the workhouses are inspected by the Board of Control at present, and I know of no case in which their recommendations for the improvement of the accommodation have been turned down by the Minister. No doubt there have been cases in which they have been unable to agree with the guardians.

11 December, 1925.]

Mr. H. W. S. FRANCIS, O.B.E.

[Continued.]

21,566. Chairman: There is no sanction attaching at present. I mean if the guardians simply resolutely say "We are not going to do it" notwithstanding the fact that the Board of Control think there should be an improvement, and the Minister approves of it, there is no drive behind it?—There is only a sanction which is very difficult to enforce. We can issue an Order of the Minister requiring them to make alterations, and then we can mandamus them to obey the order.

21,567. And if they do not obey?—I do not know.

21,568. One often wants to pursue a thing to see what is the ultimate sanction, because although the ultimate sanction may not often be used it is useful to have something in reserve; but at the moment there does not seem to be any direct compulsitor available?—There is no direct compulsitor available. We can issue an Order.

21,569. And perhaps in one sense it would not be desirable to introduce a compulsitor to make people spend money which they have not got? — One can imagine what the position of the country would be if Sir Edwin Chadwick had compulsory power to put all his ideas into effect.

Chairman: We are much obliged to you for your attendance, Mr. Francis. We are sorry not to have heard Mr. Brock this morning: but we shall use the contributions he has made to us in writing; and we are indebted to you for your evidence on the Poor Law.

(The Witness withdrew.)

(Adjourned.)

ROYAL COMMISSION ON LUNACY AND MENTAL DISORDER.

INDEX AND APPENDICES

TO THE

MINUTES OF EVIDENCE

TAKEN BEFORE THE

ROYAL COMMISSION ON LUNACY AND MENTAL DISORDER.

PART III.

LONDON :

PRINTED & PUBLISHED BY HIS MAJESTY'S STATIONERY OFFICE.

To be purchased directly from H.M. STATIONERY OFFICE at the following addresses :

Adastral House, Kingsway, London, W.C.2 ; York Street, Manchester ;

1, St. Andrew's Crescent, Cardiff ; or 120, George Street, Edinburgh ; or through any Bookseller.

1926

Price 10s. 6d. Net.

TABLE OF CONTENTS.

APPENDICES.

Appendix.	Page.
I. Analysis of principal statutory provisions	939
II. Reception documents returned after examination by Board of Control	940
III. Particulars of patients allowed leave of absence on trial during 1923	941
IV. Prosecutions under the Lunacy Acts during the 5 years 1919-1923	941
V. Return of inquisitions held since 1890	941
VI. Powers and duties transferred to the Minister of Health under the Transfer of Powers Order 1920	942
VII. Statement of disposal of mental cases admitted to Bethnal Green Workhouse, 1st January 1923 to 30th September 1924... ..	943
VIII. Mental cases reported in 1923 in the Birmingham Union	943
IX. Costs of visits for certification and removal in the Birmingham Union	943
X. List of mental patients admitted to Lambeth Infirmary from general hospitals between 31st March and 10th November, 1924	944
XI. Statistics of patients dealt with during 1923 in mental wards of Salford Union Infirmary	944
XII. Analysis of cases admitted to mental wards of Poor Law Institutions, Southampton Union, during year ended 30th September, 1924	945
XIII. Maudsley Hospital: Extract from the London County Council (Parks, etc.) Act, 1915... ..	945
XIII(A). City of London Mental Hospital: Extract from the City of London (Various Powers) Act, 1924	945
XIV. Particulars of patients admitted to London County Mental Hospitals, during 1923, who were found to be "not insane"	946
XV. Statement as to complaints during 1923 affecting the treatment of patients in London County Mental Hospitals which necessitated formal inquiry	948
XVI. Re-admission statistics, Rubery Hill and Hollymoor Mental Hospital, Birmingham	949
XVII. Average duration of residence of voluntary boarders, The Retreat, York	950
XVIII. Summary of mental patients dealt with by relieving officers during 1916-1924 in Leeds, Rochdale and Sheffield Unions	951
XIX. Letter from the Medical Superintendent of Camberwell House	951
XX. Statement as to admission of voluntary boarders to The Old Manor, Salisbury, 1923 and 1924	951
XXI. Patients discharged recovered, Claybury Mental Hospital, 1920-1924	952
XXII. Memorandum of evidence by the British Medical Association	952
XXIII. Statistics of deaths and discharges within short periods of detention during 1923 at the Lancashire Mental Hospitals	960
XXIV. Memorandum of evidence by the Medico-Psychological Association	960
XXV. Memorandum of evidence by the National Council for Mental Hygiene	967
XXVI. Statement of income and expenditure of the Maudsley Hospital for the financial year 1924-25	970

INDEX.

Index to Subjects	971
Index to Witnesses	1006

APPENDIX I.

Question 4

ANALYSIS OF THE PRINCIPAL STATUTORY PROVISIONS.

I.

PRIVATE PATIENTS.

- How Admitted* ... (1) Urgency Order. Ss. 11, 28, 29 (3).
 (2) Order on Petition. Ss. 4-8, S. 28.
 (3) By Summary Reception Order under S. 13—but see S. 3, Lunacy Act, 1891.
- On and After Admission.* (1) Notice of Admission and copy documents to Board within one clear day and medical statement between 2nd and 7th day. Rule 8 (3).
 (2) Amendment of documents. S. 34.
 (3) Month-end report. S. 39, and Rule 9.
 (4) Special Report and Certificate to continue Order. S. 38 (1890) and S. 7 (1891).
 (5) Commissioners can call for report at any time (Rule 35).
 (6) Single patients only—Report (Rule 17) by Medical Attendant in January of each year and whenever required by the Commissioners. S. 45.
- Case Books and Medical records.* Rules 1-3 (1906). 4, 10-13, and 16 (1895).
- Visitation of New Cases.* (1) By Commissioners. S. 39.
 (2) By Visitors of licensed houses. S. 39.
 (3) By members of Managing Committees of registered hospitals. S. 39.
 (4) By members of Visiting Committees of mental hospitals. S. 188.
 (5) Single patients—by the Commissioners, a Medical Visitor, or some other competent person. S. 39 (5), (6).
- General Visitation* ... (1) By Commissioners. Ss. 187, 191, 197 and 198 ; right to request private interview. S. 42 (1) (b).
 (2) By Visitors to licensed houses. S. 193.
 (3) By Visiting Committees. S. 188.
 (4) Single patients—by Medical Attendant. S. 44.
- Special Visits* ... (1) By Petitioner or someone appointed by him. S. 5 (3) ; by friends. S. 47.
 (2) By two Commissioners. S. 75 (In a hospital or licensed house or in single care).
 (3) By competent person by order of Commissioners. S. 204.
 (4) By Commissioner or other person by direction of Lord Chancellor or a Secretary of State. S. 205.
 (5) By two medical practitioners by order of Commissioners. S. 49.
 (6) By Chancery Visitors on direction of Master. Ss. 183, 184.
 (7) Special visit by Commissioners or Visitors to licensed houses to hold enquiry on oath. S. 332.
- Correspondence* ... (1) Correspondence. S. 41.
 (2) Notices. S. 42.
- Leave of Absence* ... (1) On trial (public mental hospitals) S. 55 (1) (8).
 (2) On trial or for health (hospitals or licensed houses) S. 55 (3) and (4) ; and S. 9 (1) Lunacy Act, 1891.
 (3) For 48 hours (hospitals and licensed houses) S. 55 (7).
 (4) Single patients—S. 56. S. 10 (Lunacy Act, 1891).
 (5) For 4 days granted by Medical Superintendent of public mental hospital—by regulations made under S. 275 (5).
- Discharges from Certificates.* (1) By Petitioner, etc. S. 72 (1) and (2).
 (2) By Commissioners. Ss. 34 (2), 38 (6) (a), 39 (9), 49, 72 (3), 75.
 (3) By Managing Committee of registered hospital. S. 39 (7).
 (4) By Visitors of licensed houses. S. 78—after 2 visits.
 (5) By 3 members of Visiting Committee. Ss. 77 (1), 38 (6) (b), 39 (7) ; and by 2 members of Visiting Committee on advice of Medical Officer. S. 77 (2).
 (6) By operation of law—
 (a) After notice of recovery—from hospital, licensed house or single care. S. 83.
 (b) After escape. S. 85.
 (c) Failure to return within 14 days after expiry of leave on trial. S. 55 (8).
 (d) Lapse of reception order. S. 38 (7) ; lapse of urgency order. S. 11 (6).
 (7) After legal proceedings under writ of Habeas Corpus.
 (8) Of alien by Secretary of State. S. 71.
 (9) Right of patient to copy of reception documents on discharge. S. 82.

N.B. References to Sections mean Sections in the Lunacy Act 1890, unless otherwise specified.

References to Rules mean Rules made by the Commissioners in Lunacy, dated 26th June 1895, unless otherwise specified.

II.

RATE-AIDED PATIENTS.

(a) In County and Borough Mental Hospitals.

(No Rate-aided Patients now in either Registered Hospitals or Licensed Houses.)

- How Admitted* ... On Summary Reception Orders.
 Ss. 13, 28.
 Ss. 16, 28.
 Ss. 22. Power to allow a relation or friend to take charge of a lunatic.
 Ss. 23, 28, 60. Power of Commissioners to make reception order.
- On and After Admission.* (1) Notice of Admission and copy documents and medical statement to be sent between 2nd and 7th day (Rule 3 (3)).
 (2) Amendment of documents. S. 34.
 (3) No month-end report required.
 (4) Special Report and Certificate to continue Order. S. 38 (1890) and S. 7 (1891).
 (5) Commissioners can call for report at any time (Rule 35).

Case Books and Medical Records.	Rules 1-3 (1906) ; 4, 10-13, and 16 (1895).
Visitation of New Cases.	By Visiting Committees. S. 188.
General Visitation ...	(1) By Visiting Committees. S. 188. (2) By Guardians and medical practitioner appointed by them. S. 201. (3) By Commissioners. S. 187.
Special Visits ...	(1) By competent person by order of Commissioners. S. 204. (2) By two medical practitioners by order of Commissioners. S. 49. (3) By friends. S. 47. (4) Special visit by Commissioners to hold enquiry on oath. S. 332.
Correspondence ...	S. 41.
Leave of Absence ...	(1) On trial. S. 55 (1), (2), (8). (2) For 4 days granted by Medical Superintendent of public mental hospital—by regulations made under S. 275 (5).
Boarding-out with Friends.	S. 57.
Discharges from Certificates.	(1) By 3 members of Visiting Committee. Ss. 77 (1), 38 (6) (b) ; and by 2 members of Visiting Committee on advice of Medical Officer. S. 77 (2). (2) By Commissioners. Ss. 34, 49. (3) By 2 members of Visiting Committee to care of friends. S. 79. (4) By Visiting Committee to Poor Law Institution. S. 25. (5) By operation of law— (a) After escape. S. 85. (b) Failure to return within 14 days after expiry of leave on trial. S. 55 (8). (c) Lapse of reception order. S. 38 (7). (6) After proceedings by writ of Habeas Corpus. (7) Right of patient to copy of reception documents on discharge. S. 82.

(b) In Poor-Law Institutions.

How Admitted ...	S. 20 (temporarily). S. 21 (temporarily). S. 24, Ss. 4 & 5 (1891) (for detention). S. 25 (from mental hospital). S. 26 (from mental hospital).
After Admission ...	Return to be made by Medical Officer quarterly—Rule 32.
Books and Records...	S. 54 —by Visiting Guardians.
General Visitation ...	S. 54 —by Guardians. S. 202—by Medical Officer of Institution. S. 203—by Commissioners.
Special Visits ...	S. 204—by competent person by Order of Commissioners. S. 47 —by friends.
Discharge ...	S. 81 —by Guardians.

N.B.—References to Sections mean Sections in the Lunacy Act, 1890, unless otherwise specified.

References to Rules mean Rules made by the Commissioners in Lunacy, dated 26th June, 1895, unless otherwise specified.

NOTE.—Since this statement was prepared, the Commissioners' Rules of 26th June, 1895, and 31st October, 1906, have been superseded by revised Rules dated 7th January, 1925. These Rules are designed to effect some simplification of the records and returns, but do not affect in substance the safeguards provided under the previous Rules.

APPENDIX II.

Questions 186 & 229.

RECEPTION DOCUMENTS RETURNED AFTER EXAMINATION BY BOARD OF CONTROL.

The following is a Summary of the result of the Examination of Reception Documents by the Board during the period 11th February to 11th April, 1925.

The number of Admissions in the period was approximately 3,400 in number.

The certificates returned during the period were 92 in number. These are divided into three classes:—

- (1) Cases in which the facts indicative of insanity stated by the certifiers to be observed by them at the time of examination did not seem to the Board to justify compulsory detention.
- (2) Cases in which, though symptoms indicative of insanity were observed, there might in the absence of further evidence be room for doubt as to the need for detention.
- (3) Cases in which the certificates indicated insanity, but amplification was desirable.

In Class (1), in three cases the certificate was un-amended, and the Board wrote recommending that the patient should be discharged and, if necessary, re-certified. One of the patients was discharged "Recovered," one was re-certified, and the third died before further action could be taken.

In Classes (2) and (3) all the certificates were amended with six exceptions. In these six cases the doctors were unable to amplify the certificates, but the Board did not consider that this was in itself sufficient to invalidate them, having regard to the other particulars in the documents which pointed to the need for certification. It should be added that although the patients were admitted to Mental Hospitals in February or March of this year, none has since improved sufficiently to warrant discharge.

24 August, 1925.

APPENDIX III.

Question 464.

PARTICULARS OF PATIENTS ALLOWED LEAVE OF ABSENCE ON TRIAL DURING THE YEAR 1923.
(Obtained from six typical County and Borough Mental Hospitals.)

Name of Institution.	Total Number of Patients on Jan. 1, 1923.	Total Number allowed leave on trial during 1923.	Number whose leave was followed by discharge.		Number returned to the Institution as being found unfit for discharge or to remain on trial.		Died whilst on trial.
			Recovered.	Relieved.	During the period of trial.	On expiry of leave on trial.
Essex : Brentwood	1,686	188	33	141	12	2	—
London : Bexley	2,099	108	80	17	10	1	—
East Sussex	1,135	94	79	—	11	3	1
Yorks, W.R. : Wadsley	1,554	202	142	45	15	—	—
Birmingham : Winson Green	762	100	74	12	14	—	—
Nottingham City	842	105	90	4	10	1	—
Total	8,078	797	498	219	72	7	1

APPENDIX IV.

APPENDIX V.

Question 683.

Question 1028.

PROSECUTIONS UNDER THE LUNACY ACTS DURING THE
5 YEARS, 1919-1923.

A. On Order of Board of Control	13	} 22
B. At instance of Visiting Committees	9

Ill-treatment of Patients.

(A) Six prosecutions on Order of Board of Control, involving seven persons.	1890	68	3	71
	1891	51	1	52
	1892	39	4	43
	1893	32	2	34
	1894	45	3	48
(B) Eight prosecutions at instance of Visiting Com- mittees, involving eight persons.	1895	42	4	46
	1896	37	3	40
	1897	39	4	43
	1898	29	3	32
	1899	24	5	29

Stealing from a Patient.

One prosecution at instance of Visiting Committee, involving two persons.	1900	15	4	19
	1901	7	2	9
	1902	14	2	16
	1903	13	Nil	13
	1904	14	2	16

Illegal receptions (Section 315 of Lunacy Act, 1890).

Six prosecutions on Order of Board of Control, in- volving six persons.	1905	18	1	19
	1906	15	2	17
	1907	28	2	30
	1908	19	1	20
	1909	8	Nil	8

*Omission to transmit documents to Board
(Section 316).*

One prosecution on Order of Board of Control, in- volving one person.	1910	6	Nil	6
	1911	5	Nil	5
	1912	5	Nil	5
	1913	Nil	Nil	Nil
	1914	3	Nil	3
	1915	1	Nil	1
	1916	Nil	Nil	Nil
	1917	Nil	Nil	Nil
	1918	Nil	Nil	Nil
	1919	3	Nil	3
	1920	1	Nil	1
	1921	Nil	Nil	Nil
	1922	1	Nil	1
	1923	2	Nil	2

RETURN OF INQUISITIONS HELD SINCE 1890.
Year.			Without Juries.	With Juries.	Number of Inquisitions each year with and without Juries.
1890	68	3	71
1891	51	1	52
1892	39	4	43
1893	32	2	34
1894	45	3	48
1895	42	4	46
1896	37	3	40
1897	39	4	43
1898	29	3	32
1899	24	5	29
1900	15	4	19
1901	7	2	9
1902	14	2	16
1903	13	Nil	13
1904	14	2	16
1905	18	1	19
1906	15	2	17
1907	28	2	30
1908	19	1	20
1909	8	Nil	8
1910	6	Nil	6
1911	5	Nil	5
1912	5	Nil	5
1913	Nil	Nil	Nil
1914	3	Nil	3
1915	1	Nil	1
1916	Nil	Nil	Nil
1917	Nil	Nil	Nil
1918	Nil	Nil	Nil
1919	3	Nil	3
1920	1	Nil	1
1921	Nil	Nil	Nil
1922	1	Nil	1
1923	2	Nil	2
			584	48	Grand } 632 Total }

Inquisition cases at 31st December, 1923-221.

Trials of Issue.

1906	1
1910	1

APPENDIX VI.

Question 1473.

POWERS AND DUTIES TRANSFERRED TO THE MINISTER UNDER THE TRANSFER OF POWERS ORDER, 1920.

1. Personal.—The powers of the Minister in regard to the lunatic personally are as follows:—

Lunacy Act, 1890.

Section 33.—Power to direct a medical Commissioner or visitor to visit a patient with a view to signing reception certificate (such Commissioner or visitor being otherwise debarred from signing such a certificate).

Section 41 (1).—The manager of every institution is required to forward unopened all letters addressed to the Minister (among others).

Section 43 (2).—Power to direct a medical Commissioner or visitor to visit a patient in a hospital or licensed house to attend him professionally.

2. Local Authorities and Visiting Committees.—The powers of the Minister of Health in regard to the activities of local authorities and visiting committees are:—

Lunacy Act, 1890.

Section 242 (3).—Approval required to any agreement by local authorities to unite for the purpose of providing asylum accommodation.

Section 243 (4).—Approval required to contracts between a County Borough Council and visiting committees for the reception of pauper lunatics into their asylum.

Section 247.—The Minister may require a local authority to provide asylum accommodation in case of default.

Section 250.—Power to sanction the variation of any agreement between local authorities to unite.

Section 254 (2) and (4).—Approval required to plans and contracts of visiting committees for the purchase of lands and buildings and for the erection, restoration and enlargement of buildings; and power vested in the Minister to determine differences between local authorities in regard to the approval of any such plan or contract.

Section 255.—Approval required to the provision in an asylum of accommodation for private lunatics.

Section 258 (1).—Consent required to the provision made for the burial of lunatics dying in an asylum.

Section 265.—Consent required to the retention and appropriation of land or buildings not required for asylum purposes.

Section 267 (1) and (4).—Consent required to the dissolution of an agreement to unite and to the division of property held for the purposes of the agreement among the several local authorities.

Section 268 (1).—Consent required to the cancellation of contracts for the purpose or exchange of lands by visiting committee.

Section 269 (4) and (5).—Consent required to the making of a contract or determination thereof by a visiting committee for the reception of lunatics in a licensed house or asylum of another visiting committee. Minister has power to determine such a contract.

Section 272.—The Minister is empowered to approve with or without modification or to refuse approval to any agreement contract or plan requiring approval under the Lunacy Act.

Section 275 (1) and (2).—Approval required to the general rules which the visiting committee must make for the government of their asylum. Any alteration or variation in the rules requires the Minister's approval.

Section 276 (1) (c).—Approval required if a local authority wish to appoint as superintendent of an asylum some one other than a medical officer.

3. Powers of the Minister in relation to the Board of Control.

(a) Direct powers.

Mental Deficiency Act.

Section 22, Subsections (2), (3), (5), (6), (7) and (8).—It rests with the Minister to recommend the non-legal commissioners of the Board of Control for appointment by His Majesty; to appoint the Chairman of the Board; to make regulations as to administrative committee and procedure of the Board; to determine with the consent of the Treasury the salaries of commissioners, to determine the term of office of unpaid commissioners.

Section 23.—The Minister, subject to the concurrence of the Treasury, approves the appointment, number and salaries of secretary, inspectors, officers and servants of the Board of Control.

(b) Overriding powers.

Lunacy Act, 1890.

Section 226.—Sanction of the Minister required to regulations made by Board of Control for the government of any licensed house.

Section 231.—On an application for registration of a hospital for lunatics, the Board of Control submit a report to the Minister of Health if they are of opinion that registration should not be granted, and the Minister decides finally thereon. If registration is granted, the Minister of Health approves the regulations for the management of the hospital.

Section 237 (3).—Consent of the Minister required to Order of Board that a registered hospital be closed.

4. Power to direct prosecution.

Lunacy Act, 1890.

Section 328.—The Minister may direct the Attorney-General to prosecute any person alleged to have committed a misdemeanour under the Act.

APPENDIX VII.

Question 1669.

STATEMENT showing the number of Persons admitted to the Workhouse of an East London Parish (Population 118,000) under Section 20 of the Lunacy Act, 1890, from 1st January, 1923, to 30th September, 1924, with the result of observation and detention ; also the number of days during which the person remained.
(NOTE.—These persons are not “detained” in the legal sense after the period authorised by law. They remain as patients for treatment or observation with their consent or that of their relatives.)

Discharged or Certified :						Certified.		Discharged.
						Male.	Female.	Male.	Female.
Within three days	25	26	7	1
On 5th day	—	—	2	1
" 6th "	—	—	3	1
" 7th "	1	—	2	1
" 8th "	—	2	4	—
" 9th "	1	—	3	—
" 10th "	2	—	3	—
" 11th "	—	1	2	—
" 12th "	2	1	3	1
" 13th "	1	—	2	—
" 14th "	1	1	3	2
" 15th "	1	—	—	—
" 16th "	—	1	1	1
" 17th "	—	—	2	1
" 18th "	2	—	1	—
" 19th "	—	—	—	2
" 20th "	—	1	—	—
" 21st "	—	1	1	3
" 22nd "	—	—	—	—
" 23rd "	—	—	1	—
" 24th "	—	—	1	1
" 25th "	—	—	—	—
" 26th "	—	—	2	1
" 27th "	—	—	—	—
" 28th "	—	—	—	—
" 29th "	—	—	—	—
" 30th "	—	—	—	1
" 43rd "	—	—	—	1
" 60th "	—	—	—	1
						36	34	43	19

132

Notes.—(a) 120 admitted by Relieving Officers ; 13 admitted by Police.
(b) During the same period 34 persons (9 male and 25 female) were the subject of Reception Orders from among the ordinary inmates of the Workhouse or Hospital. A considerable number of these inmates would also be under observation, but no figures of these are available. In both these classes there would be included persons who had originally been admitted under Section 20.

APPENDIX VIII.

Question 2288.

BIRMINGHAM UNION.

Mental cases reported in the year 1923.

Total number reported to Relieving Officer in the year 1923	638
Medically examined at home :—
Certified, Winson Green Asylum	222
Certified, Rubery Hill Asylum	299
Not certified	106
Removed to Erdington Workhouse under Section 21...	11
Of whom were certified	3
And not certified	8
Total certified	524
Total not certified	114
Total reported as above	638

APPENDIX IX.

Question 2304.

BIRMINGHAM UNION.

Costs of Visits for Certification and Removal.

									£	s.	d.
Per case visited by Medical Officer to the Justices	1	11	6
Per case visited by District Medical Officers attached to the Union	1	1	0
Relieving Officer's Assistant	0	2	6
Taxi-fare, Winson Green Asylum (on average)	0	8	6
Taxi-fare, Rubery Hill Asylum (on average)...	0	18	0
Magistrate's Official Fee (not personal)	0	5	0

APPENDIX X.

Question 2787.

LIST OF PATIENTS ADMITTED TO LAMBETH INFIRMARY UNDER SECTION 20, LUNACY ACT, FROM GENERAL HOSPITALS BETWEEN 31ST MARCH AND 10TH NOVEMBER, 1924.

From St. Thomas's Hospital.

1. A.R.H., male, aged 31, admitted 1.5.24, suffering from ? lymphadenoma; very violent; certified, order suspended; transferred to Banstead 20.5.24, as mental disorder did not clear up and there was no suitable accommodation here; physical condition had improved.

2. T.W., male, aged 41, admitted 5.6.24, suffering from fractured base and concussion; certified, order suspended and allowed to lapse; took his discharge 8.7.24.

3. A.H.W.A., male, 25, admitted 27.6.24, suffering from diabetes and insanity; certified and transferred to Banstead 7.7.24.

4. E.B., female, aged 60, admitted 11.7.24, suffering from insanity; certified and transferred to Cane Hill 23.7.24.

5. E.L.M.C., female, aged 45, admitted 20.5.24, suffering from mental disorder of a harmless type; certified, order suspended; re-certified under Section 24 and transferred to Tooting Bec 15.7.24.

6. H.G., male, aged 32, admitted 30th July suffering from general paralysis of the insane; certified and transferred to Cane Hill on the 2nd August.

7. W.S., female, aged 50, admitted 1.8.24, suffering from alcoholism; took her discharge 7.8.24.

8. W.B., male, aged 47, suffering from carcinoma of rectum; admitted 9th August; certified and transferred to West Park 15.8.24.

9. A.G., male 29, admitted 11.8.24, suffering from gonorrhoeal arthritis and mental disorder; certified, order suspended and allowed to lapse; still in hospital.

10. G.L., male, aged 59, admitted 24.9.24, suffering from acute glaucoma and some mental disorder; not certified; remaining in hospital pending settlement.

From King's College Hospital.

1. L.R., female, aged 38, admitted 18th August, suffering from pernicious anaemia and mental disorder; certified, order suspended, unfit for removal; died 28th August; formally reported to the Coroner, no inquest held. This was a case which it was considered proper for the hospital authorities to detain as she was, in the medical officer's opinion, unfit to be removed here. She was placed on the Danger List on admission and is believed to have been on the Danger List while at King's College.

2. G.F.O., male, aged 67, admitted 1.11.24, suffering from uraemia and mental disorder; certified, order suspended, unfit to be removed to mental hospital.

3. F.W., male, aged 50, admitted 10th October, suffering from fractured base and concussion of brain; certified—re-certified as harmless and transferred to Tooting Bec 27.10.24.

APPENDIX XI.

Question 3119.

SALFORD UNION INFIRMARY.

Mental Wards.

Revised Statistics of Patients dealt with during 1923.

	Male.	Female.	Total.
Admissions—
(a) On 3 Day Order (Sec. 20)...	200	171	371
(b) On Justice's Order (Sec. 21) ...	2	10	12
(c) On Resident M.O.'s Order (Sec. 24 (1))...	38	49	87
	240	230	470
Placed on Permanent Detention—
(a) During 3 Day Order ...	—	—	—
(b) During 17 days ...	59	44	103
Transferred to Asylum—
(a) During 3 Day Order ...	14	27	41
(b) During 17 days ...	29	43	72
Died—
(a) During 3 Day Order ...	5	2	7
(b) During 17 days ...	11	14	25
Discharged—
1. To care of Relatives—
(a) During 3 Day Order ...	26	1	27
(b) During 17 days ...	31	31	62
2. To General Wards—
(a) During 3 Day Order ...	22	7	29
(b) During 17 days ...	16	39	55
3. To Poor Law Institution—
(a) During 3 Day Order ...	4	4	8
(b) During 17 days ...	23	18	41
	240	230	470
Patients on Permanent Detention—
1. Transferred to Asylum ...	11	8	19
2. Died ...	18	13	31
3. Discharged—
(a) To care of Relatives ...	8	2	10
(b) To General Wards ...	5	2	7
(c) To Poor Law Institution ...	—	—	—

APPENDIX XII.

Question 3468.

SOUTHAMPTON UNION.

Analysis of cases of alleged lunatics admitted to the mental wards of the Poor Law Institutions during the year ended 30th September, 1924.

Total number admitted during the year, 306.

	Within 3 days.	Within 7 days.	Within 14 days.	Within 17 days.
Discharged to Mental Hospital	23	28	19	16
" " Union Infirmary	8	4	7	6
" care of friends	16	9	14	9
" recovered	7	10	9	10
" to Institution	1	4	5	6
Died	4	—	—	4
Placed under Detention Order (Section 24)	—	—	10	48
Totals	59	55	64	99
				277
Total analysed above				277
Aliens admitted under Deportation Law, U.S.A.				29
				306

Note.—Two only of the aliens were transferred to a mental hospital. The remainder were removed to their own country by the shipping company.

APPENDIX XIII.

Question 4930.

Extract from the London County Council (Parks, &c.) Act, 1915.

PART III.

MAUDSLEY HOSPITAL.

6.—(1) The visiting committee of the Council may, if they think fit, receive and lodge as a boarder and maintain and treat at the Maudsley Hospital on such terms and conditions as to payment and otherwise as they may determine any person suffering from incipient insanity or mental infirmity who is desirous of voluntarily submitting himself to treatment therefor.

(2) The Council may, if they think fit, defray the whole or any part of the expenses of the maintenance and treatment in the said hospital of any such person as a voluntary boarder.

(3) Rules made under Sub-section (1) of Section 338 of the Lunacy Act, 1890, may prescribe the books, entries, reports, notices and other documents to be kept and made in respect of boarders in the said hospital.

(4) A voluntary boarder in the said hospital shall be at liberty to leave the said hospital on giving 24 hours' notice of his intention to do so.

7. Notwithstanding anything contained in Section 276 of the Lunacy Act, 1890, the medical superintendent of the Maudsley Hospital shall not be required to reside therein so long as arrangements approved by the Board of Control are made for his residence elsewhere.

APPENDIX XIII(a).

Extract from the City of London (Various Powers) Act, 1924.

PART V.

MENTAL HOSPITALS.

8.—(1) The Visiting Committee of the Corporation may, if they think fit, receive and lodge as a boarder and maintain and treat at any mental hospital now or hereafter belonging to the Corporation, and on such terms and conditions as to payment and otherwise as they may determine any person suffering from incipient insanity or mental infirmity who is desirous of voluntarily submitting himself to treatment therefor.

(2) The Corporation may, if they think fit, defray the whole or any part of the expenses of the maintenance and treatment in any such hospital of any such person as a voluntary boarder.

(3) Rules made under Sub-section (1) of Section 338 of the Lunacy Act, 1890, shall prescribe the books, entries, reports, notices and other documents to be kept and made in respect of boarders in any such hospital.

(4) A voluntary boarder in any such hospital shall be at liberty to leave the hospital on giving forty-eight hours' notice of his intention to do so.

APPENDIX XIV.

Question 5015.

LONDON COUNTY MENTAL HOSPITALS.

Particulars of six patients admitted during 1923 who were found to be "not insane."

Mental Hospital.	Sex of Patient.	Admitted from.	Date of Admission.	Date of Discharge.	Facts indicating insanity as appearing on Reception Order.	Mental Hospitals' Medical Superintendents' grounds for conclusion that patient should not be detained as insane.
Bexley	Female	H.M. Prison, Holloway, as a criminal patient	2.3.23	18.5.23	Violent—Delusions of persecution, says that all officers of the prison are against her and want to do her injury. Will not converse rationally, is quite unreasonable and morbidly suspicious. (Facts communicated by others) Hospital lady superintendent states patient has been very violent, broken her crockery and considers everybody is against her and that her illness (gastritis) has been caused by neglect of nurses.	After prolonged observation the Medical Superintendent reported that patient's conduct had been correct and she had given no trouble of any kind. Her explanation of conduct at Holloway was that she believed she was unfairly prevented from seeing Prison Committee for the purpose of making complaints against the officials and she regarded her certification as an attempt to discredit her accusations of improper treatment. He regarded the patient as a borderland case; an abnormal personality of the querulent type and although she might eventually develop definite symptoms she was not then insane and was not a fit and proper person to be detained in a mental hospital. Representations were made to the Home Secretary and patient was returned to prison. The patient gained weight and improved physically during stay at the mental hospital.
Banstead	Male	Kensington Infirmary	6.3.23	9.4.23	Excited. States he was going to end his life. Made rambling statements about the police and people in the street. (Communicated by others) Police constable says he saw patient wandering about and speaking to passers-by. He questioned him and he said he was going to do himself in. Infirmary attendant says patient is excitable and very loquacious.	On March 13th, 1923, Medical Superintendent reported to Commissioners that patient was loquacious but coherent and had been well behaved since his admission. Patient stated that when found loitering in a London square he was trying to attract the attention of his fiancée, a servant there. His razor was found on him at the police station and when asked by the officer whether he meant to do himself in he replied, in bravado, that he did. The Medical Superintendent reported to the Commissioners, 21 days afterwards, that the patient had remained coherent and rational, had behaved well and would be recommended for discharge as "not insane." His discharge took place on 9th April, 1923. Note. —Patient was previously a patient at Banstead and was transferred to Hanwell Mental Hospital (June, 1913, to end of 1919). His mother had been a patient at Banstead.
Banstead	Female	Lambeth Infirmary	28.11.23	6.12.23	Patient sullen and morose, refused to be examined or have any treatment which is absolutely necessary for her health and for the unborn child. (No facts communicated by others)	Medical Superintendent reported to Commissioners that patient's behaviour since admission had been correct and she presented no signs of mental disorder. She was pregnant and admitted that she objected to vulval examination by a nurse at the Infirmary. She was recommended to the Sub-Committee for discharge as "not insane" which took effect on the 6th December, 1923.
Banstead	Female	Lambeth Infirmary	8.9.23	24.9.23	Has suffered from encephalitis lethargica; is very irresponsible, irritable, and cannot control herself; has contracted gonorrhoea and syphilis, and is pregnant. (No facts communicated by others)	The Medical Superintendent in report to Commissioners stated that since admission the patient's behaviour had been correct and her conversation normal. She stated that she was 7 months pregnant; that she had been an in-patient in the Infirmary since June, 1923, undergoing anti-syphilitical treatment. Recently she got "fed up," lost her temper with a nurse and threw her medicine card on the floor. Patient's condition remained as when admitted; quite rational, showing no signs of irritability whatever. Cheerful and grateful for whatever is done for her. Discharged (24.9.23) "not insane."

Cane Hill	...	Female	Woolwich Infirmary	2.5.23	11.5.23	Patient says that her husband is lazy and useless, that she has to do all the work of her house and business and that he does nothing; is incensed against him in every respect and will not see or speak to him here (the infirmary). The Board of Control asked that further facts should be stated. The certifying doctor replied that he had "nothing further to add to his certificate." This was communicated to the Board of Control but no further action was taken as the patient was discharged. (Facts communicated by others) Her husband says that she has been violent and "maniac" for some time past, shouting at her neighbours, abusing people who go to their shop, suspicious of every woman who goes there, and throws things at him when he is serving them. Deluded that everyone in London is down upon him saying "there he goes" in disparaging fashion and refusing to be sociable with him. Feels distressed and desperate and not able to be responsible for what he might do to himself owing to everybody's attitude towards him. Shows considerable emotion when describing all this constant suffering for same thing over the last three months. (Communicated by others) Brother-in-law states patient has suffered from attacks of malaria frequently since his discharge from the Army in 1919. In these attacks appears to be semi-conscious, is not violent to himself or others. Patient was in India for 7 or 8 years. Malaria was cause of his discharge from Army. Usually he is quite quiet and inoffensive. Co-worker states patient came to report for duty and asked to see Superintendent and in his presence made rambling statements about being followed, of people talking about him. Wanted to be put away from everybody and if he had a pistol would shoot himself.
Cane Hill	...	Male	Wandsworth Infirmary	25.9.23	11.10.23	The Medical Superintendent formed the opinion that there had probably been some trouble between the patient and her husband, but he was unable to find any mental symptoms which would justify her detention in a mental hospital. Her conduct and behaviour from time of admission to the date on which he examined her (9.5.23) had been rational and exemplary. The Clerk to the Guardians was communicated with by telephone, informed that the patient had been found not insane, and asked to arrange for her removal. Medical Superintendent unable to find any symptoms of insanity. According to the notes of the ward and the Medical Officer's examination after admission the patient had shown no such signs except that he had been rather sleepless for the first two nights after admission. The Medical Superintendent formed the opinion that the man had had a slight delirious attack, probably the result of his malaria, which had passed off. The attention of the Guardians was not called to the case, as between the date of the patient's admission and discharge he was transferred to the "Service" class and classified as a private patient. He was discharged 16 days after admission.

APPENDIX XV.

Question 5049.

LONDON COUNTY MENTAL HOSPITALS.

Statement as to complaints made during the year 1923 affecting the treatment of patients which necessitated formal enquiry.

Name of Hospital.	Date of complaint.	Nature of complaint.	By whom made.	Whether complaint originated from patient.	Action taken thereon by hospital sub-committee.
Banstead ...	29-1-23	Patient (F.) slapped.	A probationer nurse.	No.	Probationer nurse dismissed.
	19-6-23	Patient (F.) struck.	A nurse.	No.	No evidence that the nurse deliberately struck the patient.
Bexley ...	6-1-23	Patient's (F.) face smacked.	Head female nurse.	No.	Nurse dismissed.
	8-1-23	Patient's (F.) head struck.	Head female nurse.	No.	Nurse dismissed.
	1-7-23	Patient (M) told his mother that he had been cruelly treated and banged on floor by male nurses.	Patient.	Yes.	Reported to sub-committee who found that there was no truth in the allegations.
	6-8-23	Patient's (F.) head banged on floor.	Four other patients.	Other patients.	Reported to sub-committee, who found that nurse used undue force, not amounting to ill-treatment.
	28-8-23	Patient's (F.) hair pulled and patient smacked.	Three other patients.	Other patients.	Nurse reduced in rank. Reported to sub-committee. Case "not proven."
Cane Hill ...	5-11-23 and onwards	Gross ill-treatment of patient (F.).	An uncle by marriage.	It is believed that it did.	The Sub-Committee (who saw the patient) were quite satisfied that the allegations of ill-treatment were baseless.
Claybury ...	2-12-23	Twisting of patient's (F.) wrist.	A probationer nurse.	No.	A full enquiry was made by the medical superintendent; all the nurses concerned being seen and the charges investigated.
Colney Hatch	17-8-23	Alleged ill-treatment of patient (M.).	An assistant doctor who reported that he had seen a male staff nurse striking the patient.	No.	The medical superintendent came to the conclusion that there was not sufficient evidence to support the charges and so reported to the Sub-Committee.
					Staff nurse suspended from 17-8-23 by acting medical superintendent. The Sub-Committee after investigation were satisfied that the staff nurse in question struck the patient.
Hanwell ...	27-3-23	Accused of throwing a porringer of water over naked patient (M.) who was standing by bathroom door.	An inspector.	No.	The nurse's suspension was confirmed, but in view of his previous excellent record the suspension was removed from 31-8-23 and the nurse re-instated in the service from the latter date.
					The nurse was not paid wages during the 14 days he was suspended.
					The Sub-Committee decided that as there was no direct evidence that nurse threw water over the patient he should be given the benefit of the doubt.
					Nurse informed that had there been evidence he would have been dismissed.

Name of Hospital.	Date of complaint.	Nature of complaint.	By whom made.	Whether complaint originated from patient.	Action taken thereon by hospital sub-committee.
Hanwell ...	14-7-23	Accused of striking patient (M.) with fist on the jaw. Patient sustained fracture of jaw.	Patient to the medical superintendent.	Yes.	The sub-committee were of opinion that the accusation made by patient was groundless.
Horton ...	29-4-23	Patient (F.) hit by a nurse.	A nurse.	No.	The sub-committee thought the complaint was groundless.
	30-4-23	Patient (F.) smacked by a nurse (acting charge nurse).	A nurse.	No.	The sub-committee reduced the acting charge nurse to rank of probationer.
	20-9-23	Patient (F.) seized by the hair and shaken by a temporary probationer nurse.	Assistant matron.	No.	Sub-committee not very satisfied with evidence, but concluded that nurse was "unsuitable"; nurse's services terminated.
Long Grove	28-2-23	Patient (M.) roughly handled and ill-treated by staff.	Patient's mother.	Yes.	Sub-committee found that there had been no ill-treatment.
	16-3-23	Patient(F.) "tapped" on the head with a slipper, with which patient was about to smash a pane of glass.	Another patient who reported to Head Nurse before the accused nurse had the opportunity.	No.	Nurse reprimanded and cautioned.
	8-5-23	Patient's (F.) face smacked.	Patient.	Yes.	Nurse seen by the medical superintendent and given a week's notice as being unsuitable.
	12-8-23	Patient (M) roughly treated by night nurse, which resulted in injury to patient's scrotum.	Patient.	—	Sub-committee satisfied injury was self-inflicted but admonished night charge and acting day charge nurses for failure to report promptly and in the proper manner an injury sustained by a patient.

APPENDIX XVI.

Question 5380.

RUBERY HILL AND HOLLYMOOR MENTAL HOSPITAL, BIRMINGHAM.

1,421 Beds.

Re-admission Statistics.

During the year 1924, 60 persons who had been previously discharged were re-admitted to the hospital after certification. Some of these were certified more than once in the course of that year. The 60 persons thus provided 65 cases of re-admission: 25 male cases and 40 female cases. The intervals between the discharge and re-admission in respect of these 65 cases are set out in the following table:—

—	M.	F.	T.
After 12 -20 years ...	4	2	6
" 9 -12 " ...	—	3	3
" 6 - 7 " ...	2	—	2
" 4 - 5 " ...	2	2	4
" 2 - 3 " ...	5	2	7
" 1½ - 2 " ...	—	3	3
" 1 - 1½ " ...	2	6	8
One year and under ...	10	22	32
	25	40	65

One year and under re-admissions.

During 1924, 29 persons, 19 females and 10 males, who had been unable to stay out 12 months and under were re-admitted, making 32 re-admissions, 10 male and 22 female, on recertification, after total discharge which, in some cases, followed a period of trial.

16 re-admissions had one previous certification, 50 per cent.

9 re-admissions had two previous certifications.

5 " " three " "

1 " " four " "

1 " " five " "

A total of 32 re-admissions had had 53 previous certifications.

Ages of Persons Re-admitted on the last Admission.

29 persons who had been unable to stay out one year and under were aged on re-admission as set out in the following age group:—

—	M.	F.	T.
Over 70 years ...	—	1	1
Between 60-70 years of age	2	2	4
" 50-60 " "	1	5	6
" 40-50 " "	3	4	7
" 30-40 " "	2	3	5
" 20-30 " "	2	3	5
" 15-20 " "	—	1	1
	10	19	29

Locale of Re-admissions on Recertification.

Of the 32 re-admissions—
26 came directly from their homes.
3 came directly from the lock-up.
3 came directly from the Guardians Institutions.

Duration of the Non-Certified state outside.

3	stayed out less than one month	After discharge from Hospital Books.
6	“ “ one month
6	“ “ two months
5	“ “ four months
4	“ “ six months
1	“ “ eight months
5	“ “ ten months
2	“ “ twelve months
32

Fifteen of the above re-admissions had been discharged from the books after a month's trial.
In one case, if the trial period were added, the patient then would be regarded as having stayed out more than a year. In one of the cases, discharged from another Hospital, the trial period had been 13 weeks.

Condition on Previous Discharge.

Of the 32 re-admissions four had previously been discharged from other hospitals, and in order to give the figures for comparison with the totals on another page of discharges from this hospital, the following figures are submitted concerning the 28 discharged previously from here:

—	Recovered.	Relieved.	Not Improved.
Male ...	7	3	—
Female ...	9	8	1
	16	11	1

Of the 16 “Recovered” cases, 13 had been discharged after a month's trial. The remaining three were discharged outright, two to go to the Guardians.
Of those in the “Relieved” category, two had been discharged after a month's trial.

Those discharged and re-admitted during 1924.

—	Recovered.	Relieved.	Not Improved.
Male ...	3	2	—
Female ...	6	7	1
	9	9	1

Relation of Special Treatment to Discharges and Re-admission.

In three males and five females permission had been given by relatives and patients to deal with chronic septic foci and they had shown sufficient improvement following to warrant a month's trial although it was recognised that other foci existed.

All, except one male and one female, were better physically and mentally on re-admission than on the previous admission, e.g., J.E.A.

	st. lbs.
Weight on former admission ...	7 13
On discharge	9 1½
Weight on present admission ...	8 10½

In one of these cases, who, with her trial period, stayed out a year pregnancy occurred and this added physical stress undoubtedly was responsible for the breakdown. The remaining cases were either unsuitable for or refused special treatment, when offered.

APPENDIX XVII.

Question 5845.

THE RETREAT, YORK.

Average Duration of Residence of Voluntary Boarders.

Between 1st January, 1920, and 31st December, 1924, 232 voluntary boarders were admitted to the Retreat.

Of these, 86 stayed under 1 month.
37 “ from 1 to 2 months.
31 “ “ 2 “ 3 “
35 “ “ 3 “ 6 “
5 “ “ 6 “ 9 “
3 “ “ 9 “ 12 “
4 “ over a year.
201

Of the 31 remaining on 31st December, 1924,
9 had been in residence over a year.
4 “ “ “ “ from 6 to 12 months.
10 “ “ “ “ “ 3 “ 6 “
7 “ “ “ “ “ 1 “ 3 “
1 “ “ “ “ “ under 1 month.

The average duration of stay of those boarders who entered and left the Retreat within the period from 1st January, 1920, to 31st December, 1924, was 2 months 3 weeks.

APPENDIX XVIII.

APPENDIX XIX.

Question 6299.

TOWNSHIP OF LEEDS.

Lunacy Act, 1890.

Summary of Patients dealt with by the various District Relieving Officers during the years ended 31st March.

Period.	Number of Patients Certified.			Cases not Certified.	Total Number of Patients dealt with.
	Sec. 13.	Sec. 14.	Sec. 24.
1916 ...	16	138	55	47	256
1917 ...	8	136	92	42	278
1918 ...	2	122	65	56	245
1919 ...	1	129	17	40	187
1920 ...	15	139	48	43	245
1921 ...	26	169	67	54	316
1922 ...	29	160	29	46	264
1923 ...	17	178	53	26	274
1924 ...	16	140	29	35	220
	130	1,311	455	389	2,285

ROCHDALE UNION.

Lunacy Act, 1890.

Summary of patients dealt with by the Lunacy Officers of the Rochdale Union during the years 1916-1924.

Period.	Number of Patients Certified.			Cases not Certified.	Total Number dealt with.
	Sec. 13.	Sec. 14.	Sec. 24.
1916 ...	0	40	22	2	64
1917 ...	2	35	21	1	59
1918 ...	1	28	12	1	42
1919 ...	2	35	10	1	48
1920 ...	1	37	22	0	60
1921 ...	0	40	10	1	51
1922 ...	6	61	9	1	77
1923 ...	19	34	24	7	84
1924 ...	29	13	7	9	58
	60	323	137	23	543

SHEFFIELD UNION.

Lunacy Act, 1890.

Summary of patients dealt with by the various District Relieving Officers during the period commencing 11th January, 1916, and ending 17th December, 1924.

Period.	Number of patients Certified.			Patients not certified.	Total Number of patients dealt with.
	Sec. 13.	Sec. 14.	Sec. 24.
1916 ...	12	157	73	52	294
1917 ...	9	136	70	30	245
1918 ...	14	170	47	23	254
1919 ...	11	163	49	28	251
1920 ...	18	165	62	33	278
1921 ...	23	219	43	34	319
1922 ...	18	243	32	38	331
1923 ...	17	231	25	51	324
1924 ...	11	207	24	105	347
Total ..	133	1,691	425	394	2,643

Question 6463.

Camberwell House.
27th October, 1925.

DEAR SIR,

ON a perusal of the evidence, which I had the honour of giving before the Royal Commission on the 16th of December last, I desire, in order to avoid misconception, to modify certain replies which I then gave. It is the fact that I am not, and never have been, a medical proprietor of Camberwell House, or of any other licensed house, but it is right to mention that, in recognition of 30 years' service, as Assistant Medical Officer and Medical Superintendent, I was permitted to acquire at par 1,996 £1 shares in the company, and these shares I have since held; and further, that as part of my emoluments I receive a bonus of 10 per cent. on the profits of Camberwell House, which bonus has in recent years substantially exceeded my salary. I do not, however, on this account regard myself as a medical proprietor, having in view that I am engaged, paid, and can be dismissed by the Directors of the Company, and that, not being a Director myself, I have no voice, except an advisory one, in the allocation of the profits of the Company.

Yours faithfully,
(Signed) FRANCIS H. EDWARDS.

The Secretary,
Royal Commission on Lunacy
and Mental Disorder,
Ministry of Health,
Whitehall, S.W.1.

APPENDIX XX.

Question 6876.

THE OLD MANOR, SALISBURY.

Voluntary Boarders.

	1923.		1924.
	M.	F.	M.	F.
Admitted during the Quarter ended :—
March	6	6	5	7
June	4	7	6	4
September	2	8	4	9
December	—	2	2	8
	12	23	17	28
	35		45

Although the admissions during the year 1924 were only ten more than during the year 1923, the number of applications during the latter part of 1924 for Voluntary Boarders, who from the descriptions given were unsuitable, was far in excess of any previous year.

APPENDIX XXI.

Questions 7196 & 7547.
CLAYBURY MENTAL HOSPITAL.
Patients discharged recovered during the years 1920 to 1924, inclusive.

	Totals.
	M.	F.	T.
Under 1 month .	3	—	3	} Maximum quin- quennium (3 to 8 months).
1 to 2 months ...	9	2	11
2 " 3 " ...	29	20	49
3 " 4 " ...	35	36	71
4 " 5 " ...	33	43	76
5 " 6 " ...	26	57	83
6 " 7 " ...	21	38	59
7 " 8 " ...	21	46	67
8 " 9 " ...	19	28	47
9 " 10 " ...	13	15	28
10 " 11 " ...	6	16	22
11 " 12 " ...	9	16	25
12 " 15 " ...	19	20	39
15 " 18 " ...	10	23	33
18 " 21 " ...	13	13	26
21 " 24 " ...	8	15	23
2 " 3 years ...	12	25	37
3 " 4 " ...	9	12	21
4 " 5 " ...	10	6	16
5 " 6 " ...	6	8	14
6 " 7 " ...	3	4	7
7 " 8 " ...	2	2	4
8 " 9 " ...	1	3	4
9 " 10 " ...	2	2	4
10 " 15 " ...	7	6	13
15 " 20 " ...	1	5	6
20 " 25 " ...	1	—	1
25 " 30 " ...	—	3	3
	328	464	792

APPENDIX XXII.

Question 7796.
MEMORANDUM OF THE EVIDENCE TO BE GIVEN ON BEHALF OF THE BRITISH MEDICAL ASSOCIATION.

INTRODUCTORY.

1. The British Medical Association is a voluntary organisation of the medical profession; it comprises representatives of every form of medical practice and includes both practitioners who deal with the mentally disordered in various special ways and those who meet such patients in the usual course of general practice. The Members of the Association, now numbering over 28,400, are organised throughout the British Empire in local units called Divisions and in combinations of Divisions called Branches. By means of this local machinery, and with the help of its weekly organ, the British Medical Journal, the Association is able to inform and to collect the opinions of the main body of the medical profession, and in preparing this Memorandum the Council of the Association has utilised the experience and views of every type of medical practitioner.

2. When the Council of the Association learned that a Royal Commission on Lunacy and Mental Disorder (as regards England and Wales) was to be set up by the Government, it appointed a Special Committee to consider possible modifications of the Lunacy Laws, to prepare evidence for submission on behalf of the Association to the Royal Commission, and to appoint witnesses to give such evidence.

3. The personnel of the Special Committee is as follows:—

- R. Langdon-Down, M.B., B.Chir., M.R.C.P. (London), Member, Med. Psychol. Assn., Chairman of Lunacy Law Committee, B.M.A.
G. F. Barham, M.D., Member, Med. Psychol. Assn., Med. Supt. London Co. Ment. Hosp., Claybury.
R. A. Bolam, O.B.E., LL.D., M.D., F.R.C.P. (Newcastle-on-Tyne). Chairman of Council, B.M.A.
*J. W. Bone, M.B., C.M. (Luton).
*H. B. Brackenbury, M.R.C.S., L.R.C.P. (Hornsey). Chairman of Representative Body, B.M.A., Vice-Pres. Cent. Assn. Mental Welfare.
F. H. Edwards, M.D., M.R.C.P. (London). Member, Med. Psychol. Assn., Med. Supt. Camberwell House.
J. Basil Hall, M.B., M.Chir., F.R.C.S. (Bradford). President B.M.A.
N. Bishop Harman, M.B., B.Chir., F.R.C.S. (London). Treasurer B.M.A.
Bernard Hart, M.D. (London). Member, Med. Psychol. Assn., late Med. Supt. Northumberland House Asylum.
C. O. Hawthorne, M.D., F.R.C.P., F.R.F.P. & S. (London). Cons. Phys. Hampstead & N.W. London Hospital.
*J. A. Macdonald, LL.D., M.D. (Taunton). Cons. Phys. Taunton and Somerset Hospital.
E. W. G. Masterman, M.D., F.R.C.S. (London). Med. Supt. St. Giles Hospital.
*Christine Murrell, M.D. in Mental Diseases & Psychology (London). Late Clin. Asst. Northld. Co. Asylum.
*Sir Alfred J. Rice-Oxley, C.B.E., M.D. (London).
A. F. Tredgold, M.D. (London).
*E. B. Turner, F.R.C.S. (London).
Sir Jenner Verrall, LL.D., L.R.C.P., M.R.C.S. (Leatherhead). Cons. Surg. Sussex Co. Hospital.

4. The Association in approaching the questions submitted to the Royal Commission has endeavoured to keep in mind the principle that the interests of the patient as a sick person should be the first consideration. Subject to this principle the Association desires to give due weight to the claims of the public as a whole for protection against any improper restriction of individual liberty on the one hand and against the risks which attach to the inefficient control of persons of unsound mind on the other. In addition are to be considered the claims of the medical profession for adequate safeguards in carrying out the difficult and responsible duties placed in the hands of its individual members.

5. The Committee invited and has received and considered suggestions from Medical Superintendents of Poor Law Infirmaries and has had also the assistance and collaboration of several representative general practitioners of great experience.

6. On a previous occasion (viz. in April, 1912) the Association laid before the Government proposals dealing with the treatment of patients suffering from mental disorder in its early stages, but for the purpose of the present enquiry the subject has been fully and freely re-considered.

PRINCIPAL OBJECTS FAVOURED.

7. The principal objects favoured in this Memorandum are briefly as follows:—

- (a) To meet, as far as possible, the susceptibilities of the public with a view to minimise the objections which prevent patients from accepting proper treatment at the earliest possible moment. (Vide paras. 24-26.)
(b) To avoid the need for a formal Reception Order for mental patients whose symptoms though acute are likely to be short lived, in the hope that the recovery of the patient may render such an Order unnecessary. (Vide paras. 40-44.)

*. In General Practice.

(c) To provide opportunities for the treatment, on a voluntary basis and under approved conditions, of suitable patients whether in one of the existing types of institution or in hospitals or clinics or under private care. (Vide paras. 36-39.)

(d) To urge the provision and continuation of such kinds of accommodation as shall supply the needs of patients suffering from different forms and degrees of mental disorder; to meet the position created by differences in the social and financial status of such patients; and to advocate, if the ends here defined require it, the removal of the ban on any increase in the number of "licensed houses."—(Section 207 (6) of the Lunacy Act, 1890.) (Vide paras. 52-55.)

(e) To secure as far as possible uniformity of procedure in the certification alike of private and of other patients, and in particular to affirm the advisability of two medical certificates for submission to any judicial authority who is asked to issue a Reception Order. (Vide para. 71 (g).)

(f) To claim for practitioners who sign medical certificates under the Lunacy Act the immunities granted to witnesses in Courts of Law. (Vide para. 58.)

(g) To amend the wording and procedure of the Reception Order and the accompanying documents as hereinafter explained in detail. (Vide paras. 30-35.)

(h) To revise the existing conditions under which voluntary boarders may be accepted. (Vide paras. 36-39.)

(i) To make suitable provision for the after-care of patients leaving institutions, with special regard to collaboration between the patient's private medical attendant and the authorities who may have had charge of the patient. (Vide para. 48.)

(j) To preserve the unity of central administration, except in so far as the administration of property is concerned. (Vide para. 19.)

8. The Association recognises that mental disorders differ from other ailments in that the proper treatment of the patient may necessitate, either for his own good or for the protection of his family or the public, interference with his liberty of action; and, further, that the patient may be prevented by the nature of his illness from forming a proper judgment on the measures necessary for his welfare. Consequently in the scheme of treatment there must be introduced safeguards which are not necessary in dealing with ordinary bodily ailments where the mind is not affected.

9. Those engaged in the preparation of this memorandum who were not fully familiar with the law on the subject have been much impressed by the numerous and effective provisions designed for the due protection of the patient's rights. (Appendix D.) Where the law appears to be defective is in the unsatisfactory character of its terminology, in the differences made in the treatment of patients because of differences in social or financial standing, in a failure to regard the person of unsound mind primarily as a patient—a sick person, and in the failure to provide adequate facilities for treatment without a Reception Order.

TERMINOLOGY.

10. Any reconsideration of the Lunacy Acts suggests some elucidation and amendment of the terminology employed. For example, for various reasons a general desire has been expressed that the term "lunatic" should be discarded, and by the passing of the Mental Deficiency Act, 1913, the inclusion of the term "idiot" in the Lunacy Acts is rendered both superfluous and anomalous. The word "pauper," although clearly enough defined in the Lunacy Act of 1890, is objectionable on account of its wider significance outside the Act, and its use, in existing circumstances, is frequently unjust.

Again, the substitution of the term "mental hospital" for the old term "asylum" may be justified because it expresses better the modern attitude towards the treatment of mental disorder.

11. Of the two main divisions of mental abnormality, viz., mental deficiency and mental disorder, the Commission is, it is understood, concerned only with the latter, and this memorandum accordingly confines itself to the discussion of mental disorder, using this term to cover all kinds and degrees of departure from the normal other than mental deficiency.

Within this division many types and forms have been recognised by medical writers, but for the present purpose medical classification, subdivision and definition, so far from being helpful would be a hindrance.

What has to be considered from the point of view of law and administration is rather the practical measures and arrangements that are called for by any individual case and not the precise nosological classification of the patient's disorder.

12. Broadly speaking, from this point of view there are mental disorders which call for measures of control, and others for which, at all events in some stages, measures of control are not necessary although other kinds of treatment may be required. "Mental disorders" will thus include both grave and mild cases, and the very beginnings of disorder on the one hand and its latest manifestations on the other.

13. It is convenient that some brief and acceptable name should be given to each of these two groups.

14. In the Lunacy Acts the name given to a patient who is a proper person to be taken charge of and detained for care and treatment is "lunatic." If the term "lunatic" is dropped, as is here suggested, the expression "of unsound mind," which is used in the Act alternatively to "lunatic," would seem to be the most suitable one for this group.

15. As, however, there has been a tendency of recent years to use the expression in a somewhat lax and general way it would seem best to give it a precise definition and to confine its use to the particular group of cases now under consideration.

16. The definition suggested is:—

" 'Persons of unsound mind' means persons who by reason of mental disorder may properly be taken charge of and detained for care and treatment."

17. Mental disorder would thus be divided into two groups, viz., (a) the "mentally unsound," and (b) the "mentally ailing," the former being those proper to be taken charge of and detained, if necessary, and the latter not requiring detention.

18. The need for such definitions is particularly emphasised when the provisions of Section 315 of the Lunacy Act, 1890, are considered. Here, unless the phrase "a person of unsound mind" were limited as in the above definition, the Section would forbid the reception and treatment in nursing homes or patients who though mentally disordered do not require detention or control.

19. Form 16 of the Lunacy Act, 1890—the certificate dealing with a person entitled to payments from a public department—states that he is "by reason of mental disability unable to manage his affairs." This expression seems a useful one where it is intended to indicate the need for measures of control of the patient's property and affairs, but not necessarily of his person; and it might well be used in place of the expression "of unsound mind" in Section 116 (e) of the Lunacy Act, 1890.

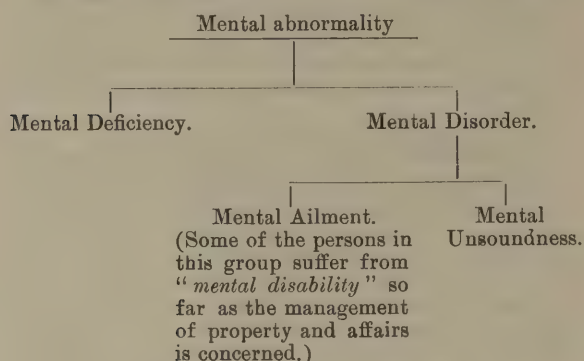

20. "Mental infirmity arising from disease or age" is an expression used in Section 116 (d), and as it seems to mean much the same as "mental disability" the latter might well take its place for the sake of uniformity.

21. Such a nomenclature as is suggested in paragraphs 12 to 20 would not be at variance with present usage, is valuable from the point of clearness, distinguishes between different types of arrangement for treatment and gives due consideration to the susceptibilities of patients and their friends. In addition, it gives a definitely recognised place to those cases which are neither normal in mind nor so mentally disordered as to require measures of control.

22. Accordingly, it is suggested that any future Act should be called the "Mental Disorders Act," and in it the words "lunatic" and "pauper" should not be used.

23. The following scheme shows what is intended in tabular form:—

CRITICISM OF PRESENT PROCEDURE.

24. More important, however, than the terms used, if the best possible is to be done for those who are mentally disordered, are the arrangements provided and the conditions governing them.

25. The reluctance of patients and their friends to accept treatment under existing arrangements is ascribed partly to unwillingness to enter a place known to be devoted to the treatment of persons of unsound mind and partly to unwillingness to apply for a Reception Order by a judicial authority with its necessary formalities and consequences. (As an example of the kind of thing which should be avoided, the Association would suggest that any patient who is being treated in a Poor Law Infirmary and whose maintenance, in part or in whole, is refunded either by himself or on his behalf, should not be compelled to wear clothing provided by the Poor Law Guardians.) The Reception Order undoubtedly puts a seal of a formal and semi-public nature on the patient's mental disorder, and this will permanently stamp him, even though his disorder may have been of comparatively brief duration and one from which he may have made complete recovery.

26. The avoidance of an undeserved stigma, by allowing less formal arrangements for suitable cases, is much to be desired, but it must always be borne in mind that the associations springing from any arrangement will depend in the long run upon the actual facts and usage and not upon any verbal description or sympathetic intention. Escape from stigma is practically impossible where the stigma is justified by the facts.

TYPES OF PATIENTS TO BE DEALT WITH.

27. One difficulty in dealing with mental disorders is that they present so great a variety of conditions. Thus the most lasting and grave forms of mental unsoundness may at their onset present only a mild type of mental disturbance. On the other hand, some of the most acute forms may be of only temporary duration, almost sure to recover and possibly unlikely to recur. Then again some of the forms are marked by a natural tendency to remission and recurrence with intervals of apparent mental health; others, and these perhaps the most dangerous forms of mental disorder, are very difficult to detect and are carefully concealed by the patient for long periods; there are also chronic forms which present no dangerous or conspicuously objectionable characters.

NEED FOR MORE FLEXIBILITY IN ARRANGEMENTS: PROPOSED PROVISIONAL ORDER.

28. It is clear that if the best possible is to be done for the patient as a sick person the facilities for treatment and the types of accommodation must be sufficiently various to suit the conditions defined in paragraph 27.

29. Another reason for urging the need of flexibility is the frequent difficulty and uncertainty of diagnosis and prognosis, and the claim for fuller opportunities for research if treatment is to be placed on a more secure basis.

30. There is already a procedure by Urgency Order provided for in the Act, and in practice a large proportion, approximating to 60 per cent. in some institutions, of the private patients admitted to institutions are admitted in the first instance on this Order, on the ground that it is expedient for the welfare of the patient that he should be forthwith placed under care and treatment.

31. The Order in this case is made, not by a judicial authority, but by someone closely related to the patient. Some such power is essential to enable immediate steps to be taken when delay would be dangerous or harmful, but it would be sufficient for safety and convenience that the duration of such an Order should be say "three days," for clearly it is desirable that at the earliest possible moment there should be judicial authority for a measure which means the loss of personal liberty.

32. It would, however, be a great advantage to the patient that such an Order should be capable of extension, on the approval of a judicial authority, for a further 28 days. This would provide opportunity for observation and possible recovery before submitting a petition for a formal Reception Order, and there is reason to believe that in many cases a Reception Order would then not be necessary.

33. If this plan were adopted it would appear best to call such an Order a Provisional Order, and that such Order should supersede the present Urgency Order. The exact form which it is suggested this Provisional Order and the accompanying papers should take is appended hereto (vide Appendix B).

34. The Provisional Order made by a relative, or where necessary by a Relieving Officer, would expire automatically at the end of three days, unless it were endorsed by a judicial authority whereby its validity would be continued for a further period of 28 days. Wherever possible this Order should be signed by the judicial authority prior to the admission of the patient and in no case later than three days after admission. At the expiration of a Provisional Order the patient must be discharged unless he is either placed under a Reception Order or becomes a Voluntary Boarder.

35. In support of this proposal it may be pointed out that in the existing provisions for so-called "pauper patients" there is opportunity for a period of observation of 17 days before a formal Reception Order is made, and there is evidence from experienced medical practitioners that a number of patients who come under observation in this way get well and go home before this period has elapsed, without a Reception Order having been made.

VOLUNTARY BOARDERS.

36. The Association advises that the provision enabling registered hospitals and licensed houses to receive suitable patients as voluntary boarders should be extended, under suitable conditions, to the County and County Borough Asylums. In each individual case the arrangement would require the approval of the medical superintendent or his deputy.

37. The advantages of the voluntary boarder system are that it is subject to the consent of the patient and provides for his care and treatment for so long as this may be necessary; in addition, it avoids or postpones the necessity for a Reception Order. It is valuable, too, as a transition measure when the patient is recovering from his illness and discharge from the Reception Order is justifiable but the patient still requires treatment. The use of this system has steadily increased in recent years, many patients being now received as Voluntary Boarders who formerly would have been dealt with under a Reception Order.

38. A condition of the present procedure, whereby the reception of a Voluntary Boarder into a licensed house has to depend on permission being obtained beforehand from the Board of Control, or in the case of a registered hospital from two members of the Visiting Committee, appears unnecessary, although it is fully recognised that the present form of notification and report on Voluntary Boarders should be maintained.

39. In the interest of the patient it is desirable that the notice to leave should be extended to 72 hours.

TEMPORARY BOARDERS.

40. The Mental Treatment Bill of 1923 introduced a new proposal, namely, the temporary treatment of mental disorder without a Reception Order under the Lunacy Acts in an approved institution on the recommendation of a medical practitioner, subject to the consent of the patient or to his being incapable of volition. The period of treatment is limited to six months, subject to the power to extend the treatment for a further six months when recovery within that period is reasonably probable.

41. The institutions which may be approved under this Bill include, in addition to institutions under the Lunacy Act, hospitals or parts of hospitals outside the Lunacy Acts, and institutions that may hereafter be established by Visiting Committees. For admission thereto the Recommendation of the doctor declares that the patient shows symptoms of mental disorder.

42. There is in the Bill no definition of the term "mental disorder," but presumably it is intended to be used in the sense already defined in this document and to include both persons of "unsound mind" and the "mentally ailing."

If this is so it would enable acute cases and others which are likely to be brief in duration to be received and detained without the formality of a Reception Order, not only in the institutions at present recognised under the Lunacy Act but also in ordinary hospitals not so recognised.

43. The Association finds itself in agreement with this proposal, at least so far as it goes. It is necessary, however, to point out that although the Mental Treatment Bill is based on the consent of the patient (and even extends to the case where the patient is incapable of volition) and applies to institutions managed by a Visiting Committee, it does not effect the same result as would come about from extending the Voluntary Boarder principle to the County and County Borough Asylums. If this were done, and if the Provisional Order which is suggested above were available, there would appear to be no special object in applying the provisions of the Mental Treatment Bill to the existing institutions. The Voluntary Boarder principle might easily be made to cover all the consenting cases and it would in fact go further, in that it is indefinite in its duration and is applicable not only during the first six or twelve months of treatment but also during convalescence if so desired, and in these respects the proposals in the Bill would not be an adequate substitute.

44. The application of the provisions of the Bill to include patients for the time being incapable of volition is a valuable provision, as it includes cases which would not otherwise gain the advantage of these temporary arrangements, although they might be provided for under the Provisional Order as suggested in paragraphs 30-34.

45. In the Mental Treatment Bill the expression "incapable of volition" is used to describe certain patients who may come under its provisions. This expression, in practice, will not always be easy of interpretation, and it is suggested that the actual facts on which judgment of the incapacity must be based, namely, that the patient does not, when given the choice, exercise it, would be preferable as the basis of the definition. It is, therefore, suggested that Section 4 (1) (a) of the Bill should be modified to read somewhat as follows:—

"(a) A recommendation for treatment shall only be given under this Section in respect of a person who either is willing to submit to treatment or does not express unwillingness to submit to treatment, or in whose case, if he is a minor, consent to his reception as a patient has been given by his parent or guardian, and every such recommendation shall state whether the person in respect of whom it is given is willing to submit to treatment or does not express unwillingness to submit to treatment or is a minor on whose behalf the necessary consent by his guardians has been given, as the case may be";

and that Section 4 (5) be amended to read somewhat as follows:—

"(5) Where the person to be received as a patient has not definitely expressed his willingness to be received or is a minor, there must be annexed to the Recommendation for treatment a statement signed by a Justice of the Peace to the effect set out in Part II of the Schedule to this Act."

If in fact the patient resists being dealt with under this provision he cannot enjoy its advantages and must be dealt with otherwise.

46. The proposal to recognise non-registered hospitals for the reception and temporary treatment of cases of mental disorder is one that the medical profession welcomes on the ground that it will be valuable for purposes of education and research and will tend to link up the study of mental disorders with general medicine. It will undoubtedly be welcomed also by many patients.

47. The Association is of opinion that in addition to the institutions recognised in the Mental Treatment Bill there should be the power to approve under this Bill:—(a) houses which are supported wholly or partly by voluntary contributions or which are privately owned, for the reception of patients under the provision of the Bill; and (b) the reception as single patients under the Bill in houses not so approved, provided that a medical practitioner gives a written recommendation in each case, stating that suitable treatment can be obtained for the patient in the proposed house.

48. It is urged that the principle of permitting "After-care" Homes and Convalescent Homes at the seaside or elsewhere in connection with County and County Borough Mental Hospitals should be recognised.

49. It should be possible upon the Order of the petitioner, without the consent of the Board of Control being first obtained, to remove a patient detained under Order in his own house or in "single care" to an institution, if and when the mental condition of the patient renders this course advisable; the fact of removal in any such case to be reported to the Commissioners. Similar powers already exist for the committee of the person in "lunatics so found."

50. Reference has already been made in paragraph 40 to the fact that cases of mental disorder may lawfully be received if they are not "lunatics" or "alleged lunatics." Whether or not it is proper to receive, outside the Act, a patient who is suffering from mental disorder, is not always an easy question to decide, and a mistake on the part of the person receiving such a patient may result in a prosecution.

51. It is possible that institutions under Visiting Committees may come to include what have been described as clinics both with beds and with consultative arrangements for out-patients on lines comparable to Venereal Disease Clinics. It is hardly likely that these would be established except in large centres of population where there is no ordinary hospital provision for these cases.

The development of centres of this type would be of assistance for the purpose of getting expert opinion for certification and other purposes, and might well take the place of the receiving wards of workhouses for the reception of patients in the first instance.

VALUE OF VARIETY IN TYPE OF INSTITUTIONS.

52. That the variety of provision which at present exists for the treatment of patients should be continued seems very much to be desired. There are facilities for private patients on various scales in the licensed houses, registered hospitals and publicly maintained institutions, or under single care. Patients needing assistance from public sources or from charitable foundations are provided for in the public institutions and in the registered hospitals.

53. Some sections of the population prefer public management, some private. Each type of institution has a good record of work done and of trustworthy management under official supervision.

54. The Association is satisfied that there exists a desire in the community generally that many patients should be able to be treated otherwise than in public institutions, and should the existing veto on the setting up of new licensed houses or the extension of existing licensed houses result in the diminution or inadequacy of this provision it may be necessary to repeal this veto or to provide extended facilities for the treatment of patients in small numbers in private hands under proper safeguards. The opinion of practitioners in general practice in various parts of the country has been sought on this point, and the unanimously expressed opinion is in favour of the continuance of such provision, as meeting the wishes both of patients and of patients' friends.

55. The scheme contained in Appendix C shows the grouping of patients suffering from mental disorders from the point of view of the administrative measures possible for dealing with them and for bringing them under treatment in accordance with the foregoing suggestions.

CERTIFICATION.

56. When care and control are deemed necessary and the various methods of securing treatment by voluntary consent are not available an Order of some kind becomes necessary, whether it be the proposed Provisional Order, or the full Reception Order, a Detention Order, or an Urgency Order.

In all these cases the Order must be justified by evidence and this must of course include medical evidence in the form of a certificate or certificates.

57. It has become customary to speak of "certification" as being the fact which deprives a patient of his freedom, whereas of course the formal authority is in all cases the Order, and this is made not by the certifying doctor but by the judicial authority or, in the case of the Urgency Order, by a relative. Therefore whenever a person is medically examined it should be understood that the fee paid to the examining medical practitioner is for the fact of having conducted the medical examination and not for having certified the patient as insane.

58. While it is desired to guard against the elevation of the medical certificate to a position of authority which it does not possess, there is no wish to under-estimate the great importance of the certificate as evidence.

Indeed it is desired to insist upon its being given very definitely the status of evidence; and therefore, that the protection which witnesses in Courts of Law are entitled to receive shall be extended to the practitioner who signs a certificate under the Lunacy Acts. (Vide Appendix A).

59. It is recognised that the function of the medical practitioner does not intrude on the power of the magistrate. The doctor simply contributes to the evidence on which the magistrate bases his judicial decision, acting as the representative of the law.

It is in harmony with this view that the Association, while not wishing to dictate the duties to be laid upon the magistrate, favours his interviewing the patient, so that the patient may present his view of the position. Incidentally, this would have the additional advantage of rendering unnecessary the presentation to the patient, after his admission, of the form notifying his right to see a magistrate.

60. In these proposals the Association aims to secure that there shall be judicial authority for detention, the only exception being during the first three days, when it may be unavoidable that the onus should be placed upon a relative, or on a Poor Law Officer. (Vide paras. 31-34.)

61. It is in accordance with the principle of placing the real responsibility where it properly rests, viz., on the judicial authority who makes the Order, that it is suggested that the duration of the Urgency Order or Provisional Order should in the first instance, when it is for reasons of avoiding delay made by a near relative, only be valid for three days instead of for a week as at present.

62. A question has been raised as to the qualifications that should be required of the judicial authority. All that the Association feels entitled to say on this point is that it is essential to the welfare of the patient as well as to the convenience of the medical practitioner that access to the judicial authority qualified to sign the Reception Order should be near at hand and readily obtained.

63. With regard to Section 43 of the Lunacy Act and Form 8 thereof, while it is considered that one of the medical practitioners signing the medical certificate should, whenever practicable, be the usual medical attendant of the patient, this condition should be abrogated in those "single-care" cases where it is intended that the usual medical attendant should continue to be the "medical attendant" of the patient.

64. The certificate of a doctor in principle consists of three elements namely:—

- (i) Observations by the doctor himself, at the time of examination, of conduct or behaviour of an abnormal kind (using the term conduct in a wide sense to include all modes of self-expression). These observations may be supported by other observations made on previous occasions and by observations reported by other persons (whose names are given);
- (ii) The conclusion that such behaviour is due to mental disorder; and
- (iii) The further conclusion that the mental disorder is of such a nature or degree that the patient is a proper person to be taken charge of and detained for care and treatment.

65. The Association does not support the suggestion that second certificates should be signed by specially approved practitioners.

SUGGESTED AMENDMENT OF CERTIFICATES AND FORMS.

66. The actual form and wording of the Petition, Statement of Particulars, Certificates, and Reception Order require amendment.—

- (a) It is suggested that the terms "lunatic" and "idiot" should be omitted throughout and that in place thereof the phrase "a person of unsound mind" should be used. Even the phrase "alleged to be of unsound mind" should be omitted, except where its use is essential;
- (b) It is proposed to alter the Statement of Particulars in the following respects:—
 - (i) To substitute "whether previous history of mental disorder" for "whether first attack";
 - (ii) To substitute "Age at onset of mental disorder" for "Age on first attack";
 - (iii) To substitute "When and where previously under treatment for mental disorder" for "When and where previously under care and treatment as a lunatic, idiot, or person of unsound mind"; and
 - (iv) To substitute "Duration of present illness" for "Duration of existing attack."

67. In the certificate (Form 8) it is suggested that:—

In para. 2 "separately from any other practitioner" be deleted. This would be following the proposal in the Mental Treatment Bill and would facilitate the formation of a sound and well-grounded opinion. Evidence of mental unsoundness is sometimes difficult to elicit, and a joint examination would spare the patient undue annoyance.

3 (a) should read:—

"Facts pointing to this conclusion observed by myself at the time of examination, viz.":—

3 (b) should read:—"Facts observed by myself on previous occasions."

3 (c) should read:—"Statements communicated by others."

68. The Reception Order might be more explicit and correspond more closely with the medical certificates thus:—

"I authorise you to receive, take into your charge, and detain A.B., etc."

69. There is some uncertainty at present as to the right of the medical officer or medical attendant to administer medical treatment to a patient under a reception order against the patient's wishes, even though the friends approve of the treatment proposed; this uncertainty should be cleared up.

PROTECTION OF PATIENTS.

70. After a careful consideration of the subject, the Association is firmly of opinion that the obstacles to the improper reception or detention of patients in institutions under the Lunacy Acts are such as to render improper reception or detention practically impossible, and the evidence received from medical practitioners resident in various quarters is unanimous that such cases do not in practice arise (vide Appendix D).

From the evidence which the Association has received it would appear that, so far from there being any risk of patients being detained too long in institutions (as has been alleged), the risk is rather that, owing largely to pressure from patients' relatives and friends, discharge may sometimes be premature.

POOR LAW PATIENTS.

71. Subjoined are a number of recommendations for amendment of the law affecting Poor Law infirmaries and so-called "pauper patients":—

(a) "Observation wards" for mental cases should be in a separate infirmary or Poor Law hospital and not in the workhouse.

(b) A medical officer should not have the power, given him by Section 24 of the Lunacy Acts, to detain a patient for 14 days "against his will" without the authority of a justice.

(c) It should be made clear in any future legislation that the institutions for lunatics referred to in Section 16 of the Lunacy Act, 1890, include a Poor Law infirmary or hospital. This would enable many cases of senile dementia, which at present have to be sent to the county or county borough asylums, to receive treatment in the wards of Poor Law infirmaries or hospitals.

(d) While no general statement can be made as to the suitability of Poor Law workhouses for the reception of patients of unsound mind (the accommodation provided in such institutions varying widely), the continued detention of patients in these institutions is to be deprecated.

(e) The provision of clinics or reception houses in places where they would be convenient, or of better accommodation in workhouse infirmaries, would avoid the necessity of placing patients in unsuitable companionship as now apparently happens in the "insane" wards of the workhouses.

(f) It is unfortunate that patients with "mental disorders" should have to invoke the machinery of the Poor Law in order to obtain treatment, and the avoidance of this procedure could be secured by the direct admission of patients to recognised mental hospitals.

(g) For removal to an asylum of a so-called "pauper patient" only one medical certificate is at present required (except in the case of patients dealt with under Section 13 of the Lunacy Act, 1890). Whether the procedure of certification is made uniform for all patients or not, the Association considers that two medical certificates should be required by law in all cases.

MISCELLANEOUS.

72. Bona fide communications to constables, relieving officers or overseers initiating proceedings under Sections 13 (i), 15 (i), and 20 of the Lunacy Act, 1890, should be privileged.

73. The right to see a magistrate is accorded to all patients placed under Order except those dealt with under Section 13 of the Lunacy Act, 1890, and this is an anomaly which should be removed.

74. In the interests of the patients, the classification of patients suffering from various mental disorders should, as far as possible, be effected, and this with as little delay as possible.

75. It is urged that no person not charged with an offence against the law should be examined with regard to the state of his mind in a public Court as is at present allowed and is, as a matter of fact, sometimes done.

76. Powers of forcible entry in order to visit, examine or remove a person who is deemed to be of "unsound mind" should be granted to magistrates in connection with cases arising under Sections 13 (2) and 20 of the Lunacy Act, 1890.

TYPES OF ACCOMMODATION FOR PATIENTS SUFFERING FROM MENTAL DISORDER.

77. The following types of accommodation for persons suffering from mental disorder are suggested:—

- (i) Non-registered hospitals or parts of or adjuncts to hospitals, voluntary or Poor Law.
- (ii) Institutions or clinics or homes established, or to be established, by Local Authorities.
- (iii) Homes to be founded on a charitable or semi-charitable foundation.
- (iv) Recognised homes on a purely private basis for several patients.
- (v) Publicly maintained mental hospitals and specialised wards of Poor Law hospitals;
- (vi) Registered mental hospitals;
- (vii) Private (licensed) mental hospitals; and the approved annexes, of (v), (vi), and (vii);
- (viii) Private houses for single patients.

CLASSIFICATION AND ALLOCATION OF PATIENTS.

78. For those who are of "unsound mind" and for whom measures of control have become desirable it should be open to adopt various methods of procedure:—

- (A) Voluntary,
 - (a) by the patient's act,
 - (b) by the action of a friend or relative where the patient does not refuse or where he is a minor.
- (B) Compulsory by the action of a relative or relieving officer,
 - (a) as a temporary or provisional measure for three days,
 - (b) as a temporary or provisional measure for a month with the approval of a judicial authority.
- (C) Compulsory by the order of a judicial authority under the Reception Order.

"Compulsory (c)" patients of unsound mind may be received in (v.), (vi.), (vii.) and (viii.).

"Compulsory (b)" patients may be received in (i.), (ii.), (iii.), (iv.), (v.), (vi.), (vii.) and (viii.).

"Voluntary (A)" patients of unsound mind may be received in (v.), (vi.), (vii.) and (viii.), and also in (i.), (ii.), (iii.) and (iv.).

The "Mentally Ailing" but not of unsound mind may be received in (i.), (ii.), (iii.), (iv.) and (viii.), and as Voluntary Boarders with the approval of the Medical Superintendent in (v.), (vi.) and (vii.).

APPENDIX A.

CONSIDERATIONS WHICH SUPPORT THE CLAIM THAT THE CERTIFYING PRACTITIONER SHOULD ENJOY THE IMMUNITIES OF A WITNESS.

NOTE.—The quotations are from the Lunacy Act, 1890, the italics being introduced for purposes of emphasis.

1. Section 4. Sub-section (1).

A person shall not be received or detained as a lunatic, &c., "unless under a reception order made by a Judicial Authority."

2. Section 9. Sub-section (2).

"Judicial Authority shall . . . have the same jurisdiction and power as regards summoning and examination of witnesses, the administration of oaths, and otherwise, as if he were acting in the exercise of his ordinary jurisdiction."

3. Section 28. Sub-section (4).

"Every medical certificate made under and for the purpose of this Act shall be evidence of the facts therein appearing and of the judgment therein stated to have been formed by the certifying medical practitioners on such facts, as if the matters therein appearing had been verified on oath."

4. If the judicial authority signs a Reception Order without personally seeing the patient the medical officer of the institution must inform the patient that he has the right to claim an audience with some other Judicial Authority, who after such audience must report to the Commissioners in order that these "may take such steps as may be necessary to give effect to the report." Section 8 (3). Should the medical officer think that such an audience might be prejudicial to the patient he will not tell the patient of its possibility, but he must certify his opinion to the Commissioners. Section 8 (1).

NOTE.—The powers of the judicial authority to visit the patient to make various inquiries, to summon other witnesses (Section 6) to administer oaths (Section 9 (2) show that medical certificates are not per se conclusive, that is, the certificates are evidence, not judgment.

5. Further, when an alleged lunatic demands a jury in the case of an "inquisition" the Judge by personal examination may decide whether the alleged lunatic is mentally competent to form and express a wish for a jury (Section 91).

6. Again, without a Jury, the "Masters" (barristers) shall "personally examine the alleged lunatic and take such evidence as they think fit in order to ascertain whether he is of sound mind or not." Section 92.

7. Where the Masters certify in one direction or the other the certificate shall have the same effect as an inquisition taken upon the oath of a jury. Section 93.

NOTE.—The above rules and practices show that the principle accepted in the Lunacy Act is that the responsibility for defining a person to be (or not to be) of unsound mind rests with an appropriate legal officer and not with a member (or members) of the medical profession. These may, as may other persons, give evidence, and this evidence (in whole or in part) must be in the form of a prescribed certificate. It is for the duly constituted judicial authority to consider the medical certificates together with any other evidence he may think advisable, and after consideration to give his decision. Upon this decision the whole of the future action relative to the patient depends. In a word, the medical practitioner gives evidence; the judicial authority pronounces judgment; the medical practitioner is a witness; the judicial authority is a judge. Hence the claim by the practitioner for the immunities of a witness is strictly in accord with the whole tenour of the Lunacy Act.

APPENDIX B.

PROPOSED PROVISIONAL ORDER FOR DETENTION.

I, the undersigned,..... being a Justice of the Peace for..... having visited (a)..... do hereby authorise h detention for observation, care and treatment for a period not exceeding Twenty-eight days from this date.

DATED this.....day of.....192 .
Signed.....

A Justice of the Peace for
(or as the case may be.)
To the Medical Superintendent,
.....Hospital,
Recognised Home
(or as the case may be.)

N.B.—Wherever possible this Order should be signed prior to the admission of the Patient and in no case later than 3 days after admission.

FORM OF PROVISIONAL ORDER FOR THE RECEPTION OF A PATIENT, WITH MEDICAL CERTIFICATE AND STATEMENT ACCOMPANYING PROVISIONAL ORDER.

I, the undersigned, being a Person Twenty-one years of age, hereby authorise you to receive (a) as a Patient into your Hospital, &c. for observation, care, and treatment, whom I last saw at on the day of 192 .

I am not related to or connected with the Person signing the Certificate which accompanies this Order in any of the ways mentioned in the Margin (b). Subjoined hereto is a Statement of Particulars relating to the said (a)

SIGNED:
Name and Christian }
Name at length }
Rank, Profession, or } Occupation (if any) }
Full Postal Address
How related to or connected } with the Patient (c) }

DATED thisday of192 .
To the Medical Superintendent,
.....Hospital, &c.

STATEMENT OF PARTICULARS REFERRED TO IN THE ANNEXED ORDER.

If any Particulars are not known, the fact is to be so stated.

The following is a Statement of Particulars relating to the said (a)
Name of Patient, with Christian Name at length
Sex and Age

(a) Name of Patient.

(b) Husband, wife, father, father-in-law, mother, mother-in-law, son, son-in-law, daughter, daughter-in-law, brother, brother-in-law, sister, sister-in-law, partner or assistant, or in the case of a rate-aided patient this may be signed by a relieving officer where no relative is available or willing to act.

(c) If not the husband or wife, or a relative of the Patient, the person signing to state as briefly as possible—(1) Why the Order is not signed by the husband or wife, or a relative of the Patient.

(2) His or her connection with the Patient, and the circumstances under which he or she signs.

Married, Single or Widowed
 Rank, Profession, or previous occupation (if any) Religious Persuasion
 Residence at or immediately previous to the date hereof
 Whether previous history of mental disorder
 Age at onset of mental disorder
 When and where previously under care and treatment for mental disorder
 Duration of present illness
 Supposed cause
 Whether subject to Epilepsy
 Whether suicidal
 Whether dangerous to others and in what way

Names, Christian Names and Full Postal Addresses of one or more Relatives of the Patient

Name of the Person to whom } Notice of Death to be sent, } and full Postal Address, if } not already given }
 Name and Full Postal Address } of the usual Medical Attendant } of the Patient }

SIGNED (d)
 Name, with Christian }
 Name at length }
 Rank, Profession or Occupation (if any) } How related to or otherwise connected with } the Patient }

STATEMENT ACCOMPANYING PROVISIONAL ORDER.

I, the undersigned, being a Registered Medical Practitioner, do hereby certify that it is expedient for the welfare of the said (†) that the said should be forthwith placed under care and treatment.

My reasons for this conclusion are as follows

DATED this day of
 One thousand nine hundred and twenty

(SIGNED)
 of (e)

N.B.—It is desirable that this Certificate be signed by the usual Medical Attendant.

(d) When the Petitioner or person signing an Urgency Order is not the person who signs the statement, add the following particulars concerning the person who signs the statement.

† Or for the public safety, as the case may be.

(e) Insert full postal address.

APPENDIX C.

SCHEME FOR CLASSIFICATION OF PATIENTS SUFFERING FROM MENTAL DISORDERS.

Patients not needing to be taken charge of and detained for care and treatment, i.e., not "of unsound mind" but suffering from lesser mental ailments, including simple senile dementia.

Patients proper to be taken charge of and detained for care and treatment, i.e., "of unsound mind."

Patients needing treatment but not in homes, institutions or hospitals.

Patients needing treatment in suitable homes, institutions or hospitals.

Those patients who give consent to the necessary measures of treatment:—

(a) Voluntary Boarders (under Lunacy Act).

(b) Temporary Boarders by consent (as provided in Mental Treatment Bill).

Temporary Boarders who are minors or who when given the choice do not refuse to submit to the necessary measures of treatment and are likely to make early recovery.

Those who refuse consent and for whom therefore compulsory measures are necessary.

Patients for whom immediate measures are necessary for safety or for their welfare. Provisional Order valid for 3 days made by near relative or relieving officer.

Patients in regard to whom the final decision is not clear and in whose case a period of observation is desirable. Provisional Order validated for a further 28 days by the Justice.

Patients in need of continued control—Reception Order.

APPENDIX D.

PROTECTION OF ALLEGED LUNATIC.

(Note.—The references are to the Lunacy Act, 1890)
1. Judicial Authority may decide to see patient and may postpone decision to secure this. Section 6 (1).

2. In the meantime may make enquiries of or concerning the lunatic, and may visit him. Section 6 (1), (2).

3. At hearing may have lunatic, and person appointed by lunatic, present. Section 6 (3).

4. May adjourn for 14 days, and may at continued hearing summon any person to attend before him. Section 6 (4).

5. All persons bound to secrecy save lunatic and his friend. Section 6 (5).

6. Judicial Authority may put witnesses on oath. Section 9 (2).

7. Where Petition granted forthwith and patient not seen by judicial authority, the medical officer (institution) must within 24 hours inform him in writing, of his right, to see or be seen by a judicial authority other than the one who has granted the Petition. If the medical officer, however, thinks that such a visit would be prejudicial to the patient, he will not tell the patient of this right, but he must certify his opinion to the Commissioners. Section 8 (1).

8. The judicial authority who sees the patient on the claim under No. 7 shall be entitled to see all the papers in the case and shall send to the Commissioners a report, and “the Commissioners shall take such steps as may be necessary to give effect to the report.” Section 8 (3).

9. The medical officer one month after reception of patient shall send to the Commissioners (and to the Visitors) a report as to the mental and bodily condition of the patient. After reception of this report one or more of the Commissioners shall visit the patient and shall report whether the detention of the patient is or is not proper (Section 39 (2) and (3)). Similarly, one or more of the Visitors will visit the patient and if in doubt as to the propriety of his detention will report to the Commissioners who must make all necessary enquiries. Section 39 (4).

10. If the Commissioners in any case under this Section 39 determine that a patient ought to be discharged, they may make an order for his discharge.

11. Letters by patients to Lord Chancellor, Commissioners, etc., must be forwarded unopened; and notices to this effect must be posted in the institution; also of right of patient to request personal and private interview with a Commissioner or Visitor. Section 42 (1).

12. A medical practitioner who has signed a certificate for a reception order in the case of a private patient shall not be the regular professional attendant of the patient while detained under the order. Section 43 (1).

13. Any Commissioner or Visitor may give an order for patient to be visited by any relation or friend, or by any medical or other person whom any relation or friend desires to be admitted to him. If any manager or officer prevents or obstructs such admission he is liable to a penalty not exceeding £20. Section 47 (1), (3).

APPENDIX XXIII.

Question 13,123.

LANCASHIRE MENTAL HOSPITALS.

Statistics of Deaths and Discharges within short periods of Detention, for the year 1923.

Hospital.	New Cases Admitted.	Within 3 months.		Within 6 months.		Within 9 months.		Within 12 months.
		Died.	Discharged.	Died.	Discharged.	Died.	Discharged.	Died.	Discharged.
Lancaster ...	365	31	5	3	17	6	12	5	10
Rainhill... ..	447	36	41	19	59	11	15	5	10
Whittingham ...	439	45	10	28	58	13	52	6	32
Prestwich ...	439	44	48	18	65	9	32	6	17
Winwick ...	1,096	53	2	37	62	19	63	13	36

APPENDIX XXIV.

Question 16,599.

MEDICO-PSYCHOLOGICAL ASSOCIATION OF GREAT BRITAIN AND IRELAND.

MEMORANDUM OF THE EVIDENCE TO BE GIVEN ON BEHALF OF THE ASSOCIATION.

INTRODUCTION.

The Medico-Psychological Association of Great Britain and Ireland dates back to the year 1841, having for its objects the intercommunication on all matters calculated to improve the care, treatment and recovery of patients suffering from mental disorder, and the collaboration of research into the elucidation of the causes and prevention of insanity. In later years its activities have extended to the education and examination of medical men and women, and nurses engaged in the practice of psychiatry.

The Association consists of between 700 and 800 medical practitioners who are actively interested in the progress of psychiatry throughout the British Empire. The Ordinary or Subscribing Members are mostly medical superintendents or medical officers of mental hospitals, public and private, medical officers under the Prison Commission and county and borough education authorities, professors and lecturers in psychiatry attached to the universities and teaching schools of the Kingdom, and medical men and women in consulting or general practice. The Association has also 14 Corresponding Members living in foreign countries, and 30 Honorary Members. The Association comprises three Divisions for England and Wales, a Division for Scotland, and a Division for Ireland.

Quarterly general, as well as biennial divisional meetings are held for the discussion of papers, which, with other proceedings, are incorporated in a quarterly publication—The Journal of Mental Science. This Journal has existed since the year 1853. The Association has an annually elected President and other Officers of its Council, also a Parliamentary, an Educational, and other Committees. Since 1892 examinations have been held for its Certificate in Psychological Medicine, which has been given to 379 medical men, and at times an Honours Examination has been conducted for the Gaskell Prize. The Certificate of the Association is the forerunner of the Diplomas in Psychological Medicine recently instituted by many of the Universities and Conjoint College Boards. The Association originated, and for many years has actively promoted, the training of mental nurses. Since 1891 examinations have been regularly held for its Certificate in Mental Nursing, which has been awarded to more than eighteen thousand male and female nurses. Since 1917 the Association has also examined nurses for proficiency in training mental defectives, and 193 of such certificates have been granted. The Association is regarded by the medical profession as the leading representative body concerned with psychiatry in this country.

The preparation of evidence to be given on behalf of the Association was entrusted to a Committee consisting of the following members:

- *R. H. COLE, M.D., F.R.C.P. (Chairman), Physician for and Lecturer on Mental Diseases, St. Mary's Hospital, London; Examiner in Mental Diseases and Psychology, University of London. Chairman of the Parliamentary Committee of the Association.
- W. BROOKS KEITH, M.C., M.D. (Secretary), Medical Superintendent, St. Audrey's Hospital, Melton, Suffolk. Secretary of the Parliamentary Committee of the Association.
- J. CHAMBERS, M.A., M.D., Medical Superintendent, The Priory, Roehampton, London. Treasurer of the Association. Formerly Lecturer on Mental Diseases, Middlesex Hospital, and Co-Editor of the Journal of Mental Science.
- *M. A. COLLINS, O.B.E., M.D., Medical Superintendent, Kent County Mental Hospital, Chartham. Former General Secretary of the Association.
- R. EAGER, O.B.E., M.D., Medical Superintendent, Devon County Mental Hospital, Exminster.
- F. H. EDWARDS, M.D., M.R.C.P., Medical Superintendent, Camberwell House, London.
- *E. GOODALL, O.B.E., M.D., F.R.C.P., Physician for Out-Patients in Psychiatry, Cardiff Royal Infirmary; Lecturer on Mental Disorders, Welsh National School of Medicine; Medical Superintendent, Cardiff Mental Hospital, Whitchurch. Former Co-Editor of the Journal of Mental Science. Ex-President of the Association.
- P. T. HUGHES, M.B., Lecturer on Mental Diseases, Birmingham University; Medical Superintendent, Worcester County Mental Hospital, Bromsgrove.
- *J. R. LORD, C.B.E., M.B., Medical Superintendent, Horton Mental Hospital, Epsom. Co-Editor of the Journal of Mental Science.
- E. MAPOTHER, M.D., M.R.C.P., F.R.C.S., Physician and Lecturer for Psychological Medicine, King's College Hospital; Medical Superintendent, The Maudsley Hospital, Denmark Hill, London.

*W. F. MENZIES, B.Sc., M.D., F.R.C.P., Medical Superintendent, Stafford County Mental Hospital, Cheddleton. Former President of the Association.

*Sir FREDERICK W. MOTT, K.B.E., LL.D., M.D., F.R.C.P., F.R.S., Consulting Physician, Charing Cross Hospital; Lecturer on Morbid Psychology and Hon. Director of Research, University and City of Birmingham; Examiner in Neurology, University of London; late Pathologist, London County Mental Hospitals. President-Elect of the Association.

BEDFORD PIERCE, M.D., F.R.C.P., Consulting Physician, The Retreat, York. Former President of the Association.

R. C. STEWART, M.R.C.S., Medical Superintendent, Leicester County Mental Hospital, Narborough.

H. WOLSELEY-LEWIS, M.D., F.R.C.S., Medical Superintendent, Kent County Mental Hospital, Barming Heath. Ex-Chairman of the Parliamentary Committee of the Association.

*R. WORTH, O.B.E., M.B., Medical Superintendent, Springfield Mental Hospital, Tooting, London. General Secretary of the Association.

The Association has for many years been alive to the backward position in many respects of psychiatry in the United Kingdom, and not a few circumstances, such as the apathy and prejudices of the public as regards the insane, reflected in the reluctance of Imperial and local authorities to commit themselves to further expenditure, and the fact that progress in certain directions would require action on the part of the Legislature before it could materialize, have militated against any real advance being made in many matters the Association has very much at heart.

REPORT OF THE STATUS OF BRITISH PSYCHIATRY COMMITTEE.

This stagnation, although it had received constant attention from the Association, its Council and several Standing Committees, was the subject of inquiry by a special committee appointed in 1911 to consider the "Status of British Psychiatry and of Medical Officers." That Committee took a wide view of their reference, and their Interim Report, published in 1913, set forth in no uncertain manner the grave defects psychiatry laboured under in Great Britain and Ireland. Chief among these were:

- (a) The absence of proper provision for the early treatment of incipient and undeveloped cases of mental disorder.
- (b) The few facilities there existed for the study of psychiatry and for research.

That Committee, among other measures, recommended:

That "clinics for mental disorders" in connection with the universities, medical schools and general hospitals should be established.

That as a general principle the admission to all mental institutions should be on a voluntary basis and without loss of civil rights.

That there should be power, if found necessary, to detain for a limited period incipient cases, such being notified to the Board of Control (hereinafterwards called the "Board of Mental Health," vide Recommendation 17).

That admissions should be direct into mental institutions, without reference to the Poor Law authorities.

That the use of "urgency orders" (hereinafterwards called "provisional orders," vide Recommendation 31) should be widened.

REPORT OF THE ENGLISH LUNACY LEGISLATION SUB-COMMITTEE.

With a view to giving effect to some of the recommendations of that Committee, many of which would necessitate emendation of the existing Lunacy Acts,

* Appointed witnesses.

* Appointed witnesses.

the Association in 1918 appointed the "English Lunacy Legislation Sub-Committee," which reported late in the same year.

That Report has had a wide circulation amongst the authorities concerned, and in the light of reconsideration after a lapse of six years is found to require but slight emendation. The Report was published in order to promote a Bill to facilitate the temporary treatment of incipient mental disorders without certification. The main principles in the Report involved the establishment of psychiatric clinics, associated wherever possible with general hospitals, the admission of voluntary boarders (hereinafterwards called voluntary patients) to be extended to rate-supported mental hospitals, and the recognition of the need of further provision for paying patients. These principles, and other supplementary proposals, were generally accepted, and in the main are to be found incorporated in the Mental Treatment Bill of 1923 (with provision for after-care and research). This Bill, for reasons which were not political, failed to reach the Statute Book.

THE EXISTING LUNACY ACTS.

The Association is of opinion that the vast majority of the community, including patients, is grateful for the protection afforded by the existing Lunacy Acts, and that the safeguards they provide against abuses and illegal detention have on the whole proved satisfactory.

These Acts have, however, failed to keep pace with medical progress, especially in regard to the treatment of the initial and more curable stage of mental disorders.

The Association, therefore, welcomed the appointment of a Royal Commission on Lunacy and Mental Disorder as an opportunity of stating its views in regard to amendment of the Lunacy Acts for England and Wales and, more especially, the principles involved in the reception, treatment, care and discharge of patients in institutions, and hopes that the Royal Commission will impress upon the Government the necessity of proceeding with a Mental Treatment Bill in harmony with the aspirations of the Association as set forth in this memorandum.

THE STATUS AND EDUCATION OF MEDICAL OFFICERS AND NURSES.

The Association notes with satisfaction that an increasing number of medical officers are granted study-leave, and obtain diplomas in psychological medicine, and that a large number of mental nurses now hold the Certificate in Mental Nursing of the Association.

SUMMARY OF RECOMMENDATIONS.

It is convenient here, before proceeding to set forth in extenso the Association's recommendations, to summarize the chief guiding principles upon which they are based.

The Association is of the opinion:

That "clinics for mental disorders," preferably in connection with the universities, medical schools and general hospitals, should be established.

That the reception into mental institutions of patients, whether of the private (hereinafterwards called "paying patients") or of the pauper (hereinafterwards called "rate-aided patients") class, should follow a similar procedure.

That a considerable proportion of admissions to mental institutions should be dealt with on a voluntary basis, so that such voluntary treatment should be extended to the rate-aided class, for which legislative sanction has already established precedents at the Maudsley Hospital and at the City of London Mental Hospital.

That special legal machinery should be devised for treating early non-volitional cases.

That a "provisional order" should be instituted as an intermediary measure before the usual "judicial order" for detention is enforced.

That when such detention is necessary for the cure or care of patients, medical certification should take place as constituting evidence, but that the authority for detention, discharge and continuation, i.e., renewal, of orders should entail the responsibility of some authorised person not acting in a medical capacity.

That a broader conception should be taken of the functions of both the central and local authorities for "lunacy" or mental health administration.

That the Poor Law authorities should be superseded by the local authorities in regard to the care, treatment and maintenance of necessitous patients suffering from mental disorders.

SUMMARY OF MATTERS OF FACT.

1. There are very few facilities for patients who are threatened with mental breakdown to obtain skilled treatment. As a rule they do not obtain it until certification takes place. But early symptoms of disorder often occur long before certification is possible.

2. Owing to efficient treatment being delayed the most valuable time for adopting measures to secure early recovery is lost.

3. There is strong objection to certification in itself on the part of the public, which is alive to the material and moral damage which it so often inflicts on the patient and his relatives, so that even when certification has become possible they refuse to resort to it, and thus still further postpone the adoption of efficient treatment.

4. In cases where certification has to be resorted to, the subsequent course of events often shows that this might have been avoided with advantage if there had been facilities for treatment under other conditions.

5. The experience gathered as the result of the war has opened the eyes of the public and the medical profession in a fresh way to the difficulties and needs of these cases.

6. Many medical practitioners, having had no opportunity of gaining knowledge of the manifestations and treatment of mental disorders in their early stages, fail to recognise the seriousness of the condition and to secure for their patients efficient treatment. They are also often deterred, by the necessity of certifying the patient, from advising suitable treatment. This unwillingness may be due to a genuine and proper doubt whether the condition is sufficiently definite to justify this procedure or to a natural reluctance to cause distress to the patient and his friends. In some cases direct evidence of insanity cannot be obtained at any particular interview, and certification and treatment are thus delayed.

7. In many early cases advantage would be taken of the opportunity for treatment were the voluntary patient system, with some modification of procedure, extended to rate-supported mental hospitals.

8. Many persons of the well-to-do classes, who are the subjects of mental disorder and are certifiable, are now placed in private houses and nursing homes without an order having been obtained for their reception. No intimation of their admission is given to the Board of Mental Health. No precautions are necessarily taken to ascertain that the conditions are favourable for the patient, or that efficient treatment is thus being obtained for him. It is felt that while many cases may be treated in private houses and nursing homes quite properly, provision should be made to give the competent authority the opportunity of ascertaining that houses and homes in which such patients are received are suitable for the purpose, and that the persons in charge are competent to treat cases of mental disorder.

RECOMMENDATIONS.

Recommendations 1 to 15, 24, 25, 41, 44, 51 and 53 were made by the English Legislation Sub-Committee of the Association, and with some emendations have again been adopted.

Recommendations 16 to 23, 26 to 40, 42, 43, 45 to 50, 52, and 54 to 58 are the outcome of the more recent deliberations of the Special Committee appointed to prepare this memorandum, the Parliamentary Committee and the Council, and were adopted at a General Meeting of the Association held on November 20, 1924.

Recommendation 1: The Association considers that the opportunity is afforded now for a further revision of the Lunacy Acts for England and Wales.

Although some desire to see the Lunacy Acts entirely re-cast, with abolition of the justice's order and other legal formalities, the majority are satisfied that such far-reaching changes are not expedient, and that the reforms most urgently needed could be obtained by an Amending Bill.

As the Association cannot but think that all, with experience of the subject, agree that the Law now presses hardly on certain cases, rate-aided and paying alike, is not abreast of modern requirements and aspirations, and is not working in the best interests of the State, it has endeavoured to frame proposals to meet these defects.

In doing so, it has kept in mind on the one hand the practical convenience and view-point and possible prejudice of those for whose benefit the measures suggested are intended, and on the other the necessity of winning the support of instructed lay opinion, the medical profession and the constituted authorities.

Psychiatric Clinics and Research Laboratories.

Recommendation 2: That clinics be established by local authorities for the treatment of nervous and mental diseases in their early stages; and that in the organisation of clinics special provision be made for children.

Recommendation 3: That voluntary patients should be received and also that provision be made for the reception of non-volitional patients for a limited time without certification in such a psychiatric clinic. (Vide Recommendation 58 (a) (c).)

Recommendation 4: That such a clinic should be where possible an annexe to a general hospital or housed in a special building.

Recommendation 5: That such a clinic should be adequately staffed and the medical and nursing personnel should include special staff trained in psychiatric work.

Recommendation 6: That it should be the duty of local authorities to provide and maintain clinics either themselves or by arrangement with voluntary organisations for the purpose (vide Recommendation 58 (a)).

Recommendation 7: That the supervisory committee or committee of management of such a clinic should be a special committee of the local statutory committee of mental health.

Recommendation 8: That the inspection and approval of the buildings used for such clinics should be the duty of the central Government Department. (For definition see Recommendations 16 and 17.)

Recommendation 9: That it is desirable that neighbouring mental hospitals should be enabled to establish and maintain joint laboratories for research (vide Recommendation 58 (a)).

Psychiatric clinics aim at providing facilities for treatment of which ailing members of the public will be ready to avail themselves at the earliest possible moment, even when the condition is merely what is commonly described as one of "disordered nerves." This necessitates as complete a dissociation as possible from the existing statutory requirements for dealing with the insane.

It also necessitates the provision of facilities similar in character and equal in completeness to those Recommendations 1 to 15, 24, 25, 41, 44, 51 and 53 thoroughly well-found and well-staffed clinic for both in-patients and out-patients. These facilities must be brought as near to the homes of the people as possible. They should therefore be established all over the country in large centres of population, preferably in connection with general hospitals, so that the people may easily obtain treatment or seek advice and so be encouraged to obtain instruction in mental hygiene at a stage when preventive measures are possible, and thus escape in many cases a serious breakdown, to the advantage both of themselves and the community; for thus would be retained as workers those who otherwise become a burden to their fellows.

No mere extension of the voluntary patient system in the mental hospitals (which is much to be desired on other grounds) would meet these requirements. Nor is it probable that any arrangements that might be made with general hospitals throughout the country would alone be sufficient.

Just as in ordinary hospitals some cases of delirium and excitement with loss of control occasionally occur and are dealt with without any great difficulty, so similarly cases of mental disease in their early stages where the symptoms are likely to subside under proper treatment would be received and suitably provided for in the proposed clinics.

The decision whether a case is or is not suitable for treatment in such a clinic would depend upon practical convenience and the nature and duration of the symptoms.

In large towns clinics should be part of, or annexes of, or failing these, affiliated to the general hospitals for many important reasons, not least among them being that students may have opportunities of studying those early stages of mental disorder which as practitioners they will be called upon to treat. Nurses undergoing hospital training could also take advantage of these opportunities to acquire a general knowledge of mental cases.

Clinics would also provide a valuable field for post-graduate work and for scientific research with the necessary laboratory accommodation.

Special clinics to act as "clearing houses" may be necessary in large districts, but it is hoped that if the bulk of the occurring mental disorder were overtaken while in its early stages, such "clearing houses" would be a disappearing factor in the mental health service of the country. Admission of suitable cases direct to mental hospitals is part of the policy of the Association.

As the Association is anxious to emphasize the necessity for the establishment of psychiatric clinics and research laboratories by local authorities, further detailed evidence on this important matter will be found in *Appendices I and II.

Voluntary Patients in Mental Hospitals.

Recommendation 10: That mental hospitals should be encouraged to admit patients as voluntary patients without loss of civil rights on their signing an application to that effect addressed to the medical officer of the institution, provided:

- (a) That there is accommodation approved of by the central Government department and the applicants are suitable persons.
- (b) That they should be required to give 72 hours' notice in writing of their desire to leave the institution, after the expiry of which period they must cease to reside as such; further provided that, before the notice expires, the patient does not intimate in writing his desire to withdraw the notice.

Recommendation 11: That regulations should be made setting out the conditions on which the medical officer may admit voluntary patients.

* Not re-produced.

Under the present Lunacy Acts patients may be received as voluntary patients in registered hospitals and licensed houses. This facility should be extended to suitable persons, whether of the paying or rate-aided class, desirous of placing themselves under treatment in the county or borough mental hospitals.

Many patients who have recovered in a rate-supported mental hospital from a previous attack, and are on the verge of a relapse, wish to place themselves under mental hospital care again, but are, at present, unable to do so until they become certifiably insane, and then they must be referred to the relieving officer.

There will no doubt be other cases unable to afford the expense of a registered hospital or licensed house who will prefer to apply direct to a rate-supported mental hospital for treatment in the first instance, if they can do so under the conditions attaching to voluntary patients. Their admission thereto would depend upon their suitability.

The Board of Mental Health should be informed of all persons received as voluntary patients into mental hospitals, but their previous consent thereto, or that of the justices in the case of the licensed houses, seems unnecessary and interferes with the utility of the plan, as many patients object to making written application to the Board of Mental Health or the justices for permission, as at present required; moreover, no such requirement obtains in the case of the registered hospitals.

Further, there appears to be no good reason why this mode of admission should be reserved for persons who cannot be certified as insane, as it conflicts with the fundamental principle that treatment should be begun at the earliest possible moment. It should be sufficient for anyone, being aware of his mental illness, voluntarily to sign a document expressing his desire to be admitted as a voluntary patient to a mental hospital for purposes of treatment.

For practical convenience it is much to be desired that the notice required to be given by voluntary patients of their intention to leave should be increased from 24 to 72 hours.

The reform suggested has long been advocated, and has met with practically no opposition.

Further Provision for Paying Patients.

Recommendation 12: That the central Government department should have power (a) to approve homes which are supported wholly or partly by voluntary contributions or which are privately owned, in which it shall be lawful to receive without certification more than one paying patient suffering from mental disease in its early stages, and (b) to give legal sanction to the reception without certification of such patients as single patients in houses not so approved, provided that a medical practitioner gives a written recommendation in each case, stating that suitable treatment can be obtained for the patient in the proposed house.

Recommendation 13: That on any such patient being received into or ceasing to reside in any approved (or recognized) home, or as a single patient in a house not so approved, the fact shall be intimated to the central Government department.

Recommendation 14: That it should be possible to transfer the jurisdiction for licensing a house from one authority to another on good reason being shown.

Recommendation 15: That certified patients and voluntary patients should be permitted reception direct to the branch establishments of registered hospitals and licensed houses.

It has to be recognized that the objection to certification in the early and curable stages of mental disorder is strongly felt by all classes, and the temptation, for those who can afford it, to send patients to unrecognized places of treatment is very great both for the patient's friends and their medical advisers. Those who receive such patients knowingly run the risk of prosecution, and there is no guarantee that they can or do give suitable care or treatment to the patients. The treatment of certain cases of mental disorder in suitable private houses and nursing homes is undoubtedly desirable, and the true interests of the patients should be obtainable in conformity with the law.

Where residential treatment is conducted for payment in the case of patients suffering from mental disorder which is deemed to be temporary, but who may be considered certifiable, it is desirable that the fact of their reception should be brought to the cognizance of the central authority. It is hoped that with this safeguard facilities may be granted for the treatment for payment by private persons or voluntary associations of early, undeveloped and recoverable cases of mental disease without the drawbacks attaching to certification.

It is suggested that the Board of Mental Health should be empowered to give legal sanction to the treatment of this group of cases without certification. This can only be done by provisions limiting the application of Section 315 of the Lunacy Act, 1890, which imposes penalties on those receiving persons of unsound mind for payment without certification. It is not proposed to do away with this Section, and as its enforcement is in the hands of the Board of Mental Health, it is practically necessary to give any powers over-riding its application to the same body.

The Central Authority.

Recommendation 16: That all matters of mental health be centralized in the Board of Control as the Government department under the Minister of Health and Lord Chancellor.

Recommendation 17: That such Government department or central authority be designated the "Board of Mental Health," instead of the present term "Board of Control," and that such Board should be increased in its medical personnel.

Recommendation 18: That at the statutory visits made to all mental institutions, public and private, and to patients in single care, one at least of the commissioners of the Board of Mental Health should be a medical commissioner.

Recommendation 19: That in making appointments of Medical Commissioners of the Board of Mental Health, it is important to take into consideration not only experience in mental disorders, but also experience in general medicine, and status in the medical profession.

Recommendation 20: That the remuneration of the medical members of the Board of Mental Health should be increased. The State should require the medical members of the Board to be of the highest standard of scientific and professional attainments.

The Local Authority.

Recommendation 21: That the management of all rate-supported institutions for the care and treatment of mental disorders and mental defect be vested in one statutory committee of mental health of a local authority.

Recommendation 22: That the statutory committee should direct all matters relating to mental health in the area, having regard to both voluntary and certified patients in rate-aided institutions, whether in clinics, mental hospitals, or elsewhere.

Recommendation 23: That the county or borough rate be utilized to support the maintenance of necessitous patients as well as that of the fabric of public mental institutions, and that such rate be supplemented by a Government grant, payable upon the certificate of the Board of Mental Health, which grant should extend to the provision for research, special medical and nursing training, and after-care.

Legal Formalities, etc.

Recommendation 24: That the existing Lunacy Acts should be called the Mental Disorders Acts, and an amending Act the Mental Treatment Act.

Recommendation 25: (a) That the words "lunacy" and "lunatics" be discontinued and the words "mental disorders" and "persons of unsound mind" be substituted.

(b) That instead of the word "asylum" the words "mental hospital" be used—county, city, or borough, as may be.

(c) That the word "rate-aided" be used instead of the word "pauper."

Recommendation 26: That patients who need care and treatment for mental disease at the public expense should not, on that account, be termed, or be regarded as, paupers.

Recommendation 27: That in-patient voluntary treatment be legalized in rate-supported mental hospitals as well as in clinics, and that the maintenance charges in necessitous cases be defrayed out of public funds by the statutory committee.

Recommendation 28: That rate-aided patients requiring certification be afforded similar procedure as obtains with paying patients, viz., the protection of two medical certificates on petition for a judicial reception order, instead of a summary reception order on one certificate which is the usual practice at present.

Recommendation 29: That when a relative or friend of a rate-aided patient is unable or unwilling to act as petitioner, an officer of the local authority, or other suitable officer, may be the petitioner entrusted with the duties of carrying out the requisite formalities.

Recommendation 30: That it should be made possible for rate-aided patients as well as paying patients to be admitted to mental hospitals under a "provisional order" (vide Recommendation 31-35).

Recommendation 31: That the present system of urgency procedure for all unwilling patients might with advantage be superseded by the institution of a provisional order.

Recommendation 32: That a provisional order may be used not only on the ground of urgency, but so as to provide means of temporary care, observation and treatment under safe conditions.

Recommendation 33: That a provisional order with statement of particulars should be signed by a relative or friend, or by an officer of the local authority, authorizing the reception of a patient for temporary care, observation and treatment.

Recommendation 34: That a provisional order should be accompanied by a medical certificate in special form, specifying facts and reasons indicating that a patient is a proper person for temporary care, observation and treatment.

Recommendation 35: That a provisional order and certificate should last three days, but be capable of extension in suitable cases for a further period not exceeding twenty-eight days, provided such extension is sanctioned by a judicial authority, or by two members of the visiting committee of a public mental institution, who may direct a further examination by another medical practitioner.

Recommendation 36: That when a provisional order and certificate is about to expire, the following three courses should be considered, according to the exigencies of the case, namely: (a) that the patient be discharged; (b) that the patient may remain voluntarily, or be dealt with, if a non-volitional case, under some such procedure as that projected in Section 4 of the Mental Treatment Bill, 1923; (c) that a judicial reception order for detention be obtained on petition with two medical certificates.

Recommendation 37: That verbal alterations in the present form of petition for a reception order are desirable, viz., the deletion of the words "lunacy" and "lunatic or idiot" in the margin; the substitution of "mental hospital" for "asylum," and "provisional order" for "urgency order"; and in the statement of particulars accompanying a petition or provisional order, the substitution of "whether previous history of mental disorder" for "whether first attack," "age at the onset of mental disorder" for "age on first attack," "when and where previously under care and treatment for mental disorder" for "when and where previously under care and treatment as a lunatic, idiot, or person of unsound mind," "duration of present mental disorder" for "duration of existing attack," and the addition of questions as to the length of residence at present address if such is not the usual place of abode, and as to the maiden name of a patient who is a married woman or widow.

Recommendation 38: That in the medical certificates (Form 8) used on petition, the words "separately from any other practitioner" be deleted as also in Section 29 (2) of the Lunacy Act, 1890; that a lettered space be inserted for "facts observed by the medical practitioner on previous occasions," and an additional lettered space giving his reasons for the necessity of detention.

Recommendation 39: That in the reception orders (Forms 3, 4, 12, 15) the words "authorize (direct) you to receive and detain" be substituted for "authorize (direct) you to receive."

Recommendation 40: That it is desirable that a judicial reception order should be made by a justice specially appointed in all cases, and who has seen the patient, and that the difficulties of procuring the services of a justice in certain areas should be remedied.

Recommendation 41: That where no criminal offence is charged it is undesirable that justices should in court conduct the examination of mental cases for the purpose of making reception orders.

Recommendation 42: That the present special report and certificate required to continue a reception order at stated intervals should be countersigned by a judicial authority, or two members of the visiting committee of a public mental hospital, and that the latest date of signature should be the end of the existing quarter in which the special report falls due.

Recommendation 43: That a copy of such special report and certificate thus countersigned be accessible to a discharged patient, on appeal to the Board of Mental Health, as in the case of the original reception document.

Recommendation 44: (a) That there is much need of simplification of forms under the existing Lunacy Acts.

(b) That intervals in time require uniformity and where convenient should be defined in hours.

(c) That the duration and lapsing of "reception orders" require amendment.

Recommendation 45: That leave of absence on trial or for health should be encouraged, and that no ambiguity should occur to prevent the return at any time of a certified patient to the institution or house if the petitioner or medical officer deems such return expedient.

Recommendation 46: That the discharge of rate-aided certified patients should, as in the case of certified private patients, be vested in the petitioner, but that in the former case six days' notice in writing should be given to the medical officer of a rate-supported mental hospital by the petitioner, desiring the discharge of a patient, and that if the medical officer considers that it is not in the interest of the patient or of the public that the patient should be discharged, he should then be permitted to defer the matter for the decision of the visiting committee at its next meeting, which shall have power to over-ride the action of the petitioner.

Recommendation 47: That the existing restriction of discharge of a patient by the certificate of a medical officer under Section 74 of the Lunacy Act, 1890, should be countersigned by a judicial authority or by two members of the visiting committee of a public mental hospital.

Recommendation 48: That Section 75 of the Lunacy Act, 1890, which deals with discharge by two Commissioners, and Section 83 which deals with discharge on recovery, be extended to include rate-aided patients in mental hospitals.

Recommendation 49: That the automatic discharge of a patient by escape after fourteen days is undesirable.

After-care.

Recommendation 50: That the after-care of rate-aided patients should receive due attention, and that the work done by the Mental After-Care Association, or other bodies appointed to deal with after-care, should receive adequate pecuniary recognition by statutory committees.

Poor Law Infirmaries.

Recommendation 51: That it is undesirable that patients alleged to be of unsound mind should be removed to a workhouse or pauper infirmary before their reception in a mental hospital. If an intermediary stage is necessary after the provision of clinics for incipient cases it would be better supplied by a special clinic under the management of the local authority. Practical convenience such as a motor service should be available for the transfer of patients to mental institutions on lines similar to those adopted in the Public Health Service.

Recommendation 52: That a Poor Law infirmary may be regarded as an institution for mental disorders if approved by the Board of Mental Health.

Recommendation 53: That it should be permissible for patients transferred from a mental hospital to a Poor Law institution to be transferred back without re-certification.

Recommendation 54: That the present certificate of a medical officer of a Poor Law infirmary should not as in Section 24 (2) of the Lunacy Act of 1890 be sufficient authority for the detention of a patient for fourteen days, but should require the addition of a provisional order.

Recommendation 55: That reports on mental cases in all Poor Law institutions, as in mental hospitals, should be notified to the Board of Mental Health, and that the arrangements provided for mental cases should be under the management of the statutory committee of mental health of the local authority.

Recommendation 56: That better provision should be made for the care and treatment of senile cases in infirmaries approved by the Board of Mental Health, in order that every effort should be made to avoid the stigma of certification.

Protection to Medical Practitioners and Others.

Recommendation 57: That the protection afforded by Section 330 of the Lunacy Act, 1890, to medical practitioners, and to others engaged in pursuance of the Act, should be extended to stay proceedings at an earlier stage than at present, and that they should receive the same immunity as is given to witnesses in a court of law.

Mental Treatment Bill, 1923.

Recommendation 58: In the event of the Mental Treatment Bill, 1923, as amended by the House of Lords, being again introduced to Parliament, the Association will press for emendation on the following lines:

- (a) Section 2: Subsections (2) and (3) should be obligatory as regards provision of institutions in accordance with Recommendation 6. That the term "institution" should be defined within the meaning of "approved institution" under Section 4 (2). That "voluntary patient" should be substituted for "boarder" in Subsection (3), and that there should be no legal formality necessitating the written application of a voluntary patient for reception to a public mental clinic. That a further Subsection is desirable dealing with voluntary patients in private houses and nursing homes in accordance with Recommendations 12 and 13. That in addition to research in Subsection (5) the expenses of special medical and nursing training should be included in accordance with Recommendation 23.
- (b) Section 3: The Association regards both subsections as opposed to Recommendations 16 to 20.
- (c) Section 4: The Association desires that voluntary patients should be dealt with under Section 2, and that Section 4 should deal only with non-volitional patients, and minors. That extensions for treatment should be permissible for further periods of six months. That this Section should also apply to non-volitional patients, and minors in private houses and nursing homes. That one recommendation from any medical practitioner should be required. That notification to the Board of Mental Health within 24 hours of reception should be a sufficient safeguard, and render an annexed statement by a justice or minister of religion unnecessary.
- (d) Section 5: The Association considers that this Section requires redrafting to distinguish discharge of voluntary patients from non-volitional patients, and minors, and that notice of leaving should be in writing.

Office of the Association,
11, Chandos Street,
Cavendish Square, W. 1;
January, 1925.

APPENDIX XXV.

Question 17,288.

PRÉCIS OF EVIDENCE TO BE GIVEN ON BEHALF OF THE NATIONAL COUNCIL FOR MENTAL HYGIENE BY DR. E. FARQUHAR BUZZARD, M.D., F.R.C.P., DR. H. CRICHTON MILLER, M.D., AND DR. R. WORTH, O.B.E., M.B.

THE NATIONAL COUNCIL FOR MENTAL HYGIENE.

The Council aims at bringing the treatment of mental disorder into the fold of General Medicine. The segregation of cases of mental illness into institutions which are largely divorced from the general hospitals of the country creates the impression that mental illness is something quite different from bodily illness. This divorce in regard to certain types of patient is largely unavoidable at any rate for the present, but whilst mental hospitals will be necessary, there remains a large and most important class of patients for whom at present very little provision is made. Moreover, this class of early, and often recoverable cases, affords the greatest hope of diminishing the incidence of more serious mental disorder, of improving its treatment and of understanding its causation.

There is, in fact, a world-wide movement in this direction. This view is confirmed by the experience of kindred National Societies for Mental Hygiene, and is leading to the formation of clinics or special departments to deal with these patients in connection with general hospitals.

The Council, however, fully realises that such clinics or special departments in general hospitals are not suitable for the treatment of certain forms of mental disorder, by reason of the fact that the majority of such cases are characterised by alteration of conduct of such a nature as to necessitate treatment in special hospitals adapted for the purpose, such as the County and Borough Mental Hospitals.

The subject will be dealt with in the following order:—

- (1) Types of patients to be dealt with.
- (2) Numbers of patients.
- (3) Existing facilities for early treatment for mental disorders.*
- (4), (5), and (6) Recommendations for early treatment for mental disorders.
- (7) The administration of public mental hospitals.
- (8) After-care.

(1) Types of Patients to be dealt with.

Patients suffering from mental disorder include:—

- (a) Those cases suffering from mental disorders where the question of certification does not arise. This group includes some patients suffering from neurasthenia anxiety neuroses, hysteria fears and so on.
- (b) Those with mental disorder in which the question of certification arises, but which should not necessarily involve certification because they are either willing to submit to treatment or are non-volitional. (Vide footnote.)†
- (c) Those for whom treatment and care is required, and by whom it is refused and for whom obligatory treatment becomes necessary.

(2) Numbers of patients needing early treatment.

To gain some idea of the number of those in the early stages of mental disorder needing early treatment it is only necessary to look at:—

(a) The Report of the Board of Control, which gives the number of those who have finally succumbed

* The term "Mental Disorder" is used as suggested in the Memorandum of the British Medical Association, i.e. to include "grave and mid cases and the very beginning of disorder on the one hand and its latest manifestation on the other."

† "Non-volitional" is a person who does not express unwillingness to submit to treatment. (British Medical Association.)

and were therefore certified. There were 130,334 patients under certificates on 1st January, 1924, and 18,934 first admissions in 1923. In the large majority of these cases the certifiable stage of the mental disorder was preceded by a period of instability, varying from many years to a few weeks during which it was impossible to certify and therefore, as will be shown later, impossible to secure efficient treatment for those unable to pay.

In addition there were 35,413 mental defectives.

(b) The Report of the Commissioners of Prisons, also throws light on this question of numbers needing treatment.

In the year ending 31st March, 1923, there were 1,842 prisoners remanded for report on their mental condition in addition to:—

134 certified insane during sentence,
227 found insane on remand,
55 found insane at time of the trial,
71 certified as mentally defective, during sentence,
165 certified as mentally defective on remand.

Thus in addition to 1,842 persons who gave reason to believe that their mental condition was unsatisfactory, there were:—

416 found to be definitely insane,
236 found to be mentally defective,

i.e., 652 with mental abnormality according to the terminology of the British Medical Association Memorandum.

These 416 insane persons for whom there is at present such woefully inadequate provision for treatment had broken the law while in the incipient or early period of insanity. It is unreasonable to suppose that after the offence they had suddenly leapt into definite insanity from normal health.

It is also probable that a clinic at the general hospitals would have ascertained and notified a considerable percentage of the 236 mental defectives.

Moreover, is it not fair to assume that of the 1,842 persons whose mental condition gave rise to anxiety the majority were in a state of mental instability and had failed to adapt efficiently to life?

The Prison Commissioners quote from a medical report from Birmingham: "There are mental abnormalities other than certifiable insanity and mental defect which are frequently found among offenders." Again: "At the present time Courts often have no alternative but prison." Again: "There can be little doubt that persons suffering from these mental conflicts are liable to be damaged still further physically by imprisonment without full and proper treatment."

We submit that at present this country is lacking in adequate provision for dealing with this situation, and that it is essentially a problem of mental disorder and treatment.

(c) The Registrar General's Return as to suicides is another indication of instability which emphasises the numbers requiring, and the need for, early treatment, before certification is possible.

Suicides in 1923:—

Men	2,887
Women	1,062
Total	3,949

These also show a want of adaption which is surely abnormal. With better understanding of mental states and provision of facilities for obtaining help, their number should be lessened.

(d) Police Returns of attempted suicides.

In the last issued returns for 1921 there were 1,461 attempted suicides. This records only those taken into Court, which is, of course, only a fraction of the real number.

(e) Problems such as illegitimacy, dependency, vagrancy, alcoholism and so on are in our opinion closely related to these states of minor and early mental disorder and indicative of their wide prevalence, and are in part due to the little treatment available.

(f) The Report of the Chief Medical Officer of the Ministry of Health for 1923 adds another class of mental sufferers, viz., cases arising as a result of Encephalitis Lethargica. He states that:—"The question of making provision for the special care and treatment of these conditions, more especially the mental after-effects of Encephalitis Lethargica is under consideration of the Ministry." These mental symptoms according to the same Report include:—"Irritability, maniacal outbursts, hebétude, complete change in moral character and self-control, lying and theft, &c." "These symptoms are of all grades of severity; they are usually seen in children or in young adults." The notified cases for 1921—1,470, 1922—454, 1923—1,025, and for the first half only of 1924—3629.

These numbers appear to be increasing and the proposed clinics, if established, could help very materially in dealing with these cases, for diagnosis, treatment and research; thus partly meeting the want which is felt by the Ministry of Health to be urgent.

The statistics given, and the large numbers included under each head, make it clear that the treatment of these cases demands immediate attention.

(3) Existing Facilities for Early Treatment for Mental Disorders.

The National Council for Mental Hygiene recently sent out a questionnaire on facilities for treatment to 237 of the more important hospitals and infirmaries in England, Scotland and Wales. 159 replies were received. 135 institutions replied that they had no provision of any description for such treatment. 24 more institutions replied in the affirmative to one or more of the questions (14 had provision for out-patients and 6 had provision for in-patients also). Only 5 of the 237 institutions gave replies indicating that their institutions had facilities, even if limited in scope, for the In-Patient treatment of cases of early mental disorder.

Besides the above, there is some very limited in-patient provision for early treatment of the poorer classes in special hospitals such as "The Maudsley," "The Lady Chichester Hospital," Brighton, and in some of the wards of Hospitals for Nervous Diseases.

It may be objected that these early cases may be treated by their own doctors or by some existing institutions. So far as poorer patients are concerned, the objection is unsound. Many doctors cannot spare the time, even if they possess the qualifications, and the Authorities of the County and Borough Mental Hospitals are not empowered to admit the patients as Voluntary Boarders, even if they seek admission.

(4), (5) and (6) Recommendations for Early Treatment for Mental Disorders.

(4) The National Council for Mental Hygiene recommends that skilled treatment for mental disorders in their early stages should be available in clinics belonging to general hospitals, or in special institutions.

(a) General Hospitals.

From many points of view the general hospital, assuming that suitable staff and accommodation are provided, is the ideal institution for many of those patients who need treatment, and not compulsory detention.

(i) The general hospital is the natural place for the patient to go to if not well and the mentally sick patient is then like any other patient.

(ii) It is in a central available situation.

(iii) It has facilities for consultation with physicians, surgeons and specialists.

(iv) It has laboratories for exhaustive examination and team work.

(v) Many patients already attend the general hospitals without realising that they are primarily suffering from mental disorder. They will always be found there, helping to swell the "chronic" section of the out-patient Department, as, even when their condition is correctly diagnosed, there exist no means of affording them appropriate treatment. Moreover, these patients may be undermining the mental health of every member of the household in which they live. This is true even of some mild cases and was pointed out long ago by Weir Mitchell:—"Wherever you have a nervous girl you will soon have two sick women."

(vi) A Department including out-patients and in-patients for these cases should be a special department in charge of a suitably qualified physician, as the Eye, Ear, Skin and Venereal Disease Departments are already. It should provide facilities for classification and for other special requirements. Such a department would lead to a better grasp of these states by the medical profession as a whole. The interchange of cases between this and the other departments would tend to show that a number of patients, with apparently other complaints, were really suffering from mental disorders. On the other hand, many cases diagnosed as mental would be shown to be due to physical conditions. Our proposal would benefit the medical students where a medical school is attached to a hospital, also the nursing profession, and would lead to a better understanding of mental cases by the public.

(vii) In general hospitals there is at present no need for routine personal visitation of willing or non-volitional patients by any authority. It would, therefore, seem hardly necessary that the cases we are dealing with should be so visited. We feel that there should be no differentiation between this class and any other class of patients in general hospitals. We appreciate that a grant of money by a public body would carry with it the right of supervision.

(b) Special Institutions.

These are required when and where the general hospital is unwilling or unable to undertake the work. In this case it would be wise that the work should be carried on in buildings completely separate from County and Borough Mental Hospitals. Their organisation should approximate as closely as possible to the voluntary hospital principles, and there should be no compulsory detention.

(5) The Council recommends that Voluntary Boarders should be allowed in all County and Borough Mental Hospitals.

It finds itself in complete agreement with the Medico-Psychological Association and the British Medical Association that it is desirable that the Voluntary Boarder system should be extended to rate-aided institutions, and desires to endorse the arguments which these bodies have set before the Commission.

(6) The Council recommends, with regard to provision for early treatment for those who can pay, that medical practitioners should be allowed to treat willing and non-volitional patients without certificates in registered nursing homes or kindred institutions. There is difficulty in obtaining early treatment if a patient be a borderland case or certifiable as insane, and yet the doctor who treats them in his own home, or his nursing home, does so at his peril, unless they are under certificates. He may be prosecuted and fined. Moreover the doctor is only allowed, even with permission, to take two certified patients, however competent he may be and however anxious other patients may be to place themselves under his care. The same risk is run by the proprietor of any house or home to which patients may wish to go.

Wherever non-volitional cases are received, some form of notification to, or supervision by the Central Authority is, in the opinion of the Council, desirable. But the routine personal inspection of patients as opposed to the inspection of institutions may be detrimental; it should be reduced to a minimum, and should be entirely medical. It is noteworthy that there is no system of supervision or visitation of patients suffering from, say, febrile delirium such as in pneumonia or typhoid, paralytic strokes, or comatose states, all of which conditions may render them non-volitional and as unable to protect themselves from inadequate or careless treatment as even the most advanced cases of mental disorder are. To protect all patients, and in keeping with the principle enunciated above of bringing this treatment into line with General Medicine, we would urge the registration of all nursing homes under the Ministry of Health. We deprecate any special registration of homes which take willing mental patients simply because their condition is thought to have a mental rather than a physical basis. Under such a system of universal registration of nursing homes of every type, abuses can be dealt with by the ordinary process of law and those patients suffering from mental disorder have the widest choice of where they wish to be treated.

(7) The Administration of Public Mental Hospitals.

As regards the Administration of Public Mental Hospitals, the Council feels that hospital methods should be adopted to the fullest extent, but they would not wish it to appear that they think that in many cases this is not so already. They urge that the practice of appointing consultants in general medicine and surgery, and their special branches should be universal throughout Public Mental Hospitals, and that the staff of the latter hospitals should be permitted to hold corresponding positions in psychiatry at the general hospitals.

They would also urge that the Central Authority (the Board of Control) should have greater powers to enforce the adoption of such facilities where they do not already exist. They consider that the ordinary medical attendants of patients admitted into Mental Hospitals should be given every facility for keeping in touch with the progress and treatment of their patients and for collaborating in the treatment whenever possible; in this way patients leaving hospital would, on returning to their homes, be enabled to continue after-treatment assisted by the knowledge and experience thus acquired by the general practitioner.

(8) After Care.

The Council recognises that in very many cases the recurrence of mental disorder is precipitated by the return to unsuitable home conditions. They consider, therefore, that every assistance and encouragement should be given to after-treatment, such as is at present given by the After Care Association. They have evidence, in the experience of certain members of the Committee, that where after care is available, permanent mental health is re-established, and, therefore, they urge that the financial authority should generously support any established or recognised organisation which has this After Treatment as its function.

TO SUM UP WE BEG TO SUBMIT:—

1. That the facilities for Early Treatment of Mental Disorder are entirely inadequate.

2. That some idea of the numbers needing treatment can be got from the Reports of the Board of Control, the Prison Commissioners, the Registrar-General's return as to suicides, the Police Report of attempted suicides and the Chief Medical Officer's return as to Encephalitis Lethargica.

3. That problems such as illegitimacy, dependency, and the prevalence of venereal disease, prostitution, vagrancy, alcoholism and so on are closely related to these states of minor early mental disorder and often caused by them.

4. That there appears to be no just reason for omitting the skilled treatment of these patients on a voluntary basis just as in other diseases.

5. That the facilities afforded to medical students for studying the early cases in hospitals (being the ones met constantly and frequently in their subsequent work) and the examination in this subject, are inadequate.

6. That the patients for which increased facilities are required are those suffering from non-certifiable mental disorder, borderland patients, and willing and such non-volitional patients as do not need compulsory detention.

7. That while admitting that inspection of homes and institutions treating non-volitional cases is necessary, this should only be a part of a general system of inspection of all nursing homes.

8. That early treatment, should, if possible, be provided for in a special department of a General Hospital for the sake of the patients, nurses, and the medical profession.

9. That there is a precedent for rate and State-aided clinics in the venereal disease clinics and that financial assistance either from State funds or local rates would ultimately be an economy in money, time and labour, and lead to more happiness and less disease. We, therefore, recommend that clinics and other necessary means for treating mental disorders should receive financial support either from the State or local funds, or both.

10. That as regards Public Mental Hospitals:—

(a) There should be appointed on the staff of these hospitals, consultants in general medicine and surgery, and their special branches.

(b) The Board of Control should have greater power to enforce the adoption of such appointments, and

(c) The patients' own medical attendants should be encouraged to visit them and collaborate with the medical staff as closely as possible.

11. That every assistance and encouragement should be given to after-care.

APPENDIX XXVI.

Question 19,058.

LONDON COUNTY COUNCIL.
Maudsley Hospital.

The following table shows the expenditure and income for the financial year 1924-25. There was an average number of 139 patients resident :—

Provision in estimates, 1924-25.	Sub-head.	Cost during year.
		Amount.	Per in-patient, weekly.
£		£	s. d.
18,227	Maintenance :—
9,000	Salaries, wages and uniforms	18,301	50 7·3
4,500	Provisions (including staff)	7,154	19 9·4
1,000	Fuel, lighting and furniture	5,505	15 2·7
2,100	Rates and insurance	1,009	2 9·5
	Miscellaneous	1,918	5 3·7
34,827		33,887	93 8·6
10,800	Less Income :—
2,000	Maintenance of in-patients	11,498	31 9·6
200	Staff for board and lodging	1,781	4 11·1
	Out-patients	248	0 8·2
	Sales and sundries	77	0 2·6
13,000		13,604	37 7·5
21,827	Net charge to Special County account for main- tenance	20,283	56 1·1
1,740	Repairs to buildings, etc.	1,919	5 3·7

The above figures do not include debt charges which are as follows :—

	Amount.	Per patient weekly.
		On average number resident (139 in 1924-25).	On total number of beds (157).
	£	s. d.	s. d.
Approximate debt charges on net capital cost (after deducting Maudsley Gift)	3,250	9 0	7 11·3
Decreasing annually by	63	0 2	0 1·8
Approximate debt charges on gross capital cost (without deducting Maudsley Gift)	5,000	13 10	12 2·5
Decreasing annually by	91	0 3	0 2·6

During the year in question 506 patients were admitted as residents.
42 patients paid £6 6s. 0d. a week for private rooms.
53 patients paid £5 a week, the full charge for ward accommodation.
21 patients paid from £2 10s. 0d. a week to £4 4s. 0d.
30 patients paid from £2 a week to £2 5s. 0d.
36 patients paid from £1 a week to £1 10s. 0d.
92 patients paid from 10s. a week to £1.
125 patients paid from 1s. a week to 10s.
66 patients were on the free list.
41 patients were paid for by Boards of Guardians at rates averaging £2 4s. 0d. a week for men and £2 1s. 6d. for women.

INDEX TO SUBJECTS.

Absence, see Leave of Absence.

Accommodation :

Classes of institutions, Willis ... 64-6, 620-2
Demand overtaking supply, Beard ... 19,415-7
Distribution of patients, 1st January, 1924,
Willis ... 67-72
Inadequacy in some cases, and difficulty occasioned by, Lidbetter 1709-20; Walden 2083, 2085; Baly 2683-97.
proposed Institutions, Willis ... 21,386

FOR PRIVATE PATIENTS :

Adequacy, question of, Willis 629-34, 642;
Phillips 5980-1; Parker 11,300.
Difficulty in case of patients with income up to £200 a year, Hildyard ... 18,242-7
Extension in direction of registered hospital the best, Yellowlees ... 5823-4
Increase needed, Edwards ... 6329-32
Limit nearly reached, Willis ... 642, 658-9 in Public institutions: Macleod, Bond, Willis
280-2, 633-9, 650-7.
Advocated, Miss C. ... 14,405-10, 14,496
Birmingham, Barnsley ... 1969-72, 1980-3
Claybury, Barham ... 7366-8
Herrison Asylum, Dorchester, Sandhurst 17,989
Lancashire, Taggart ... 13,058-61, 13,270-7
Leicester City Mental Hospital, Humberstone,
Dixon ... 3731-4
London County Council Mental hospitals, see that title.
Portsmouth, Devine ... 4522-5, 4536-9 would not be Preferred by patients or relatives, Sandhurst ... 17,986-92
Scotland, Rose, Marr 15,048-85, 15,090-2,
15,105-17; Cole 17,050.
proposed Types of, Mapother ... 18,868 as Near home as possible desirable for paupers,
Hill ... 18,296
Public responsibility should rest on visiting committee of local authority not with guardians,
Willis ... 21,386

Administration :

Board of Control, see that title.

CENTRAL BODY :

Constitution, opinion re, and need for legal element, Schuster ... 1006-12, 1037 with District Commissioners would be approved,
Parker ... 10,573-4A, 11,801
Legal and medical members and a business man advocated, Parker ... 10,459-71 with some Localisation, need for, Parker
10,441-8, 10,458, 11,801
Local Authorities should have as much freedom as possible, Beard ... 19,547-9
Public suspicion in connection with, Lovsey 5280-5
Multiplicity of authorities, Gibson ... 12,261-3
SCOTLAND :
by Districts, system, Rose 14,940-63; Marr 14,943.
general Satisfaction with, Robertson 15,928-33
Statutes, Rose ... 14,964-7
Smooth working of, from point of view of guardians,
Propert ... 5986-90

Admission :CONVEYANCE TO MENTAL HOSPITALS :

Ambulances, suggestion, Lewis ... 4645
Personal experience, Mrs. M. 13,825-31; Mr. P.
14,210; Mrs. O. 20,077-81.

DIRECT, TO MENTAL HOSPITALS :

Birmingham, Barnsley 1799, 1925, 1929; Lord
2264-6, 2279-80; Lovsey 5290-2.
Desirable, Lewis 4645; Cole, Lord, Menzies
16,967-91; Boyle 18,733-4.
Difficulties and objections to, Usher 3265-79;
Leach 6089-101.

Documents, see Reception Orders and Certificates.

under False pretences, Barr ... 7071
Objection to, Lewis ... 4645

Admission—cont.

to Mental hospitals at earliest possible moment, desirable, Barham ... 7557-8 of New cases to very large hospitals, question of advisability, Leach ... 6139-42
OF PERSON NOT INSANE :
Procedure, question of, Lomax ... 12,977-87
Refusal, Taggart ... 13,265-7, 13,269 on Sheriff's Order, Scotland, Marr 15,154-82, 15,205 into Various classes of institutions, 1923,
Edwards ... 5330
Admission Ward, see Reception ward.

Adolescent Mental Disorder :

special Industrial Schools suitable for some cases,
Fox ... 21,131-2
Nature of cases, Fox, Tredgold 21,164-200, 21,208.
Number of cases to be dealt with, estimate, Tred- gold ... 21,157-62, 21,230-1
Provision for, and inadequacy of, Tredgold, Fox,
Andrew 21,101-21, 21,126, 21,142-4, 21,152-6, 21,213-29, 21,240-1.
SPECIAL INSTITUTIONS FOR, WITH TRAINING AND OCCUPATION AS WELL AS MEDICAL TREATMENT :
Expense, estimate of, Fox ... 21,157-62
Scheme, Tredgold, Fox 21,106-15, 21,122-63, 21,189, 21,202-11, 21,239-43, 21,257-9.
Treatment should be voluntary only, Fox 21,130, 21,138-9, 21,207-11; Tredgold 21,139-40,
21,202-7, 21,257-9.
Supervision by Board of Control desirable, Tred- gold 21,246-9; Fox 21,249.
Work of South-West Lancashire Association for Mental Welfare, Andrew ... 21,213-29
Adolescents, psychological examination of persons charged with offences, suggestion, Tredgold
21,233-5, 21,250-3

After-Care :

Clinics at out-patients' departments essential to,
Boyle ... 18,554-5
Communication between asylum doctor and doctor at home, suggestion, Langdon-Down,
Murrell, Bone ... 13,595-600, 13,605-12
Expenditure on, by Local Authorities, provision in Mental Treatment Bill approved, Sidney
19,280, 19,291-3
Facilities for, but patients would not care for,
Devine ... 4383
temporary Financial assistance, need for, Langdon-
Down 13,617-20, 13,710-4; Gardner 19,285, 19,288.
Financial assistance required and question of method, Worth ... 17,249, 17,252-4, 17,257-61
Homes and convalescent homes, need for, Langdon-
Down 13,594, 13,613-4; Goodall 17,265-6; Cole
17,278-9; Gardner 19,281-2.
Need for, Lidbetter 1751; Walden 2162-7; White- more 3586-7; Broome Giles 3664; Parker 11,801;
Gardner 19,281-8, 19,295.
Patient's consent must be safeguarded, Murrell
13,621-5
Problem of, Hodgson ... 13,476
Public provision for, advocated, Langdon-Down
13,603
Queen Adelaide Fund, Keene 5008; Lobjoit 5150;
Worth 17,242-3.
Return to same people as before certification, objection to, and steps should be taken to arrange suitable surroundings, Miss C. 14,510-21, 14,593
in Scotland, Rose ... 15,653-4
Statutory provision for, advocated, Cole ... 17,277-8
Suggestion, Connell ... 4143, 4190
After-Care Association :
Branch in every Mental Hospital desirable,
Vickers ... 7733-8
Branches, Vickers ... 7758-60
Cases assisted by, statistics, Vickers 7731-2; Worth 17,250.

After-Care Association—cont.

- Clinical out-patients' department, Worth 17,249
 Distribution, Worth ... 17,255
 Evidence on behalf of, see Vickers, Miss 7695-795
 Expenses, 1924, Vickers ... 7767
 Finding of employment by, Vickers ... 7761-5
 Funds, Vickers ... 7697-704, 7787-8
 Homes, Vickers 7705-7, 7724-30, 7735-42, 7757, 7783-6; Worth 17,249-50; Cole 17,279.
 Members, visits to asylums, Vickers ... 7747-54
 Relationship between asylums and, Vickers 7743-6
 Staff, Vickers ... 7708-11
 State assistance desirable, Sandhurst ... 18,016-7
 Subscriptions to, by local authorities, Cole 17,279
 Visitors, etc., success of, and work seldom resented, Worth, 17,262-4; Lord 17,270-1.
 Visiting of patients' homes previous to discharge and value of, Worth, Goodall, Lord 17,245-9; 17,265-7.
 Visiting of patients on leave of absence on trial, Worth 17,255-6; Goodall 17,265.
WORK OF: Keene 5008-9; Vickers 7712-95.
 Approval of, Langdon-Down ... 13,601 at Cardiff, Goodall ... 17,264
 Useful, but cases must be selected with discretion, Lobjoit ... 5150-1
 Value of, Dixon 4037; Barham 7457-60, 7481; Worth 17,245-51; Goodall 17,265; Lord 17,266-71.

Alcoholism:

- Cases brought in under Section 20, dealt with under Lunacy Acts, Lambeth Infirmary, system, Baly ... 2746-73
 Certification as result, Baly ... 2874-7
 Difficulty of dealing with cases, Broome Giles 3709-10
 Edinburgh Royal Infirmary cases, decline, Comrie, 16,450-7
 Private cases, difficulty in connection with, and procedure by order of committal to inebriates' home proposed, Whitemore ... 3569

Aliens:

- Jurisdiction of Home Office, Brock ... 1076
 Position of, Schuster ... 1045-7
 Allowances to patients on trial, see under Leave of absence on trial.
 Amalgamation of Board of Control Visitors and Visitors in Lunacy, see under Visitors under Board of Control.
 Amusement, see Recreation under Care and Treatment.
 "Approved homes," suggestion, Langdon-Down 7893-6
 Association of Municipal Corporations, evidence on behalf of, see Beard, Sir Lewis ... 19,412-565

Association of Poor Law Unions:

- Evidence on behalf of, see Propert, Rev. P. S. G., &c. ... 5982-6309
 Nature of membership, work, &c., Leach, Propert, 6053-61

Asylums, see Mental Hospitals.

Attendants, see Nursing Staff.

Attorney, power of, position re, Craig ... 20,913-9

Baltimore, Phipps Institute, Mott 17,149; Boyle 18,567-70.

Basingstoke Asylum, villa system, Sandhurst 17,860-2

Bathing arrangements, see under Care and Treatment.

Bed time, see under Care and Treatment.

Belgium, boarding out in, Boyle 18,666; Gardner 19,237-8.

Bethlem Royal Hospital:

- Accommodation, Phillips ... 5862
 Complaints from patients and action on, Faudel-Phillips ... 5937-52
 Discharge, expression of appreciation on, Faudel-Phillips ... 5962-7
 Free patients, Phillips 5865; Faudel-Phillips 5865-6.

Bethlem Royal Hospital—cont.

- Interviews with patients after admission, Faudel-Phillips ... 5931-6
 Library and Pathological Department, Phillips 5919-20
 Name, drawback of, Faudel-Phillips ... 5959-60
 Nursing staff, Phillips ... 5915, 5918
 Training given at, Phillips ... 5974-5
 Uncertified patients, Phillips ... 10,307, 10,321
 Voluntary boarders, Phillips 5861-75, 5931-3, 5953-6, 10,326-45

Birmingham:

Accommodation, Barnsley 1984-90; Lord 2264-6.

MENTAL HOSPITALS:

- Admissions generally direct, not through workhouse, Barnsley 1799, 1925, 1929; Lord 2264-6, 2279-80; Lorsey 5290-2.
 Leave of absence on trial, Lorsey ... 5366-7
 Readmission, Graves ... 5375-80
 Request for complaints during consideration of discharge, and in future request to be made after discharge, Lorsey ... 5351-9
 Lunacy Acts, working of, Lord ... 2181-304
 Lunatics, number, Barnsley ... 1975
 Private patients, accommodation in public asylums. Barnsley ... 1969-72, 1980-3
 Research at, Mott ... 17,146, 17,152, 17,176-7
 Senile cases, transfer from workhouses to asylums, and objection to, Lorsey 5247-9, 5286-8, 5370-4
 Blackburn, health education work, Beard ... 19,460

Board of Control:

- Access to, of friends of private patients, Willis 607-10
 Assistance in appointment of Medical Superintendent, case of Willis ... 926-8
 Associate Medical Commissioners, suggestion. Menzies, Goodall, Lord, Cole ... 17,031-9
 Chairman, appointed by Minister of Health. Brock ... 1106-8
 Clerical staff, and inadequacy, Willis 317, 329, 833-40

COMMISSIONERS:

- should Attend Hospital Committee meetings. Hodgson ... 13,474-5
 Attendance at headquarters, system, Bond 207-9; Willis 209.
 District:
 Inspectors preferred, Menzies ... 17,021-7
 Question of, Parker 10,469-73, 11,127, 11,801
 Scheme, Lomax ... 12,876-94
 Inadequacy of number, Edwards ... 6396-8
 Increased number with advisory functions advocated, Hodgson ... 13,474
 Legal, appointment by Lord Chancellor, Schuster 1025

Medical:

- Appointment by Minister of Health, Brock 1106-7, 1189; Schuster 1026.
 Women, advocated, Craig ... 20,929
 Number proposed, Menzies 17,016-7, 17,019-20
 Salary proposed, Menzies ... 17,018
 Service under local authority should count towards pension, Menzies ... 17,018
 Complaints to, through relatives, Macleod 409-11; Willis 411.
 Composition, Willis ... 5, 7, 724-5
 Consultation by Ministry of Health on receipt of letters from patients, Brock 1127-34, 1136-41, 1195
 Control over licensed houses, extent, Edwards 6475-6 not a truly Controlling central body, Parker 10,438-40, 10,476
 District Boards, question of, Hodgson ... 13,472 certain Duplication of work with Minister of Health, Willis ... 37-8
 Evidence on behalf of, see Willis, Sir Frederick J., K.B.E., C.B., Macleod. S. J. Fraser, K.C., and Bond, Dr. C. H., C.B.E., D.Sc., M.D., F.R.C.P. 1-944, 21,260-400
 Examination of pauper lunatic on order of, Willis 549, 551, 556, 560, 579-85; Bond 586-94; Chubb 6740-3.

Board of Control—cont.FUNCTIONS:

See also Powers and Duties below.

Distinction from those of Visitors in Lunacy, Schuster ... 1032-5
 General statement, Willis ... 27-31
 Scrutiny of documents, and procedure re, Macleod, Willis, Bond 131-5, 153, 161-201, 204-6, 210-11, 215-34, 251-2, 306-12, 834-7; Fawcett 6967-9.
 Visitation, see that title.

Grant-in-aid should be in the hands of, Gibson 12,264-78; Menzies 17,040-3; Lord 17,041.

History, Willis ... 4-5

Inquiry on oath, Macleod ... 427-32

INSPECTORS:

Appointment of, Parker ... 10,456
 Appointment of additional, criticism of proposal in Mental Treatment Bill, Hodgson 13,451-64
 District, proposal, Menzies 17,016, 17,021-7; Lord 17,027-9, 17,030.
 Investigation of allegations of cruelty by, Willis, Macleod ... 893-904, 912-4
 Letters to, from patients, little result from, Parker ... 10,396-406
 Letters to Minister of Health, &c., sent on to, Willis ... 38
 Medical side should be strengthened, Craig 20,697
 Medical treatment, non-interference with, Parker 11,335-43

Members, see Commissioners above.

Metropolitan Licensed houses licensed by, Willis 616

Ministry of Health should be Court of Appeal from, Mr. L. ... 20,417

Notification to, see that title.

Outlook, improvement in, Craig ... 20,697, 20,899

Position of, re administration of Lunacy Acts, Willis ... 870-2

POWERS AND DUTIES:

re Buildings, Willis 36, 617-8, 728; Brock 1087-9, 1098-103; Keene 4727-9.

Care of lunatics, Willis ... 663-4, 667 re Clinics, proposals, Lewis 4579, 4589, 4637-40, 4685-96; Mapother 18,969-70.

statutory Consultative powers advocated, Miller 17,403, 17,419-26

Control of research, not desirable, Mott 17,182 re Discharge, see under Discharge.

re Drugs, increase desirable, Parker 11,529-30, 11,555-66, 11,801

Increase:

not very Desirable, Langdon Down ... 13,706-7
 Objection to, Taggart 13,236-40; Hodgson 13,394-475; Sidney 19,373-5; Beard 19,547-52.
 Suggestions, Mr. H. 8689-90; Parker 11,111-6, 11,801; Gibson 12,241-3, 12,264-84; Lomas 12,873-5; Craig 20,904-6.

re Licensed houses, and suggestion, Fawcett 6967-9; Cole 17,281, 17,282; Boyle 18,707-8, 18,710-8, 18,723-6, 18,736-9, 18,741.

Medical arrangements in mental hospitals, Willis 668.

re Non-volitional cases, proposal, Willis 21,361, 21,362 re Nursing homes, proposal, Willis, &c. 21,274-84, 21,295, 21,303-7, 21,318-27, 21,386 re Pauper patients, Macleod, Bond, Willis 397, 544, 548-60.

re Poor Law Institution cases, Macleod, Willis 708-711, 713-6, 891-2, 894

re Single care patients, Willis ... 661-2

re Treatment, advisory, only, Willis ... 938-43 re Voluntary boarders, proposal, Edwards 6389-92; Parker 10,554-74A, 11,801; Willis, &c. 21,274-84, 21,295, 21,303-7, 21,313-27, 21,337.

Reception houses should be under, Walden 2093; Mapother 18,969-70.

Recommendations by, value of, Beard ... 19,550-1

RECORDS OF CASES KEPT: Macleod, Willis 313-4, 315-8

Disclosure of, under certain circumstances, Willis 562, 567, 570, 732-3; Macleod 733.

Secrecy of, Willis ... 561-75

Board of Control—cont.

Relation to workhouse accommodation, Francis 21,510-2, 21,525-9, 21,565

Relations with Lord Chancellor, Willis, 729-30; Schuster 973-81.

Relations with Minister of Health, Willis 728-9; Brock 1082-9, 1106-8, 1189-90, 1193-4.

Reconstitution of, 1913, Parker ... 10,438

REPORTS:
 further Information in, suggestions, Leach 6064-71

on Use of croton oil at Prestwich, criticism, Parker ... 11,539

Sanction of, should be required to observation period longer than 14 days, Whitemore 3581-4, 3598

subsequent Service under, by Medical Superintendent should count for pension, Hodgson 13,477

STAFF:
 position of Minister of Health re, Brock 1106, 1189

Reduction proposed in Mental Treatment Bill, Parker ... 10,449-54

Supervision of all mental cases by, including early stages, advocated, Craig ... 20,697, 20,899-903

Trial leave of absence encouraged by, Bond 470; Willis 520, 524, 525.

Value of, Walden ... 2094-6

Visitation, see that title.

VISITORS:
 Amalgamation with Visitors in Lunacy, question of, Schuster ... 1053-6

Overlapping with Visitors in Lunacy, Schuster 1054-6

no Difficulty caused, Willis ... 39-42

Voluntary boarders attitude re, Yellowlees 5745-6, 5749-50

Work of Lord Chancellor re lunacy could be done by, Willis ... 43

Boarders, Voluntary, see Voluntary Boarders.

Boarding-out:
 in Belgium, Boyle 18,666; Gardner 19,237-8.

Clause in amending Lunacy Bill, 1899, Sidney 19,246-7

Desirability dependent on case, Walden ... 2143-6

Difficulty owing to housing shortage, Gardner 19,238-41

Difficulties in connection with, Walden ... 2147-9

Encouragement of system desirable, Willis 73-8 greater Freedom desirable, Sidney 19,233-7, 19,243-4, 19,247; Gardner 19,242.

Justice should have power to order, Parker 11,124

Names included on books of asylum, Willis ... 71-2

Scotch system, uncertified cases, Marr, Rose 15,472-604; Robertson 16,032-5.

careful Selection of cases necessary, Walden 2146, 2148

Supervision, District Commissioner would facilitate, Parker ... 11,127

System, Willis ... 66, 624-6

Value of, Parker 11,127-8; Lomas 12,775-6.

Visiting by asylum doctor, use of system discouraged by, Willis ... 77-8

Borstal, Tredgold ... 21,254-6

Boston Psychopathic Hospital, Goodall 16,661, 16,683-5, 16,797

British Medical Association, evidence on behalf of, see Langdon-Down, Dr. R., etc. 7796-8215, 13,500-13,719.

Broadmoor Criminal Lunatic Asylum, number of cases in, 1st January, 1924, Willis ... 67

Buildings:
 Approval of plans, responsibility for, Willis 36, 617-8, 728; Brock 1087-9, 1098-103; Keene, 4727-9.

SIDE ROOMS:
 Bad conditions, Mr. O. ... 20,163-4

Deficient light and air in many cases, Parker 11,786

Opening on living wards, objection to, Parker 11,783-5

more Single rooms desirable, Craig ... 20,952-9

Buildings—cont.VERANDAHS :

Advocated, Parker	11,677
Scotland, Robertson	16,101, 16,104

VILLA SYSTEM :

Basingstoke Asylum	17,860-2
Extension desirable, Mapother ...	18,993-9001
Extension of, in London County Council mental hospitals, Sidney	19,405-7 for Voluntary patients, suggestion, Gardner	19,144

Camberwell House :

Cases in, numbers, Edwards	6446-50, 6453
Convalescent home, Edwards	6400-5
Correspondence, Edwards	6365-6
Dietary, Edwards	6468
Domestic staff, Edwards	6456
Fees, Edwards	6467
Medical staff, Edwards	6395, 6451-5

NURSING STAFF :

Female nurses assisted by orderlies, Edwards 6414-20, 6457-62; Gibson , 12,135-7.
---	--

Number, Edwards	6456
Remuneration, Edwards	6469

Visitation, Edwards	6353-64, 6371-3
Voluntary boarders, Edwards 6383-90, 6470-2, 6476

Cambridge University, clinical teaching not obtainable, Mott 17,116; Goodall 17,164.

Cane Hill Mental Hospital :

Chaplain, work of, etc., Barns	17,554-629
Padded room, condition of, Hill	18,347-62

Cardiff :

After care, Goodall	17,264
Lunacy Acts, working of, Sanders	2305-447
Mental clinics, possibility of establishing, Goodall	16,847-8
Mental hospital, research, Goodall	17,163
Procedure under Section 13 of Act in, Bond 261-6, 286-7; Sanders 2336-42.

ROYAL INFIRMARY :

Mental cases as in-patients, Goodall ...	16,821-2
Mental clinics, Sanders 2411-2, 2419-22; Goodall 16,650-1, 16,653, 16,811-48.

WORKHOUSE, MENTAL CASES :

Accommodation for, Sanders	2342-3
Reception and observation wards, Sanders 2342-50, 2423, 2430-8

Carmarthen Mental Hospital, medical officers, inadequacy, Gibson 11,938-41

Care and Treatment :

Amusement, see Recreation below.

Association with violent patients, Mrs. M. 13,844-56, 13,939-47

BATHING AND WASHING ARRANGEMENTS : Dixon 3956-63; Barham 7551-2; Gibson 12,389-91; Wiese 12,391; Mrs. M. 13,952-73, 14,013-26.

Inadequacy of, Mr. P. 14,239, 14,253-5; Mr. M. 19,985-7; Mr. O. 20,155-62.

Privacy :

Arrangements for Scotland, Marr ... 14,994-5
Lack of, Parker 11,730-1; Mr. P. 14,258-63.

Satisfactory, Miss C. 14,502

Sharing of, with patients suffering from disease, Mrs. M. 14,022-5; Mr. P. 14,240-1.

Towels, inadequate supply, Mrs. M. 13,963, 13,970-3; Mr. P. 14,240-1, 14,256-7; Miss H. 19,686-7.

Water not always changed between each patient, Mr. P. 14,254-5; Miss H. 19,684-7.

Baths and rest in bed, value of, as calmatives, Robertson 16,137-8

BED-TIME :

7-7.30, too early, Gibson 12,055-64, 12,070-4; Lomax 12,991; Mr. P. 14,277-8; Miss C. 14,482-8.

Freedom re, Dixon 4045-50; Connell 4090.

Improvement in arrangements, Mr. P. 14,277-9

Hours of, Barham 7332-4; Parker 11,777-82; Blood 12,065-7; Wiese 12,068-9.

Care and Treatment—cont.

Bedding, bad condition, Mrs. G. 20,608

Board of Control's powers, Willis 663-4

Book should be given to patients to write in, for doctor, Mrs. G. 20,611

Brushes and combs, supplied but not used, Miss H. 19,694

Canteen, suggestion, Parker... .. 11,744

CASE BOOKS :

Access to, relatives should have right of, Parker 11,331-4

Entries in, complaint in connection with, Parker 11,627-30

CLOTHING :

Bad condition of, Miss H. 19,689-96

Improvement advocated, Gibson 12,244-6

Inadequacy of, case of, at Hanwell, Hill 18,363-4, 18,375; Glanvill 18,370, 18,374.

Nature of, etc., Mrs. M. 13,974-6, 13,988-95

Provision by institution, dislike of patients and friends to, Langdon-Down 7910-9

Satisfactory on the whole, but more uniformity desired, Hill 18,376

Uniform, undesirable, Barham 7372-3; Hill 18,372.

Wearing of own clothing: Keene 4805-6

Allowed if suitable, Barham 7369-76 should be Allowed as far as possible, Leach 6172-3 would be Approved, Glanvill 18,371

Communication with patient's family doctor, growing practice, Willis... .. 594

COMPLAINTS BY PATIENTS :

see also under Ill-treatment below.

Facilities for making, and action on, Keene 4877-908, 4978-89

after Discharge, Sandhurst 17,827-9 to Doctor, ill-treatment by attendants as result, Mrs. Y. 20,640

Entering of, in book, to be open to inspection of relatives and friends, and reading of copies of complaints to, suggestion, Mr. L. 20,420 to Medical Superintendent:

Action on, Keene 4881-4
no Attention paid, Mr. L. 20,383

Prevention of, not considered possible, Lobjoit 5197-202

Procedure on, Faudel-Phillips 5937-52; Sandhurst 17,863-75.

as Result of spite and pettiness more often than delusions, Yellowlees 5691-3

CONTACT WITH OUTSIDE WORLD :

Desirability and extent of, Devine 4350-1; Keene 4870-908; Lobjoit 5091-105; Barr 7152-3; Parker 10,594-5.

in Licensed houses, Fawcsett 6988-9, 7016-23

Scotland, Marr, Rose 15,376-84

CORRESPONDENCE :with Authorities :

Character of letters, Brock 1120-1

Forwarded unopened, Brock 1096-7

Method of dealing with, at Ministry of Health, Brock 1122-41, 1195-208

no Result from, Mr. H. 8712-7

Sent on to Board of Control, Willis... .. 38

if Censored, should be returned to sender, Mr. L. 20,389, 20,395

Complaint in connection with, Mr. H. 9092-4

Discretionary power of head of institution, Bond 438; Macleod 443.

Examination of certain letters before sending on, by Visiting Committee, Lobjoit 5103-5 greater Facilities advocated, Mr. L. 20,394-404

Forwarding of, to friends, lawyers, etc., practice re, Keene 4984-9

Interference with, complained of, Mrs. M. 14,055-96

Letter writing a safety valve, Marr, Rose 15,300, 15,303-6.

Method of dealing with, Norfolk County Mental Hospital, Connell 4065-8

Care and Treatment—cont.

CORRESPONDENCE—cont.

Post boxes in wards: Connell 4065; Yellowlees

not Advocated, Dixon ... 3955

Desirable in all wards, Bond ... 805, 808 in Most asylums, Macleod 437; Bond 444-5.

Scotland, Marr ... 15,298-9

of Private and pauper patients, differentiation in treatment, Keene ... 4900-5

Reading of, by charge nurse in ward, and submission of letters containing criticism to doctor, Mrs. M. ... 14,090-4

Rights and facilities, Willis 433-6; Bond 433-9.

Supervision of grievances in connection with and question of remedy, Parker 11,060-86, 11,801

CURATIVE TREATMENT:

Lack of, Blood, Gibson 12,197-9, 12,201; Mr. P.

14,289-95; Mr. L. 20,366, 20,380.

Position re, Golla ... 21,048-9

Dead patients, removal of, complaint re, Mrs. M.

13,948-9

DENTAL TREATMENT:

Claybury, Barham ... 7680-1

Facilities, Bond 866; Dixon 3988.

no Regular dentist, Mrs. M. ... 14,158-61

Salisbury Old Manor, Chubb ... 6667-8

York, the Retreat, Yellowlees ... 5674

DRUGS:

Administration in food, Parker 11,550-6; Gibson

12,355-6; Wiese 12,356.

Administration in food necessary occasionally,

Robertson ... 16,222-3

Aperients must be adapted to individual case,

Robertson ... 16,174

Complaint of being made to take, Mrs. G.

20,579-85

Croton oil:

Administration in food, Parker 11,550-6;

Gibson 12,355.

Complaint re use of, in some asylums when not used in others, Parker 11,472-84, 11,526-8, 11,531-8

Effects of, Lomax ... 12,996-8

at Prestwich, Parker ... 11,539-50 for Punitive purposes, Parker 11,475-524

Use of, not known, Blood ... 12,212 never Used, Yellowlees ... 5679

Useful in certain cases, but very seldom,

Robertson ... 16,177-9

Forcible giving of, before other patients,

Mrs. M. ... 13,889-97

Hyscine: Parker ... 11,464-8

Injections, Miss B. ... 14,887-9

Use of, in certain cases approved, but not continuously, Robertson ... 16,130-6

Nurses' discretion in connection with, Wiese,

Gibson ... 12,213-5, 12,428-30

as Punitive measure: Mrs. M. ... 13,968-9

Use of, doubted, Yellowlees ... 5685-9

Sedative, advantages and disadvantages, Robert- son ... 16,133-6

further Supervision by Board of Control over use of, desirable, Parker ... 11,529-30, 11,555-66,

11,801

Used only when absolutely necessary, Blood,

Wiese, Gibson ... 12,212-3, 12,215-6 not Utilised, should be returned to dispensary the same night, Parker ... 11,577-8

Weekly dosing, Parker 11,567-77; Gibson

12,431-3; Mrs. M. 13,880, 13,898-910; Mr. P.

14,242, 14,295; Mr. E. 14,379-82.

York, the Retreat, Yellowlees ... 5676-80

Environment question, Parker 11,649-54; 11,801.

EXAMINATION (Sec. 49):

proposed Elimination of certain words, Mr. L.

20,418-9

Provision for meeting expense of, advocated,

Parker ... 11,103-4, 11,801

EXERCISE:

Facilities inadequate, Mr. L. ... 20,339-47 in Grounds, no airing courts (except for individual cases), Scotland, Robertson

16,095-115

Care and Treatment—cont.

EXERCISE—cont.

Grounds, more space required, Miss C. 14,502-7

Sub-Committee of Visiting Committee should be appointed to deal with, Mr. L. ... 20,370

Walks into town and country unattended, value of, Chubb ... 6783-6

False teeth, garters, etc., taking away of, at bedtime, Mrs. M. ... 14,029

FOOD:

Artificial feeding, Barham ... 7549-50

Breakfast and tea, unsatisfactory, Gibson

12,037, 12,229

Complaint re, Parker 11,714-28, 11,820-5;

Mrs. M. 14,095; Miss H. 19,702; Mr. O.

20,098-102, 20,107; Mr. W. 20,281; Mr. L.

20,366-70.

Complaint to Visiting Committee or Medical Superintendent, less food as punishment,

Mr. L. ... 20,386, 20,390-2

Diet, Senior 3225-8; Usher 3249-54; Connell

4140-1; Keene 4747-58, 4955; Barham 7631-5;

Mr. P. 14,276; Sidney, Gardner 19,297-316;

Mr. Q. 20,099-102; Mr. W. 20,281.

Exhibited, but inferior food given to patients,

Mr. M. ... 19,853-84

Expenditure on, not increased in proportion to other expenditure, Parker ... 11,715-28

Financial conflict between local authorities and guardians, Gibson ... 12,407-11

Forcible feeding, Mrs. G. ... 20,604-5

Improvement in, Lomax ... 12,988

Improvement after publication of Dr. Lomax's book, Mr. P. ... 14,275-6

Inspection by Board of Control, but no statutory power, Willis, Macleod, Bond ... 842-3

Meals, hours of, Barham ... 7335-53

Physiologically adequate but dull and improvement desirable, Mapother ... 18,992 of Private patients, badness of, case of, Mr. M.

19,957-9, 19,962

Scotland, Rose, Marr ... 15,655-8

Sub-Committee of Visiting Committee should be appointed to deal with, Mr. L. 20,370, 20,372

Supper: Miss C. ... 14,489-97

Advocated, Gibson 12,229-31, 12,233-40; Lomax

12,990-2

London County Council mental hospitals,

Gardner, Sidney ... 19,300-1, 19,308-16

no Hairpins and hairbrush, Mrs. M. 13,977-81

ILL-TREATMENT, CRUELTY, ETC.:

Allegations of:

Investigation by Board of Control, Willis,

Macleod ... 893-904, 912-4

Number, question of, Willis ... 903

Bullying, Mr. B. ... 14,711-20

Cases of, Parker 11,445-7, 11,459-64; Mr. P.

14,340-8; Hill 18,297, 18,308, 18,312, 18,315;

Miss H. 19,600, 19,613-75; Mr. M. 19,885-930,

19,948-55, 19,962; Mr. O. 20,109-43; Mr. W.

20,282-8, 20,302-3; Mr. L. 20,380-6; Mrs. G.

20,599, 20,605, 20,607, 20,611-2, 20,613; Mr. Y.

20,634-49, 20,659-75.

Cases heard of, Barns 17,597-602, 17,607-13

Cases known, but incidents only, no habitual practice, Robertson ... 16,237-9

Charges of systematic ill-treatment unfounded,

Blood, Gibson, Wiese ... 12,201

Complaints:

if Acted upon removal of patient to another ward would remove chance of reprisals.

Parker ... 11,441-4

Difficulties, Parker 11,432; Lomax 12,692

12,704-7

Difficulty of ascertaining truth or otherwise of,

Brock ... 1198-9

Fewer than 15 years ago, Francis ... 1285

Method of dealing with Brock 1195-208;

Francis, 1295, 1300-50, 1466-70; Barham

7240-51.

Possibility of, Willis 906-12.

Reprisals, fear of, Parker ... 11,434-41

very Seldom heard, Vickers ... 7768-78

Care and Treatment—*cont.*ILL-TREATMENT, CRUELTY, ETC.—cont.

- Difficulty of doctor discovering, Lomax 12,688-707, 12,968-9
- Dismissal of nurses and attendants for, Macleod 904-5; Walden 2110; Broome Giles 3660-4; Lobjoit 5095, 5201; Lovsey 5275-8.
- Existence of, but no complaints heard during last three years, Lomax 12,709-31, 12,754-8, 12,963-73.
- Experience of, Miss B. 14,824, 14,823-53, 14,880-4, 14,890-1
- greater Facilities for communication with local police or solicitors advocated, Mr. L. ... 20,417
- without Knowledge of authorities, not possible, Hodgson ... 13,340-57
- as Means of maintaining discipline, Parker 11,448-50
- Minor cases only found, Walden ... 2104-5
- Occasional cases possible, Gibson ... 12,187-8
- Prevention methods, Parker ... 11,451-4
- Prosecutions: Willis 899-901; Marr 15,010-26, 15,030-2, 15,034.
- Suggestion re, Lomax ... 12,759-68
- Publicity the only remedy, Lomax ... 12,730-1
- for Refusing medicine, Mr. E. ... 14,379-83
- Safeguards against, Connell ... 4072-9
- Improvement, Barham 7653-60; Vickers 7755-6.
- Independent medical and legal access to patient, advocated, Parker ... 11,801 (24)
- more Individual consideration and classification needed, Mrs. M. ... 14,032-4
- Information as to rights, should be provided, Parker ... 11,097-102, 11,801
- Institution shops and refreshment room, Scotland, Marr ... 15,379

LAVATORY ACCOMMODATION:

- Commode in ward, complaint of, Mrs. M. 13,880-8, 13,912
- Inadequacy, Parker 11,579; Mr. P. 14,241-9; Mr. O. 20,153-4; Mrs. G. 20,607, 20,611.
- Locking of, at stated periods, complaint of, Parker ... 11,579-88
- Nature of, Mrs. M. 13,910-14; Miss C. 14,502.
- Non-use of, Miss H. ... 19,689, 19,693-4
- Sanitary paper:
- Non-provision of, Parker ... 11,589-92
- Supply when asked for, Mr. P. ... 14,250-2
- Sharing of, with diseased people, Mrs. G. 20,611

LOCKED SECLUSION:

- as Punishment, Mr. Y. ... 20,680-5
- Scotland, none, Robertson* 16,121-9, 16,202-5
- Lockers desirable, Mrs. M. ... 14,008-12
- Magazine written by patients, Humberstone, Dixon ... 3778, 3875-9

MECHANICAL RESTRAINT:

- Abolition of, Scotland, Robertson ... 16,129
- Advantageous in special cases, Robertson 16,165
- Easier to carry out in general hospital, Comrie 16,337-8
- Nature of, Bond ... 826-8
- Necessary in certain cases, Comrie ... 16,337-8
- Padded room not considered as, Macleod 825
- Use, extent of, Bond 826; Lord 16,739.

MEDICAL TREATMENT:

- Facilities and nature of, Humberstone, Dixon 3831, 3839-45
- Inadequate, case of, Brock ... 1142-62, 1209
- Investigation by Medical Officer of Ministry of Health, Brock ... 1128-9, 1142-62
- Non-interference with by Commissioners, Parker 11,335-43
- Position of Ministry of Health re, Brock 1215-6
- Recommendations, Parker ... 11,678-93
- Noisy patients, difficulty, Robertson ... 16,213-7

NOTICES:

- Distinction between private and pauper patients, Macleod, Willis 440-3, 447-51; Bond 802-7.
- Posting up of: Macleod, Bond, Willis 440-3, 446-9
- in All wards desirable, Bond ... 803-8
- no Written notices in Scotland, Marr 15,286-90; Rose 15,292-7.

Care and Treatment—cont.

OCCUPATION:

- Claybury, Barham* 7316, 7320-2, 7353-9, 7525-8, 7636-40.
- Divergent practice re, Parker ... 11,752
- Extra stimulus advocated, Parker ... 11,743-5
- Heavy outdoor work, benefit experienced, Mr. P. 14,285-7, 14,296-9
- Importance of, Dixon 3828; Devine 4346-7; Barham 7316, 7320-1.
- Nature of, Connell 4145-8, 4191-2; Lobjoit 5174; Wiese 12,362-6.
- Objection to do own work on trade union principles, Mr. P. ... 14,285, 14,299
- Patients employed as workers, payment advocated, Lomax ... 12,555, 12,776-7
- Payment for, by credit voucher, suggestion, Gibson ... 12,251-2
- Provision of, possible methods, Parker 11,752-9
- Retardation of discharge if patient useful, Lomax 12,778-800; Miss H. 19,698; Mr. O. 20,213-7.
- Denial, Blood 12,210-11.
- Scotland, Marr* ... 15,665-6
- Work on farm, non-payment for, Mr. P. 14,296-7
- Open-door system, as far as possible, Scotland, and success of, Robertson ... 16,116-20

PADDED ROOMS:

- Absence of, Scotland, Robertson 16,121-26, 16,197
- may have Advantages in special cases, Robertson 16,165
- Personal experience Miss B. 14,759, 14,761, 14,780-2, 14,824-6, 14,869, 14,871-80, 14,895
- Rats in, Mrs. M. ... 14,143-6
- Removal of patient to, without doctor's order, Mrs. M. ... 13,915-22
- Seclusion in, case, Parker 11,488, 11,489, 11,494-9, 11,501

Parole, see that title.

- Patients capable of managing own money matters should be allowed to do so, Miss C. 14,568-73
- Personal belongings, parcels, etc., put in store room, and not always obtained by patients, Mrs. M. ... 14,003-7
- Pocket handkerchiefs, non-provision of, Mrs. M. 13,999-4002
- Previous history gone into, Bond ... 8460
- Private accommodation for private belongings desirable, Dixon ... 3951

PUNISHMENT:

- Acute ward, Hill 18,315-43; Glanvill 18,333.
- Cases of, Hill 18,297, 18,313-43; Glanvill 18,305.
- "Curative treatment" guise, should be prevented, Parker ... 11,801(26)
- Drugs as: Mrs. M. ... 13,963-9
- Use of, doubted, Yellowlees ... 5685-9
- Forms of, Parker ... 11,601
- Locked seclusion, Mr. Y. ... 20,680-5
- Month in bed, Mr. E. ... 14,383-6
- Refractory ward, case of, Parker 11,488, 11,489, 11,503, 11,514-8, 11,522
- Relegation to lower ward, complaint of, Parker 11,601-8
- Retardation of discharge, Lomax ... 12,801-9
- Seclusion, complaint re method of administering, and question of remedy, Parker 11,609-25, 11,631-8

RECREATION:

- Books and periodicals, supply, Parker 11,748-50, 11,760, 11,762-73; Gibson 12,366; Wiese 12,367.
- Caged birds desirable, Parker 11,746-7, 11,761
- Facilities inadequate, Mr. L. ... 20,339-47
- additional Facilities needed, Parker 11,654-9; Gibson 12,247-50, 12,366.
- Gardening should be allowed, Mr. L. ... 20,344-8
- Indoor, improvement needed, Gibson ... 12,366
- Men and women together, Robertson 16,069-71
- Nature of, Wiese ... 12,362-3
- Reading and writing room, Scotland, Marr 15,379
- Sub-Committee of Visiting Committee should be appointed to deal with, Mr. L. ... 20,370

Care and Treatment—cont.

REFRACTORY WARD:

- Patients locked in at night with no nurse in charge, Mrs. M. ... 14,131-5
 Personal experience of, Mrs. M. 14,103-7, 14,128-57, 14,162-76
 as Punishment, Parker 11,488, 11,489, 11,503, 11,514-8, 11,522.
 Sending to, for making criticism in letter,
Mrs. M. ... 14,056-8, 14,082
 Sanitary towels, non-provision, Mrs. M. 14,027-9;
Miss H. 19,689-92.
 Shaving, provision of safety razors desirable,
Parker ... 11,733-8
 Solicitor, position re access to, Willis ... 781-6

SPECIAL FORMS OF TREATMENT:

- Glandular therapy, York, The Retreat, Yellowlees ... 5673-4
 Psycho-analysis:
 Care needed in selecting cases, Yellowlees 5806
 Claybury, Barham ... 7421-2, 7689-90
 of little Use by time patient in mental hospital, Dixon ... 3840
 Psychological, York, The Retreat, Yellowlees 5673, 5803-7
 Toilet accessories, non-provision of, Mrs. M. 13,996
 Toothbrush provided when asked for, Mrs. M. 13,986-7
 Treatment better if patients quiet and asked for nothing, Mrs. M. ... 13,996-8

VISIT BY OUTSIDE DOCTOR:

- Valueless, Mr. H. ... 8548-52
 Possibility of, Bond, Macleod, Willis 418-26;
Lobjoit 5193-6.
 VISITS BY PATIENT'S PERSONAL DOCTOR:
 Advocated, Parker 11,104; Worth 17,342-3, 17,353-63.
 Position re, Willis ... 787-8
 Provision for, Scotland, Marr, Rose ... 15,383-4
 Visitation, see that title.
 Wards should be decorated differently, Hill 18,269
 Wedding ring, taking away of, Mrs. M. 13,730-3, 13,777-81

Wrongful detention, see Detention.

Central Administration, see Administration.

Central Association for Mental Welfare, evidence on behalf of, see Tredgold, Alfred Frank, M.D., F.R.S. (Edin.), etc... 21,099-259
 Certifiable Cases, non-certification, procedure re, Willis ... 670-84

Certificates:

GENERAL:

- Criticism, Schuster ... 1011-9
 Deficiencies and errors, Macleod, Bond 168-74,
 180-201, 858; Dixon 3780; Devine 4540-1A;
Yellowlees 5586-7, 5642, 5832-5; Robertson 15,750, 15,757-66.
 Desire of patients to see, after discharge, Parker 10,364-75
 Form of opinion re, Yellowlees ... 5837-9
 Friends should be allowed to see, Lomax 12,832
 Hearsay evidence, steps taken to verify, personally, but should be made obligatory, Broome Giles ... 3699-707
 Medical Superintendent of Institution should only sign, in certain cases of emergency, Lomax 12,822

One:

- Advocated with preliminary detention order, Lomax ... 12,822, 12,857 and Calling in of second opinion would be satisfactory, Propert ... 6049-50 with Power to justice to call for second, approved, Devine 4276; Lobjoit 5182-3; Lovsey 5235-9; Parker 10,939-46.
 Statement of facts, difficulty in some cases, Stoddart ... 9659-61

Two:

- Advantages of, to medical men, Yellowlees 5641, 5644-6
 Advocated in every case and joint certificate should be allowed, Cole ... 16,964-5

Certificates—cont.

GENERAL—cont.

- in All cases, question of, Sidney 19,202-10
 no great Importance attached to, Barr 7104-12
 One, by specialist, question of, Yellowlees 5664-8; Leach 6254-8; Robertson 15,767-70.
 Option of, advocated, Lomax ... 12,822, 12,828 a Protection to medical men, Hawthorne 13,686, 13,703 a Safeguard, Cole ... 16,625

PAUPER:

- Cost*, Baly ... 2841-2
 Hearsay evidence, mainly, case of, Lord 2214-8 by usual Medical attendant advocated, Phillips 5896-8
 One: Macleod ... 243-4 found Satisfactory, but second desirable, Lord 2221-31 generally Sufficient, Baly ... 2843-5

Two:

- Advocated, Langdon-Down 7963-79; Menzies, Lord, Cole 17,004-15.
 Advocated, one by patient's usual attendant, Chubb ... 6672-80, 6817-8
 Advocated, although not found necessary in practice, Devine ... 4272-6
 Advocated, one doctor being an expert, Leach 6111-6, 6254-8
 Advocated as means of assimilating procedure, Yellowlees ... 5636-46, 5757
 Advocated if necessary in private cases, Lobjoit ... 5108-15, 5120-1, 5219-39
 Desirable, but power to call for, in border line cases might be sufficient, Lord 2221-31, 2277-8
 Desirable, but financial question, Barnsley 1807-12, 1942-50
 Independent examination by doctors should not be obligatory, Langdon-Down 7978-86, 7989-92 and Justice seeing patient the best method, Lidbetter ... 1570-7 by own Medical man, and by person specially qualified or appointed, suggestion, Dixon 4006
 One, by specialist, difficulty, Chubb ... 6818-20
 Scotland, second may be filled in by medical officer of asylum and objection to, Marr, Rose 15,216-30
 Second, by medical officer of mental hospital, would be approved, Devine ... 4534-5
 Preliminary detention certificate and order, scheme, Lomax 12,816, -28, 12,857-8, 12,951-4

PRIVATE:

- Difficulties experienced by doctors in connection with framing, Bond ... 213-4
 Disagreement between doctors:
 Order should not be made, Lidbetter 1564-5, 1574-8, 1585, 1594.
 Procedure on, Lidbetter 1563-5, 1581-4, 1586-93; Barnsley 1965, 1979.
 Form 8:
 Difficulty of dealing with, and method adopted, Baly 2597-640, 2681-2, 2702-20, 2790-803, 2818-9, 2846-8, 2894-909.
 Successful but certain suggestions to be made, Bond ... 212-3
 Forms prescribed, Bond ... 202-3
 Independent examination, interpretation put on by Board, Bond 829-33; Macleod 833; Willis 833.
 by Mental expert:
 Question of, Bond 857-8; Phillips 5978-9.
 would be Desirable, Devine ... 4530-3
 Nature of, Bond ... 203
 One, by doctor well acquainted with patient desirable, Bond ... 856-7
 One medical certificate plus justice as satisfactory, Lidbetter ... 1562
 One, with power to doctor or justice of the peace to call in second opinion, second opinion would always be called in, Yellowlees... 5641, 5662-3
 Persons qualified to give, Macleod 142, 144-52

Certificates—cont.PRIVATE—cont.

- Question whether justice bound by, as conclusive factor, Lidbetter ... 1752-5 not by Regular medical attendant, notification of reason, papers returned in case of failure, Yellowlees ... 5845-6
 Requirements of Act re, Macleod ... 143-52
 Safeguard, usual medical attendant, Macleod 161
 Scrutiny by Board of Control, Bond 204-6; Willis 210-11.
 Second medical man the patient's usual attendant (Sec. 31):
 Advocated whenever possible, Langdon-Down 7994
 Approved, Phillips ... 5896-7
 Desirable but difficulties in connection with, Yellowlees ... 5647-59
 Two:
 Desirable from point of view of public, Yellowlees ... 5636, 5660-2, 5756
 Required, Willis ... 141 should be Shown to patient, Mrs. C. 14,538-45, 14,553-6, 14,578-80

Certification:

see also Lunacy Act and Reception Orders.

- Abolition of judicial procedure and substitution of notification advocated, Robertson 15,822-52, 15,879-82 temporary Abolition advocated, except in certain cases, Craig ... 20,697, 20,836
 Action by patient, legal position, Hawthorne 13,687
 Appeal to Quarter Sessions, suggestion, Parker 11,027-35, 11,801
 Avoidance of, by every possible means, Scotland, Robertson ... 15,888-9

CERTIFYING DOCTORS:

- Collusion between, risk negligible, Marr 15,183
 Consultation between:
 Approved, Lomax 12,821-2; Robertson 15,771-84.
 Objection to, Miss C. ... 14,546-52
 Independent examination by, should not be obligatory, Langdon-Down 7978-86, 7989-92
 Position of, distinction between lunacy certificates and infectious disease certificates, Langdon-Down ... 13,679
 Protection of:
 Difficulties of, Craig ... 20,934-51
 same Immunity as in Court of Law:
 not Advocated, Parker 10,741-3; Craig 20,933.
 Proposal, Langdon-Down 8014-64; Hawthorne, Murrell, Langdon-Down, Verrall 13,679-702.
 Increase of responsibility of judicial authority, suggestion, Verrall 13,697-700; Murrell 13,701.
 Judge with two assessors to decide whether action should take place, suggestion, Craig 20,933
 Nature of, desired by profession, Craig 20,930-51
 Necessity for, Baly 2912-9; Devine 4528-9; Craig 20,755-70, 20,934-6, 20,941, 20,949-51.
 Necessity for, and suggestion, Barr 7143-4, 7154-63
 Onus on plaintiff to establish want of care would be improvement on present position, Langdon-Down ... 8050-7
 Question of method, Lomax ... 12,950-62
 Sanctioning of prosecutions by Attorney-General desirable, Langdon-Down ... 8057-9
 Two certificates in every case would assist, Hawthorne ... 13,686, 13,703
 Qualifications of second doctor, wide general experience approved, Lord... 2277-8

Certification—cont.CERTIFYING DOCTORS—cont.

- Reluctance to certify, Baly 2912-9; Dixon 3867, 4029-32; Devine 4528, 4544; Chubb 6762-7, 6770, 6850-2, 6864-78; Barr 7143, 7160-2; Langdon-Down 8011-12, 8024-6, 8048-9; Phillips 10,306; Lomax 12,950; Hawthorne 13,685; Verrall 13,698; Sandhurst 17,820-1; Craig 20,697, 20,761, 20,930, 20,940-1.
 Reluctance to certify not met with, Broome Giles 3708
 Remuneration not dependent on certification, Craig ... 9303-6
 Special medical officers for:
 Advocated, Lidbetter ... 1748, 1749
 Glasgow, Marr 15,186-7; Carswell 16,479, 16,482-3, 16,499-520, 16,539-42.
 Necessary under scheme for provisional treatment in hospitals, Carswell ... 16,484-98
 Proposal approved, Craig 20,841-4, 20,981-4
 Suggestion, Lobjoit 5114-9; Sidney, Gardner 19,202, 19,212-32.
 Visit to patients in own homes desirable, Carswell ... 16,542
 Special qualification:
 not Advocated, Langdon-Down 7990, 7994-8002, 8010-2; Edwards 8002-9.
 not Prescribed in Act, Willis ... 925-8
 Question of, Marr ... 15,183-204
 Specialist:
 Advocated, Lovsey ... 5364
 Districts for, suggestion, Leach ... 6115-6 in Clinics, see under Clinics.
 Code, difficulty of working, Leach ... 6079-88 of Criminal in prison, medical man unprotected, Craig ... 20,755-6, 20,762-70
 Danger to themselves and others and incapability to manage own affairs should be only reason for, Lomax ... 12,553-6
 Deterrent to early treatment, Devine 4384-8;; Craig 20,697, 20,771-4.
 Effect on children, Devine ... 4388
 Failure to certify, cases of, Bond ... 858
 Forensic element, undesirable, Propert... 6038-46 increased Formality not advocated, Langdon-Down 7924-60
 GROUNDS OF, INFORMATION re: to Patient or representative, advocated, Parker 10,903-35, 11,018-21, 11,801; Lomax 12,829-56.
 to Patients:
 Advocated, Miss C. 14,538-45, 14,553-6, 14,578-80.
 Dangerous in many cases, Marr ... 15,282-5
 Extent to which desirable, Connell ... 4238-44 to Relatives or friends, position re, Willis 563-4, 567-75.
 IMPROPER: Parker 10,988-1001; Lomax 13,002-4.
 no Case known, Brock 1174; Edwards 6440.
 Complaint of, Mr. H. 8262-363, 8817-922, 9039-79; Mr. W. 20,245-77; Miss G. 20,512-38, 20,557-9; Mr. P. 20,653-8.
 Doctor should be liable in damages, clause in Lunacy Act advocated, Mr. L. ... 20,420-4
 One case only known, and that one of malingering, Devine ... 4265-71
 Cases known of, Lord ... 6293-4
 Cases of refusing to receive patient, Chubb 6707-15, 6719-21
 Safeguards against, Lidbetter ... 1532-5
 Inception of, Edwards 6316-8, 6320; Craig 9391-6.
 INFORMATION TO PATIENT OF MEANING OF PROCEEDINGS:
 Advocated, Mrs. G. ... 20,564-7, 20,576
 Desirable in many cases, Parker 10,831-9, 10,847-58, 10,870-95
 Initiation, sworn information advocated, Parker 10,766-93
 Judicial authority, see that title.
 Judicial enquiry into alleged delusions advocated, Miss C. ... 14,524-6
 JUDICIAL PROCEEDINGS:
 Advocated, Mr. H. ... 8412-21

Certification—cont.JUDICIAL PROCEEDINGS—cont.

- with Representation of patient:
 - not Possible, Smith ... 10,065, 10,124-8
 - Question of, Phillips ... 10,249-55, 10,266-305, 10,312-6
- Scheme, Parker ... 10,738-1036, 11,801
- Justice of the Peace, see that title.
- Medical Certificates, see Certificates.
- Medical and legal procedure, scheme, Lomax ... 12,818-28, 12,857-8
- Methods, diversity of, Parker ... 10,727-30
- Papers re, and particulars should be given to patient, Mr. L. ... 20,417

PAUPER:

- Doubtful cases, power to justice to call in second opinion would be satisfactory, Devine 4276; Lobjoit 5182-3; Lovsey 5235-9; Parker 10,939-46.
- Petition advocated, Cole ... 16,966
- Procedure, Macleod ... 236-51
- proposed Procedure, Usher 3364-75; Senior 3375-8.
- Relatives, &c., communication with:
 - Importance of, Baly 2661-6, 2849-50, 2853
 - Lambeth, Baly 2570-9, 2650-77, 2849-54, 2864
 - by Workhouse doctor only, not approved, Lobjoit 5109-11, 5115, 5122-3

PAUPER AND PRIVATE PATIENTS, DISTINCTION IN PROCEDURE:

- Abolition advocated, Lidbetter 1545, 1552-3, 1558-61, 1596-7, 1726; Connell 4052-9, 4134, 4155-7; Lobjoit 5108-15, 5120-1; Lovsey 5218-39; Probert 6031-5; Parker 10,608-10, 10,721-6, 11,801; Cole 16,633, 16,963; Sidney 19,203-27; Gardner 19,218-24.
- Nature of, Willis 61-3; Macleod 244-8; Lidbetter 1545.
- in Scotland, none, Marr 15,174-6; Robertson, 15,736-7.

- Pauper stage, increase in number of cases passing through, and question of avoiding stigma, Dixon ... 3867-74
- Personal experience, Mr. H. 8262-363, 8817-922, 9039-79; Mrs. M. 13,796-821; Mr. P. 14,210-19; Miss C. 14,457-61; Mr. B. 14,614-23; Mr. O. 20,063-76; Mr. W. 20,253-77; Mrs. G. 20,565-7.
- Petition, Scottish system, Marr ... 15,175-82

PRIVATE:

- Inquisition, see that title.
- Judicial authority, see that title.
- Petition:
 - might be Abolished, Beard ... 19,559-61
 - Adjournment by judicial authority for further consideration, Macleod ... 130, 155
 - Dismissal by judicial authority, procedure on, Macleod ... 130-2
 - Petitioner, not always satisfactory, and question of official petitioner, Yellowlees 5812-5
 - Procedure by, Macleod ... 93, 96, 111
 - by Receivers in some cases, Sandhurst 17,835-9
 - Suspicion as to motives, power of judicial authority to adjourn consideration, Whitemore ... 3570-7
 - Procedure, Macleod 93; Whitemore 3590-5.
 - Reception Orders, see that title.
 - Urgency Orders, see that title.
- proposed Procedure, Usher 3364-75; Senior 3375-8; Parker 10-738-1036, 11,801; Lomax 12,818-58.
- Provisional, see Provisional Orders.

PUBLICITY:

- Advocated, if desired by patient, Parker ... 10,938, 11,003-17
- Increase advocated, Lomax ... 12,818
- Register covering name of doctor and magistrate, suggestion, Lobjoit ... 5170
- Relieving officer might deal with all cases, Lidbetter ... 1558-61

REPRESENTATION OF PATIENT:

- by Authorised agent, question of, Craig 9402-11

Certification—cont.REPRESENTATION OF PATIENT—cont.

Patient should be given chance of, Mr. H.

8282-9

- Representative, selected from panel, scheme, Parker ... 10,826-902, 11,801
- a Safeguard, Lobjoit ... 5128-9
- Safeguards, comparison between private and pauper cases, Macleod ... 249-50
- Scottish system, Marr, Rose 15,154-82, 15,205, 15,221-2, 15,226-7, 15,230-1, 15,270-80.
- Stigma, question of, and of means for removing, Baly 2858; Dixon 3909-22, 4017-22; Connell 4093-6; Devine 4388; Faudel-Phillips 5959; Craig 20,816-25.

Treatment without, see that title.

of Voluntary Boarders, see that title.

Voluntary, curable and temporary cases should not be certified, Lewis ... 4632-3

Chancery Visitors, see Visitors under Lord Chancellor.

Chaplains:APPOINTMENT:

- for Five years at least, renewable at end of each period, suggestion, Chelmsford 17,523-7, 17,530-1, 17,535
- Terms of, Barns ... 17,590-4
- Bishop's power of licensing and right to refuse licence if stipend, &c., not satisfactory desired, Chelmsford ... 17,505-22
- Complaints through, possibility of making, Lobjoit 5100
- Full time officer advocated where patients number 1,000, Chelmsford ... 17,450-1, 17,502-4, 17,544
- Length of service desirable as, Chelmsford 17,536-8, 17,542-3, 17,545-6
- Medical missionaries as, question of, Chelmsford 17,539-40
- Nature of work and value of, Chelmsford 17,452-60, 17,532-4; Barns 17,565-85, 17,596-628.
- Newly ordained man not suitable as, and consequent need for more adequate remuneration, Chelmsford ... 17,547
- Part time appointments undesirable, Chelmsford 17,450-1, 17,471, 17,474; Barns 17,589, 17,607.
- Percentage of patients registered under different denominations, Chelmsford 17,439-46; Barns 17,583.
- Position of, and need for clearer recognition of status, Chelmsford ... 17,436-8, 17,485
- Position as regards asylum staff, Chelmsford 17,491-4, 17,497-502
- Remuneration, increase desired, without superannuation, Chelmsford ... 17,552
- Special training for work desirable, Chelmsford 17,528-9, 17,535
- Superannuation system, Chelmsford 17,530, 17,538, 17,551; Barns 17,530.
- Type of service taken, Barns ... 17,629
- Type of service taken by, greater elasticity desirable, Chelmsford ... 17,460-70
- Work not distinctively denominational, Chelmsford 17,447-9
- Work not very popular, Chelmsford ... 17,472-3

Chargeability:

see also Maintenance.

Elimination of poor law, means of, Francis

21,448-68, 21,519-24

System, Willis 269, 280-2; Keene 4853-7, 4862-4; Francis 21,448-57.

Charitable Institutions, patients in, reports sent to Lord Chancellor, and power of discharge, Schuster 977-80

Chartham Mental Hospital, medical staff and patients, numbers, Collins ... 17,196-7

Lady Chichester Hospital, see under Hove.

Children, see Juveniles.

Chronic Cases:

Harmless cases happier in small rural Poor Law Institutions than in Asylums, Usher 3295-301

Chronic Cases—cont.

separate Institution for reception and observation of cases under Sections 20 and 21 and for detention of harmless, chronic cases, proposal, Usher, Senior 3281-310, 3314-5, 3481-5, 3509, 3510, 3517-22, 3537-9.

Provision for chronic and harmless cases by Metropolitan Asylums Board, Keene ... 4920-9

Removal from mental hospitals to Poor Law Institutions desirable, Dixon ... 3905-7

Treatment at home, difficulties, Devine ... 4466

Classification:

Benefit to mental cases of association with ordinary patients, Comrie ... 16,351, 16,361-6

IN DIFFERENT INSTITUTIONS:

not Advocated, Sidney ... 19,408-10
Desirable, Glanvill 18,294-5; Mapother 18,886-7, 18,889-96.

Facilities at present, Dixon 3832-7; Connell 4117-28; Chubb 6776-81; Barham 7409-18, 7687-8.

Grading of patients, popular fallacies re, Yellow-lees ... 5739-41

Importance of, and need for improvement, Dixon 3833-8; Barham 7409-17; Parker 11,660, 11,790-7, 11,801; Mr. P. 14,220-4, 14,237; Robertson 16,206-12; Comrie 16,345-9, 16,351, 16,385; Sandhurst 17,858-60; Hildyard 18,205-17; Hill 18,268-78, 18,386-9; Mapother 18,781, 18,783-6, 18,887-900, 18,913-7; Sidney 19,407; Mr. L. 20,344; Mrs. G. 20,587-90; Craig 20,780-2.

Legal, Willis ... 58

ACCORDING TO MENTALITY:

Advocated, Walden ... 2066

Impossible, Gibson ... 12,137-42

Segregation of acute and possibly recoverable cases from chronic incurables advocated, Mott, Lord 16,948-53

Claybury Hall:

Accommodation, Barham ... 7175

Ex-service men in, Keene ... 4848-9

Fees, Barham ... 7361-5

Claybury Mental Hospital:ADMISSION:

Classification on, extent of, Barham 7409-18, 7687-8

Procedure on, Barham ... 7380-93, 7511-4

Admission wards, Barham ... 7382-6

Area lay-out, etc., Barham ... 7172-80

Artificial feeding, Barham ... 7549-50

Bathing arrangements, Barham ... 7551-2

Chaplains, salaries, etc., Chelmsford 17,474-83; Barns 17,624-5.

Clothing, Barham ... 7369-76

Complaints by patients, facilities, Barham 7252-4

Daily life of patients, Barham ... 7561-80

Dental treatment, facilities, Barham ... 7680-1

Detention, wrongful, question, Barham... 7524

Dietary, Barham ... 7631-5

DISCHARGE:

Procedure, Barham ... 7522-4

Statistics, Barham ... 7472-4

Tests applied, etc., Barham 7587-607, 7621-2

Employment of patients, Barham 7316, 7320-2, 7353-9, 7525-8, 7636-40

Ex-service patients, Barham ... 7377-9, 7626

Gardener nurses, Barham ... 7636-40

Hours of rising and going to bed and of meals, Barham ... 7331-53, 7641, 7671-9, 7686-7

Labourers, gardeners and tradesmen, number, Barham ... 7313-9

Leave on trial, allowances during, Barham 7480-1

Maintenance rate, Barham ... 7323-4

Medical officer, daily visit to wards, Barham 7517-21

Medical staff and increase desired, Barham 7198-201, 7508-10, 7661-2, 7666-7

MEDICAL SUPERINTENDENT:

Convalescent patients, touch with, Barham 7694

Functions, Barham ... 7433-56, 7647-52, 7663-5

Letters from patients, Barham ... 7581-5

Claybury Mental Hospital—cont.NURSING STAFF:

Accommodation, Barham ... 7295-300

Complaints against, procedure on, Barham 7240-51

Day's work, Barham ... 7301-6

Female:

Age of entrance, Barham ... 7642-4

Recruiting method and difficulty, Barham 7223-7

Hours, Barham 7204, 7325-30; Wiese 12,068-9.

Male, satisfactory on the whole, Barham 7231-2

Numbers, Barham ... 7201-4, 7208-9

Probationary period, Barham ... 7264-6

Proportion to patients, Barham ... 7204-7

Qualifications, Barham ... 7217

Recreation, Barham ... 7307-9

Steps taken to attract right type, Barham 7276-8

Supervision of, Barham ... 7691-3

Training, Barham ... 7213-22, 7234-9, 7294

Opened 1893, Barham ... 7169

Patients, statistics, Barham 7179-97, 7534-48

Patients' provisions, cost per head per week, Barham ... 7681-5

Private patients, Barham ... 7366-8

Recreation, Barham ... 7353, 7360, 7567-80

Sub-Committee, Barham ... 7210-2

Treatment of patients, facilities, Barham 7419-29, 7689-90

Voluntary hospital visitor, work of, and value, Barham ... 7391-408, 7601-3

Clinics:

See also Treatment without certification.

Administration should be dealt with by lunacy committee, Sidney 19,121-4, 19,137-8, 19,148

ADMISSION TO:

Means of, question of, Craig ... 20,835-44

through Relieving officer, question of, Craig 20,836-9, 20,843

Advocated, Barnsley 1834-5; Lomax 12,974; Langdon-Down 13,626-33; Menzies 16,766.

ATTACHMENT TO GENERAL HOSPITAL:

Advantages, Gilmour 18,394-8, 18,411, 18,470-5, 18,486

Advocated and scheme for, Devine 4550; Goodall 16,645-7; Boyle 18,556-8, 18,630-6; Chichester 18,645-6.

Advocated if independent clinic impossible, Mapother ... 18,943-4

Desirable, but must be run by arrangement with mental hospital, Gilmour 18,437-40, 18,470

Preferred where possible, Langdon-Down 13,631-2, 13,656-9; Masterman 13,648-50; Cole, Lord 16,955-7.

Attachment to both general and mental hospitals advocated, Gibson ... 12,324-8, 12,415 should be Associated with General Hospitals or be separate institutions, but not attached to mental hospitals, Lewis ... 4579-82

Attachment to infirmaries not advocated, Goodall 16,655

if Certification necessary, question of place of, Goodall ... 16,708-14

CERTIFICATION OF PATIENTS IN:

Question of, Craig ... 20,854-63

Undesirable, Lewis 4566-71; Mapother 18,799-805, 18,810-3; Sidney 19,097-8; Gardner 19,108.

Certified cases in, not approved, Gilmour 18,459

Class of cases to be sent to, and to mental hospitals, Lewis 4574, 4585, 4677; Menzies, Worth, Goodall 16,715-23; 16,722-8, 17,381-96; Gilmour 18,412-31;

Boyle 18,569-70, 18,604-6, 18,611-7, 18,622-9, 18,650, 18,671-4; Chichester 18,646-8; Mapother 18,789-98, 18,806-7, 18,814; Gardner, Sidney 18,139-47; Craig 20,968-70.

as Clearing houses, Devine ... 4550

CONNECTION WITH MENTAL HOSPITALS:

Advocated, Gibson ... 12,324-8, 12,415

Objected to, Lewis 4579-82; Worth 17,372; Boyle 18,559, 18,640-2.

Clinics—cont.

DETENTION:

- in Emergency, position of medical man, Craig 20,826-8
- Length of notice, question of (24 hours too short), Sidney ... 19,062-9
- 48 hours' notice, few patients would desire to leave, Craig ... 20,971-2
- Obligation on patient to remain for certain period not advocated, Mapother ... 18,806-9
- Power of:
- not Advocated, Lewis ... 4590-9
 - not Advocated beyond 72 hours, Cole 16,757; Lord 16,760.
- some Power of, necessary, and suggestions, Langdon-Down 13,634-45; Craig 20,829-35, 20,884, 20,966-7.
- Question of, Lord, Goodall 16,691, 16,738-45, 16,724; Buzzard 17,296-8.
- Question of, and need for enabling power for odd cases, Taggart 13,131-49, 13,175-7, 13,251-64; Hodgson 13,319-24.
- 72 hours' notice advocated, Goodall 16,725-8; Lord 16,746-53; Collins 16,753-5; Cole 16,757-8.
- Effect on mental hospitals, question of, Cole 16,802; Lord 16,802-5.
- Establishment in all large centres of population advocated, Mapother 18,860, 18,919-22, 18,945-8, 18,959-60
- Establishment of, should be obligatory, not merely permissive on Local Authority, Cole 16,849; Lord 16,849-50
- Financial question, Mott, Lord ... 16,813
- Government assistance advocated, Boyle... 18,637-9
- near Homes of the patients, desirable, Lewis 4586
- In-patient, separate from hospital proper advocated, Worth ... 17,397-9
- In-patients' and out-patients' department advocated, Lewis ... 4673
- Independent institutions desirable, Mapother 18,943
- Local clinics with a few beds desirable, Worth 17,373-80
- as Mental hospitals of improved type for non-certified cases, Mott ... 16,803-12
- NON-VOLITIONAL CASES:
- should be Admitted, Mapother ... 18,814-8
 - Detention, question of, Lord, Goodall 16,738-45.
 - Notification of, to central authority advocated, Lord 16,758-9; Menzies 16,779.
 - some form of Notification desirable, Craig 20,847-52
- Operation cases from mental hospitals might be sent to, and then taken back, Menzies ... 16,760-2
- OUT-PATIENT:
- Attached to asylums:
- Preferable where possible, Barr ... 7145-8
 - Proposal, Dixon 4012-6; Connell 4205.
- Attached to general hospital:
- at all Hospitals, advocated, Craig ... 20,697
 - Success of, in certain cases, Phillips 5894, 5899
 - would be useful, Gilmour ... 18,444-7
 - should be Attached to reception houses rather than to general hospitals, Barnsley ... 1966
 - Desirable, Lidbetter 1751; Walden 2082; Connell 4104-7; Lewis 4573-8; Barr 7079; Gibson 12,324; Taggart 13,127-30, 13,250; Boyle 18,554-5.
 - on lines of Guy's Hospital Neurological Department advocated, Craig ... 20,697, 20,727-34
 - Home visiting in connection with, desirable, Phillips ... 5976-7
 - Social setting at home, difficulty caused by, Phillips ... 5899
 - not Sufficient, Goodall ... 16,650-1
- Poor Law buildings might be used as, Cole 16,958-9
- Provision by Local Authorities, proposals, Lewis 4579, 4589, 4637-40, 4685-96; Taggart 13,070-130, 13,173-80, 13,250; Hodgson 13,312-8; Mapother 18,969-70; Craig 20,960-1.

Clinics—cont.

- Psychiatric training in, value of, Goodall 17,164-7; Buzzard 17,293-5.
- Scheme, Craig 20,697, 20,727-34, 20,796-7, 20,829-63, 20,884, 20,960-1, 20,966-72.
- Scheme applicable to rate-aided patients only, Menzies ... 16,801
- SELECTION OF CASES:
- Proposal, Goodall ... 16,703-8
 - Specially appointed officer for, scheme, Menzies 16,767-71
- Separate building or ward in general hospital, question of, Gilmour ... 18,476-84
- Separate institutions advocated, Craig 20,697, 20,796-7
- Size question, Lewis 4587; Mapother 18,861, 18,865-6.
- Small dormitories important, Gilmour 18,485, 18,487
- Special ward of general hospital advocated, Miller 17,414; Buzzard 17,400-2.
- Uniform scheme all over country not possible at present, Lord ... 16,814-5
- Voluntary patients, question of correctness of description "voluntary," Goodall, Cole, Lord 16,729-37
- Young people might be sent to, in connection with cases from the courts, Langdon-Down 13,631, 13,704-5
- Clothing, see under Care and Treatment.
- Committees of Visitors, see Visiting Committees.
- Complaints by patients, see under Care and Treatment.
- Constable, functions re lunatic not a pauper and not wandering at large, Macleod ... 254-60
- Consultants, resort to, advocated, Worth 17,344-52
- Continuation Reports and Certificates, see under Detention.
- CONVALESCENCE:
- Difficulty in connection with, Parker 10,659-79, 11,813-34
 - "Half-way house" system advocated, Lomax 12,870-2
 - Patient might be made a voluntary boarder, Parker 10,672, 10,676-9, 11,813-9, 11,826, 11,830
- Convalescent Homes, advocated, Mapother 18,946, 18,953
- Co-operative and Provident Societies, cessation of benefits during mental incapacity, Hildyard 18,101-9
- Coroners, more legal responsibility on medical superintendent to make absolutely accurate statement advocated, Lomax ... 12,732-47
- Correspondence, see under Care and Treatment.
- COUNTY COUNCILS' ASSOCIATION:
- Constitution, functions, etc., Hodgson ... 13,293-8
 - Evidence on behalf of, see Hodgson, Alderman Sir William ... 13,005-13,499
- Criminal lunatics, under Home Office jurisdiction, Brock ... 1095
- CRIMINAL LUNATICS ACT, 1884:
- Order under, personal experience, Mr. L. 20,323-34, 20,405-9
 - Patients certified under, equivalent of petitioner should be appointed, Mr. L. ... 20,415
- Croton Oil, see under Drugs under Care and Treatment.
- Cruelty, see Ill-treatment or Cruelty, under Care and Treatment.
- DELIRIUM:
- as result of Physical condition, certain restraint necessary and difficulties re, Craig 20,697, 20,702-14
 - Procedure re delirious cases, Baly 2723-45, 2785-9; Giles 3155-6.
 - Treatment under Lunacy Act, and other method desirable, Senior ... 3464, 3511-4
- Dementia præcox cases, Yellowlees ... 5729-30
- Dental Treatment, see under Care and Treatment.
- Derby Borough Mental Hospital, see Rowditch.

Detention:

Appeal to Board of Control, right of, Scotland,
Marr 15,272, 15,275-80, 15,286, 15,293-4, 15,302
 Approval of Act as instrument of, Devine 4258
 Average period, question of, Parker ... 11,694-7 many Cases willing to submit to treatment, Devine 4431-4
 in Clinics, see that title.

CONTINUATION REPORTS AND CERTIFICATES:

Difficulty in connection with, Dixon 3740-9,
 3754-6; Yellowlees 5612-7; Robertson 15,799-811.
 no Difficulty experienced and method of interpreting, Devine ... 4333-40, 4485-92
 Judicial sanction or sanction of two members of visiting committee advocated, Cole ... 17,091-2 a Legal matter and responsibility should be removed from Medical Superintendent, scheme for, Lewis ... 4605-35, 4649-56
 Modified form, proposal, Dixon 3757-70, 3934-6,
 4000-3; Yellowlees 5618-9; Robertson 15,799-811.
 Scottish form, and criticism of, Robertson
 15,799-811
 Signing of, by two members of Visiting Committee, suggestion, Lobjoit ... 5180-1
 Medical statement sent to Board of Control after reception, Willis, Macleod, Bond 215-25, 252

MONTH-END REPORTS:

should Apply also to pauper patients, Parker
 11,058-9
 System, Macleod, Willis, Bond
 290-5, 319-25, 828-30

Value attached to, extent of, Willis ... 326-7
 Pauper, further reports system, Bond ... 329-30 Periodical reports by medical superintendent or medical attendant, Macleod ... 303-12
 Power of, needed without recourse to Lunacy Acts, Baly ... 2739, 2744-5
 in Reception houses, see that title.

Report to Lord Chancellor with view to inquisition, alteration of Sec. 39 desirable, Schuster 984-6

periodic Revision by justices, would relieve medical superintendent of responsibility, but not advocated, Devine ... 4458-60
 Sec. 315, see under Lunacy Act.

during Treatment without certification, see that title.

Unnecessary, but legal, owing to difficulty of accommodation, Lomax ... 12,769-76
 of Voluntary boarders, see that title.

Week-end reports, Bond 845; Dixon 3785, 3800, 3971-3, 3988.

WRONGFUL:

no Case known or found, Willis 932-3; Brock
 1139-40, 1174; Devine 4343; Sandhurst 17,948.
 Case of, Mr. M. ... 19,988-20,007, 20,010-28
 a few Cases known of, Vickers ... 7781-2 many Cases of, Parker ... 11,209
 Complaint of, Mr. E. 14,354-92; Miss B. 14,775-9, 14,796-823, 14,864-70; Mr. O. 20,182, 20,186-219.
 few Complaints received by Ministry of Health,
Francis ... 1283-4, 1288-94
 Doubted, Lovsey ... 5313-33
 no Evidence of, received, Langdon-Down 7819-22 in Licensed Houses, see that title.
 every Possible care taken, Walden ... 2130 little or no Risk, Sanders 2390, 2394-5; Devine 4457; Lobjoit 5084; Yellowlees 5793-4, 5808-11;
Langdon-Down 7924.
 Safeguards against, Bond 382-3; Willis 382-3,
 403, 497-9, 507-8; Macleod 384, 385, 403, 486-96,
 545-6; Walden 2107; Dixon 3827-9, 3983-7;
Devine 4344-9; Chubb 6740-7.
 Steps that can be taken by patient, Willis,
Macleod ... 779-92
 of Wealthy man in asylum as pauper patient, safeguard against, Willis ... 645-9 owing to Work being valuable, Lomax
 12,778-800; Miss H. 19,608; Mr. O. 20,213-7. owing to Work being valuable, denial, Blood
 12,210-11

Detention Order, Scotland, made by Sheriff, system,
Robertson ... 15,738-66, 15,797-9, 15,822-31
 Diet, see Food under Care and Treatment.

Dillwyn Committee (Select Committee of the House of Commons), 1877, Willis ... 20-2

Discharge:

Appeal to Asylum Board, suggestion, Lomax
 12,812-3

TO CARE OF RELATIVE OR FRIEND (Sec. 79):

Precaution that patient should be properly looked after, advocated, Whitemore ... 3587-9
 Right of, might be strengthened, Parker
 11,228-34

System, Willis 527-30; Keene 4745-6

Committee, suggestion, Lomax ... 12,814

NOT CURED:

Difficulties, Brock ... 1163-71 by Parish Council or petitioner, Scotland, Marr
 15,385, 15,391, 15,402-3
 Questions considered, Taggart ... 13,281-4

DIFFICULTIES:

After care, Willis 511-2, 514-7; Walden 2107;
Barr 7140-2; Worth 17,249; Sandhurst 17,921-7, 17,934-40.

Employment, Connell ... 4142-4
 Home surroundings, etc., Connell 4085; Barham
 7457-71, 7475-9

Relatives' reluctance in some cases, Connell
 4082-4; Yellowlees 5629-35; Sandhurst 17,925-8.

Difficulty of obtaining, Mr. H., Mr. L. 20,352-4, 20,374-9, 20,410; Mr. W. 20,304-15.

Distinction between private and pauper patients,
Willis ... 748-67

by Escape, Scotland, Marr ... 15,410

Financial provision after, where receiver appointed, Parker ... 11,175-80

Fitness for, difficulty of determining, Brock 1174-9 by General Board of Control, Scotland, powers, on report from two independent medical men, Marr,
Rose ... 15,404-9

BY GUARDIANS:

against Advice of medical officer, no case known,
Leach ... 6283-6
 Power of, Willis 717; Leach 6283-5.

under Sec. 81, unnecessary delay sometimes caused, Senior ... 3438

Half-way houses out, desirable, Langdon-Down
 13,602

INDEPENDENT INQUIRY:

Advantage of, doubted, Yellowlees ... 5779-802 by Board with medical expert, medical superintendent and magistrate, proposal for, in certain cases, Walden ... 2121-8, 2137-40
 Judicial enquiry not desirable, Walden 2118-20
 Objection to proposal, Schuster 1051-3, 1062-5;
Dixon 3807-11, 3814.

Power to call in expert desirable, Walden 2116-7

Inquiry made on, re treatment, Lobjoit 5158-67;
Hodgson 13,345-51.

"not Insane," Willis 929-31; Keene 4971-4, 5012-5. certifying Judicial Authority should be connected with, Parker ... 10,658-701, 11,801

BY JUDICIAL ORDER AND MEDICAL BOARD INSTEAD OF
BY VISITING COMMITTEE:

Scheme, Lewis 4605-35, 4649-56, 4674, 4679-84.
 Suggestion objected to, Lomax ... 12,518-20
 Judicial procedure, suggestion, Mr. L. 20,356-61, 20,377, 20,427

at end of or during Leave of absence on trial,
Macleod, Bond, Willis, 475-80; Chubb 6568-73.

BY MEDICAL SUPERINTENDENT:

not Advocated, Taggart ... 13,268-9
 Dependence entirely on and objection to, Mr. L.
 20,374-7, 20,427

Individual attention question, Robertson 16,232-5 the Only method known in practice, Broome
Giles ... 3692-7

Onus of detention should not be on medical superintendent, Parker ... 10,662

Opinion should be predominant element, Dixon
 3799, 3803-6, 3901-3

Power to, difficulty, Cole 17,094; Collins 17,094-5;
Lord 17,095.

Discharge—cont.BY MEDICAL SUPERINTENDENT—cont.

Responsibility of, question of possible reluctance to advise, Lovsey ... 5313-33 must be Responsible, Lomax ... 12,517-20

NOTICE OF RECOVERY:

Extent to which used, question of, Parker ... 11,134-5, 11,139, 11,160

Question of giving, to pauper patient himself, or relatives, Barham ... 7613-20

Obligation on person in charge to discharge case on recovery, Willis ... 499-502

PAUPER PATIENTS:

Board of Control's power in connection with, Macleod, Bond, Willis ... 397, 544, 548-60

Examination by two doctors on order of Board of Control, Willis 549, 551, 556, 560, 579-85; Bond 586-94; Chubb 6740-3.

by Operation of law, Willis ... 606

Rights of relations and friends, Willis 552-9, 576-8, 790-5, 798-801; Macleod 796-8.

Personal experiences, Mr. H. 8723-36, 8754-9; Mrs. M. 14,113-27, 14,178-87; Mr. P. 14,306, 14,318-25.

FROM POOR LAW INFIRMARIES:

Procedure, variation in, Usher ... 3441

without Order being made, Baly 2625-30, 2698-701

Temporary cases, medical officer should have power of, Usher, Senior ... 3371-8, 3440-6

Power to Ministry of Health, not advocated, Brock ... 1180

Prevention of, by nurses or attendants, denial, Blood 12,202-5; Gibson 12,206-9.

PRIVATE PATIENTS:

Judicial procedure, by way of appeal, suggestion, Parker ... 11,147-51, 11,161-5, 11,181-227, 11,235, 11,801

Methods of discharge by Board of Control, Willis 481; Keene 4744-5.

Methods of discharge, general Operation of the law (statutory), Willis ... 531-2

by Petitioner:

Prevention by Procurator-Fiscal, Scotland, Marr, Rose ... 15,411-20

Provision not entirely satisfactory, and proposed alternative, Sandhurst 17,929-33, 17,945-55

Right of, subject to barring certificate, Willis 482-5; Devine 4373-9; Keene 4744-5.

Risk of petitioner not acting and question of safeguards, Parker 11,131-73, 11,181-227 without Petitioner's consent, unofficial instructions against, Mr. H. ... 8727-30

Powers under Sec. 75 should be enlarged, Mr. L. ... 20,417

Receiver to have right of, instead of petitioner, suggestion, Sandhurst ... 17,945-55

Unofficial instructions against, to superintendents of private establishments, Mr. H. ... 8727-34 where Urgency order or reception order lapses, Willis ... 541-2 by Visitors or Commissioner against advice of Medical Superintendent, extent of functioning, question of, Parker ... 11,183-95, 11,224

as Recovered, by Superintendent, Scotland, Marr, Rose ... 15,385-7, 15,391, 15,394-5, 15,401

in Recurrent mania cases, question of, Parker ... 10,687-8

Registered hospitals, duty of superintendent, Willis ... 506-7

by Relative, Cole ... 16,869-70

Retardation of, as punishment, Lomax ... 12,801-9 ordinary Routine practice, Dixon ... 3802

Scottish system, Rose, Marr ... 15,385-7, 15,391, 15,394-5, 15,401-20, 15,410-20

STANDARD REQUIRED FOR:

should be Same as that required for reception, Parker ... 10,658-720, 11,801, 11,826-34

Variation of, in different institutions, Parker ... 10,688 on Trial first, Devine ... 4498-9

BY VISITING COMMITTEE:

against Advice of medical superintendent, Lovsey ... 5296-310

Discharge—cont.BY VISITING COMMITTEE—cont.

Applications to Committee by patients and friends, Taggart ... 13,229-31 without Approval of Medical Superintendent and subsequent suicide of patient, case of, Lovsey ... 5260-7

Extent of reliance on opinion of Medical Superintendent, Taggart ... 13,182-204

Functions, Willis ... 509-12, 767-71, 798-800

Functions nominal only, Parker 10,681-3, 10,698

on Initiative of Committee, Beard 19,484-94

Medical Superintendent's position, Devine ... 4555-60 on Order of three visitors, no case known, Broome Giles ... 3692

Origination, Lobjoit ... 5184-90

on Own responsibility, Lobjoit ... 5186-9

Power to three members, criticism, Dixon 3799, 3803-6, 3941-6; Beard 19,475-7, 19,480.

Practice re, Lobjoit ... 5157-67

Request for complaints during consideration of, and in future request to be made after discharge, Birmingham, Lovsey ... 5351-9

System, Willis 509-12, 543-4, 767-71, 798-800; Keene 4743-5.

by Three members without advice of Medical Superintendent, cases of, Keene ... 4960-70

by Three members in opposition to Medical Superintendent, cases of, and objection to, Taggart ... 13,182-8, 13,208 by Whole Committee, advocated, Taggart 13,182-208; Beard 19,475-80.

Disposal of cases between different types of institution:

Private practitioner should have voice in, Cole ... 16,801

Specially appointed officer for, scheme, Menzies ... 16,767-71

District Asylums, Scotland:

Number, etc., Rose ... 14,944-5, 15,058-64

Powers of General Board of Control re, Rose ... 15,098-106

Private patients in, Rose, Marr 15,105-8, 15,111-2

Sites, plans, etc., control by General Board of Control, Rose ... 15,098-102

Domestic trouble, cases resulting from, Baly ... 2607-14, 2869-70

Dorchester, Herrison Asylum, accommodation for private patients, Sandhurst ... 17,989

Drugs, see under Care and Treatment.

Edinburgh Royal Infirmary:

Character of, Comrie ... 16,265-8

Mental cases, treatment, history and development of, Comrie ... 16,269-81

Social service, Comrie ... 16,326-8

SPECIAL WARD FOR MENTAL CASES: Devine ... 4413, 4545-6

Accident cases taken in, Comrie ... 16,366-76

Accommodation, and improvements needed, Comrie ... 16,331-2, 16,342-8, 16,381-6

Advantages of facilities, Comrie ... 16,303-10, 16,378-80, 16,437-8

Cases admitted, 1852-3, 1883, 1913, 1923-4, and results, statistics, Comrie ... 16,402-19, 16,428, 16,436, 16,443-8, 16,450-7

Certifiable cases, procedure re, Comrie 16,420-7

Class of cases taken and time for which kept, Comrie ... 16,282, 16,390-8

Classification, more facilities desirable, Comrie ... 16,345-9, 16,351, 16,376

Cost, question of, compared with ordinary wards, Comrie ... 16,387-9

Female nurses, and male orderlies, Comrie ... 16,333-5, 16,352-4

Medical staff, Comrie ... 16,356-60

Obstreperous cases, methods of dealing with, Comrie ... 16,333-9

Outdoor clinic, Comrie ... 16,318-25

Publicity, advantage of, Comrie ... 16,438

Re-admissions, Comrie ... 16,433-4

Recovery rate, Comrie ... 16,378

Restraint, practice re, Comrie ... 16,288-302

Edinburgh Royal Infirmary—cont.SPECIAL WARD FOR MENTAL CASES—cont.

- Sending of cases to, and to Royal Asylum, decision as to Comrie ... 16,311-7
no Suicides after admission, Comrie ... 16,350
Transfer of cases from ordinary wards in discretion of physician, Comrie ... 16,429-32
Unofficial inspection by Board of Control,
Comrie ... 16,340-1
Visiting by friends, etc., Comrie ... 16,329-30
Edinburgh University psychiatry course and diploma,
Robertson ... 15,724-38
Emergency Orders, see Urgency.
Encephalitis, serious effects of, Tredgold ... 21,236-7
English Lunacy Legislation Committee, recommendations approved generally, Lewis ... 4,697-8
Epileptics, number increasing going North to South of Great Britain, Robertson ... 16,105-7

Escape:14 DAYS' PERIOD:

- Extension desirable, Chubb ... 6,598-607
no Reason known for provision, Yellowlees
... 5,847-51
Lapse of reception Order if patient escapes without recapture within 14 days, Willis 533-6, 537-9;
Bond 536-7.
Everett case, Parker ... 10746-57
Exercise, see under Care and Treatment.

- Farms, at London County Council Mental hospitals,
Keene ... 4,756-8
Feeble-minded cases, segregation desirable, Robertson ... 16,189
Food, see under Care and Treatment.
France, lay head of asylums, and objection to,
Robertson ... 16,226
Friends, see Relatives and Friends.

General Board of Control, Scotland:

- Appeal to, against detention, right of, Marr
15,272, 15,275-80, 15,286, 15,293-4, 15,302
Commissioners, appointment method, Rose 14,929
Composition, Rose, Marr ... 14,911-28, 14,930
Daily working of, Rose ... 14,974-5
District Boards, system, Rose, Marr
... 14,940-63, 15,388-93
Evidence on behalf of, see Rose, Sir H. Arthur,
D.S.O., and Marr, Dr. Hamilton C.
... 14,901-15,683.
Licensing and inspection, &c., of lunatic wards in poor houses by, Marr, Rose
... 15,422, 15,432-4, 15,439.
Medical Commissioner, vacancy, Rose, Marr
... 14,918, 14,922-3, 14,926, 14,928
Medical Deputy Commissioners, Rose ... 14,931-9
Meetings, Conferences, etc., Rose ... 14,970-1
Powers and functions, Rose
... 14,968, 14,972-3, 15,093-6, 15,404-9, 15,650-2
Powers of, re different institutions, Rose 15,093
Re-establishment of General Board of Commissioners in Lunacy as, Rose ... 14,908-9
Relationship with local authorities, Rose
... 15,655, 15,674-6

VISITATION:

- Complaints of ill-treatment, procedure on, Marr
Rose ... 15,009-39
Interviews with patients, Marr ... 14,984-94
System, Rose, Marr ... 14,976-5,008

General Nursing Council:

- Registration by, Wiese, Gibson ... 12,175-80
Relationship with Medico-Psychological Association, Collins, Cole ... 16,613-9

General Paralysis of the Insane:

- wrong Diagnosis of, Mr. P. ... 14,328-37
Malaria treatment, Hodgson 13,328; Golla 21,076-8, 21,087.
Remissions, Craig ... 9,506-12

Glasgow:

- Hospitals and accommodation for mental cases,
Carswell ... 16,523-34

Glasgow—cont.

- Mentally defective children, provision for, Cars-well ... 16,594
Observation wards, Carswell
16,474-83, 16,515-23, 16,535, 16,545-59, 16,574-91
Special certifying medical officer, Carswell 16,479,
16,482-3, 16,499-520, 16,539-42
Göttingen, Clinic under Professor Cramer, Boyle
... 18,666

Grants in Aid:

- Board of Control should administer, Gibson
12,264-78; Menzies 17,040-3; Lord 17,041.
Board of Control has no functions re, Willis 873 not Desired if increased State control involved,
Hodgson ... 13,409, 13,446-8
Increase desired, Mapother ... 18,989-90 if Increased, proposed condition of, Francis
... 21,459, 21,466-8 should be Increased, or abolished if Governmental control involved, Taggart 13,112, 13,232-40;
Hodgson 13,459.
Proposal re, to Mental hospitals, Gibson ... 12,285-8 in Scotland, Marr 15,149-53; Rose 15,673.
Treatment and care of patients might be improved, Francis ... 21,558-61
Greenock Parochial Asylum, Rose, Marr 15,070-6, 15,110

Guardians, Boards of:

- Discharge by, see under Discharge.
Elimination of, suggested, Gibson ... 12,271-2
Financial conflict with local authorities, Gibson
... 12,407-11
Position of, in receivership cases, Hildyard
... 18,070-3 should be Notified of inquests, Leach ... 6174-3 further Powers of, investigation advocated, Hill
... 18,297-310, 18,344-6
Responsibility for accommodation should rest on Visiting Committee, not with, Willis ... 21,386
Visitation by, see that title.

Guy's Hospital:

- Neurological Department, Craig 20,697, 20,727-34
Special ward for temporary cases, Craig 20,719-24

Hanwell Mental Hospital:

- Chaplain, work of, &c., Barns ... 17,554-629
Clothing, case of inadequacy, Hill 18,363-4, 18,375;
Glanvill 18,370, 18,374.
Punishment of patient by putting in acute ward,
Hill ... 18,315-43

Hartlepool Poor Law Infirmary, Mental Cases:

- Accommodation, class of, &c., Usher ... 3231
Diet, Usher ... 3249-54
Inmates, number, Usher ... 3231
Maintenance cost of inmate, and comparison with Asylum, Usher ... 3255-8
Nursing staff, number, pay, &c., Usher
... 3239-43, 3246-8
Observation arrangements, etc. Usher 3235-6, 3244-6
Health Leave of Absence, see under Leave of Absence.

Health, Ministry of:

- Appointment of Medical Superintendents by, desirability, Lomax ... 12,492-501 Chief Medical officer, questions relating to medical treatment, bringing of, within purview of, desirable, Brock ... 1210, 1219-21
Complaints, method of dealing with, Brock
1195-208; Francis 1300-50, 1466-70.
Control of licensed houses by, no objection to,
Edwards ... 6478-9
should be Court of Appeal from Board of Control,
Mr. L. ... 20,417
Discharge, power re, not advocated, Brock 1180
Evidence on behalf of, see Brock, L. G., C.B.,
1066-1222, and Francis, H. W. S., O.B.E., 1223-1473, 21,401-569.
Inspectors, method of dealing with reports,
Francis ... 1351-66
Jurisdiction over buildings, and certain duplication with Board of Control, Willis ... 36, 37-8

Health, Ministry of—cont.

Letters from patients and relations, &c., character and method of dealing with, Brock 1116-41, 1195-208

Licensing of licensed houses by, advocated, Edwards ... 6395

Medical officers of, investigation of medical treatment by, Brock 1128-9, 1142-62.

POOR LAW DIVISION:

Letters from patients in workhouses, method of dealing with, Francis ... 1286-97

Powers and duties:

Poor Law administration in connection with lunatics, Francis ... 1224-1473

Workhouses, transfer to, from asylums, Francis 1236-45

Women inspectors, Francis ... 1440-1

Position re workhouse accommodation, Francis 21,525-9, 21,565-8

Powers re local authorities, Brock 1098-101, 1111-5, 1191-2

POWERS re LUNACY ADMINISTRATION:

Nature of, Brock ... 1078-9, 1096-115, 1213-7

Transfer from Local Government Board and Home Office, Brock ... 1070-80

Value of, Brock ... 1173, 1181-2

Relations with Board of Control, Willis 723-9; Schuster 1026; Brock 1082-9, 1106-8, 1189-90, 1193-4.

STAFF:

no Expert alienists on, Brock ... 1104-5, 1207

Specialists and alienists on, would be desirable, Brock ... 1218

Herrison Asylum, see Dorchester.

Hertfordshire County Asylum, cost of food, Parker 11,715-26

Home Secretary:

Jurisdiction over criminal lunatics, Willis 36

Powers re lunacy administration, Brock 1076, 1090-5

Transfer to Ministry of Health, Brock 1070, 1075-8

Horton Mental Hospital:

Probationer nurses, difficulty of obtaining, Keene 4951-2

Training of hospital visitors, Barham ... 7402

Hospital Visitors, Voluntary:

Extension desirable, Parker... 10,590-5

Work done by, and value of, and need for increase, Barham ... 7391-408, 7601-3, 7611-12, 7627-8

Hospitals:GENERAL:

Attachment of clinics to, see under Clinics.

Insane cases in, Langdon-Down ... 13,653-4

Provisional treatment in, specially selected certifying doctor (for rate-aided patients) an indispensable feature of, and scheme for, Carswell ... 16,484-98

Reception of urgent cases in, question of, Langdon-Down 8178-85, 8190-204; Edwards 8186-9, 8199-200.

Special wards in:

Advantages of, Comrie ... 16,449, 16,458-65

Class of cases suited for, Comrie 16,439-49

Grant towards, desirable, Craig 20,798-9, 20,898

as Part of general hospital advocated, Comrie 16,385, 16,399-401 for Temporarily insane cases desirable, Craig 20,716-24, 20,792-3, 20,807

Treatment of mental cases in, proposal, Baly 2930-46; Craig 20,807-10.

Wards attached to, for observation, see under Observation period.

Mental, see that title.

Registered, see that title.

Hove, Lady Chichester Hospital, particulars re, Chichester, Boyle 18,501-610, 18,651, 18,659, 18,755-6; Langdon-Down 13,646-8.

Hull, City of, Mental Hospital, report on conditions by lady visitor, Parker ... 11,738-41

Humberstone City Mental Hospital:

Accommodation, source of patients, etc., Dixon 3720-34, 3979-82

Bathing arrangements, Dixon ... 3956-63

Humberstone City Mental Hospital—cont.

Bedridden patients, Dixon ... 3947-50

Bed-time, freedom re, Dixon ... 4045-50

Cases, statistics re, Dixon ... 3927, 4021-2, 4038-42

Classification of patients, Dixon ... 3839

Cupboards in wards, notices, etc., Dixon 3951-5

Dental treatment, Dixon ... 3989

Exercise, Dixon... 3990

Magazine produced by patients, Dixon 3778, 3875-9

Maintenance charge per head, Dixon ... 3992-6

Medical treatment, Dixon ... 3831, 3839-45

Nursing staff, Dixon ... 3859-61, 3923-33

Hypnotic suggestion, inducing of crime by, not considered possible, Yellowlees ... 5807

Ill-treatment or cruelty, see under Care and Treatment.

Illegal Detention, see Wrongful under Detention.

Infirmaries, see Poor Law Institutions.

Infirmity ward of Mental Hospital, bad conditions in, Mr. O. 20,084-170; Mr. W. 20,279-99, 20,302

Injury to pauper patient, Guardians should be notified and be represented at inquiry, Hill 18,297-310; Glanvill 18,305.

Inquests, Guardians should be notified, Leach 6174-5

Inquisition:

Application to Lord Chancellor for, Willis 614

CASES:

Number of, to 1st January, 1924, Willis 287A-8

Number held in year, Schuster ... 1027-9

Number at present, Sandhurst ... 17,793

IN PRIVATE CARE:

Commissioners' power to visit, question of, Sandhurst ... 17,879-82

Visitation four times a year for at least two years, Sandhurst ... 17,803-5

Number small and decreasing, Willis ... 42, 45-9

Chancery Visitors, see that title.

Lunatic so found unable to contract marriage, Hildyard ... 18,051-3

Procedure, Willis ... 51-6

Procedure dying out, Hildyard ... 18,033, 18,040, 18,049-50

Report to Lord Chancellor with view to alteration of Sec. 39 desirable, Schuster ... 984-6

Retention of procedure probably desirable, Hildyard ... 18,041-53

Visitation, Macleod 342-53; Sandhurst 17,801-3.

Insanity:

Alternation between sane and insane periods, Craig 20,740-54

Definition question, Parker 10,645-720, 11,801; Craig 20,740-54.

Types of, Connell ... 4096

Inspection, Compulsory, by Central Authority, necessary, Edwards ... 6399

Inspector of the Poor, Scotland, Rose 15,677-83

Judge in Lunacy, jurisdiction, Sandhurst ... 17,853-7

Judicial Authority:

should be Competent man, Chubb 6690-700, 6716-8 should be Connected with discharge proceedings, Parker ... 10,658-71, 11,801

Distinction from ordinary justice dealing with pauper patients, Macleod ... 112-4

Evidence by doctor before, in place of giving certificate, question of, Barr ... 7163

Explanation of term, Macleod ... 112-3

Functions of, and proceedings before, Macleod 122-60

Functions and position of, Langdon-Down 7936-60

Jurisdiction, Macleod ... 112-5

Medical certificates must be relied on, Broome 3625-8, 3690-1

Papers seen by, Lord ... 2193-5, 2290-1

Persons appointed to act as, Macleod, Willis 115-21

PROCEEDINGS BEFORE:

Information to patients of meaning of proceedings, question of, Barr 7127-31; Langdon-Down 7949-52.

Judicial Authority—cont.PROCEEDINGS BEFORE—cont.

Interview with certifying doctor, suggestion,
Chubb 6845, 6861

Interview with patient:

Advocated, Lidbetter 1563, 1569-73; Barnsley 1827; Walden 2021-7; Whitemore 3545-52; Broome Giles 3606-9; Devine 4272; Lovsey 5213-4; Chubb 6680-90, 6694, 6701, 6716, 6720-2, 6860; Barr 7098-103; Langdon-Down 8013; Parker 10,936-7; Cole, Collins, Menzies 16,998-7004; Beard 19,503-5, 19,514, 19,522.

Legal representation of patient, proposal not agreed with, Lomax 12,828

Medical man who gave certificate not present, Lord 2196

Method of carrying out, Broome Giles 3611-5, 3679-85

not considered Necessary, Yellowlees... 3758-71 not obligatory, Lidbetter 1523-4 not Obligatory, and disadvantage, Bond 263, 275-6

Patient seen before seeing doctor, to prevent being influenced, owing to personal qualifications, Broome Giles 3621-6

Persons present, Lord 2197-8

Presence of friend or relative:
Advocated, Broome Giles ...3610-6, 3669-70

Cases of, rare, Broome Giles... 3613-6, 3674-8

Relative or friend not present, Lord ... 2198

the Usual practice, Barr 7125-6

Medical practitioner should appear before, Parker 10,946-72

Power to call for doctor's attendance advocated, Beard 19,516-8, 19,521

Presence of patient at, question of, and discretion necessary, Parker ... 10,972-85

Presence of relatives or friends:
Desirability dependent on circumstances, Whitemore 3553-63

Opportunity of attending, advocated, Senior 3471-5

Power to call for, advocated, Beard ... 19,519

Safeguards, Macleod 128-9, 137-8; Willis 573.

Secrecy of, Willis 568

Taken in private, Macleod 127-8

Two justices advocated and clerk to justices should be present, Beard 19,497-544, 19,561, 19,564

Justices of the Peace:

Cardiff, appointment, annually, of all justices to act under Lunacy Acts, Sanders ... 2309

Difficulty in getting hold of, Lidbetter ... 1721-6

Duties of, re lunacy administration, certification and removal to institution, Barnsley...1782-817

Examination of alleged lunatic by (Sec. 16), criticism of wording "examination," Langdon-Down 13,660-78

Experience desirable, Walden... ..2159-60, 2179

Functions and position of, Langdon-Down 7936-60

should be more or less Guided by medical opinion, Connell 4211

Local doctor as, question of, Connell ... 4193-4

Old justices certifying as matter of routine, objection to, Parker 10,734-7

Panel, proposal, Walden 2058

Position of, should be more clearly defined, Baly 2855-7

PROCEEDINGS BEFORE:

Macleod 239-43

Assistance of patient by neutral person, suggestion not approved, Lobjoit ... 5203-5 little or no Difficulty experienced, Walden 2168-9; Lord 2211-8, 2284; Sanders 2368-70; Lovsey, 5239-46.

Difficulty in some cases, and further observation necessary, Walden ... 2029-30, 2043-4

Disagreement between justice and medical man, proposed procedure, Walden ... 2043-9

Doubt, power to make 14-day order for detention in workhouse, Barnsley 1796-803; Lord, 2242-7.

Justices of the Peace—cont.PROCEEDINGS BEFORE—cont.

Information to patient of meaning of, question of, Langdon-Down 7949-52

Information to patient of grounds of certificate not desirable, but given to relative or representative, Barnsley 2005-15

Information would be given to relation or representative, Walden 2060-1

Interview with patient:
Cab full of patients, Barr 7149

little Importance attached to, Yellowlees 5758-71

Importance of, Barnsley 1827-31; Lord 2191-2; Langdon-Down, 8013.

Lunatic believed to be brought to, in rural areas, Lidbetter 1758-62

Magistrate should go to patient rather than patient to be taken before magistrate, Dixon 3862-6

Medical practitioner consulted previously, but practice not in accordance with Sec. 16, Lord 2256-8

Medical certificate not always seen before, Cardiff, Sanders 2332-3

Place of:
in Motor car outside private house, Lord 2199-213 at Patient's own home or brought to justices, Barnsley 1786-9 at Police Court, Bond... .. 696

at Police Court, undesirable, Walden 2090; Broome Giles 3636-8; Lovsey, 5294; Langdon-Down, 7987.

at Private house, place of business or private room at Police Courts, Barnsley 1915-7, 1921-2, 1926-9 at Private residence, undesirable, Walden 2081, 2089 at Workhouse, Lidbetter 1543-4; Sanders 2323-35, 2406, 2418; Baly 2494-515.

at Workhouse, objected to, Walden 2080

Presence of friend or relative:
Advocated, Lord 2233-9, 2252-5, 2268-76, 2290-3

not considered Necessary, Baly ... 2849-57

Relatives could attend, Cardiff, Sanders 2415-6 must be Private with no judicial element, Lord 2240-1

Procedure at, Barnsley 1790-6, 1993-2015; Walden 2031-64; Sanders 2359-68, 2396-402, 2417; Baly 2641-56, 2678-97.

proposed Reception house would be useful for, Barnsley 1918-24; Walden 2080, 2087-9.

Relatives seen in some cases, Lambeth Infirmary, Baly 2650-6

Value, question of, Robertson 15,740-56, 15,785-93

Medical certificate always seen, Barnsley 1973-4, 1991-2

Medical certificate must be relied on, Sanders 2355-68, 2396-402

a Medical man present, Walden 2031-2, 2037-42

Medical man not generally present, Barnsley 1804-6

Nature of, approved, but should be before person other than magistrate, Robertson 16,169-73

Previous medical history considered, Walden 2150-3

Power to call for doctor's attendance advocated, *Beard*19,516-8, 19,521

Presence of patient at, question of, discretion necessary, Parker 10,972-85

Reception order, given without enquiry into patient's financial position, Lord ... 2259-63

Relative's or guardian's attendance, power to call for, advocated, Beard 19,519

Relative of patient generally present, and approval of, Barnsley 1993-2003

Relatives should be informed that proceedings being taken, Sanders 2407-11; Senior 3436-7

Justices of the Peace—cont.PROCEEDINGS BEFORE—cont.

- Representation of patient by solicitor not advocated, Barnsley ... 2001
- Two justices advocated and clerk to justices should be present, Beard ... 19,497-544, 19,561, 19,564
- Value attached to, Barr ... 7151
- Value of, doubted, Taggart ... 13,149-72
- Written statement by relative seen in majority of cases, Sanders ... 2334-5, 2407-8
- Refusal to accept medical evidence, case of, Taggart ... 13,278-80
- Refusal to certify, Devine ... 4502-3
- Refusal to certify in spite of doctor's certificate, case of murder of wife and children after, Barnsley ... 1850-7
- Refusal to make order, and discharge on, Lidbetter ... 1546-8
- SPECIALLY APPOINTED JUSTICE:
- Advocated, Dixon 4004-5; Lobjoit 5170-1; Menzies, Cole 16,992-7.
- not Advocated, Langdon-Down ... 7959
- Proposal, Lidbetter ... 1748, 1751
- Question of, Lewis ... 4657-63
- Training of, suggestion, Langdon-Down ... 7960
- Use of stipendiary magistrate in Birmingham for certain cases, Barnsley ... 1912-14
- Visitation by, see under Visitation.

Juveniles:

- Admission to public mental hospitals, objection to, Devine ... 4472
- in Asylums, Scotland, Robertson ... 16,224-5
- Certifiable as lunatics, not mental defectives, special provision advocated for, Flint 6244-8, 6275-8
- should be Dealt with under Mental Deficiency Act rather than Lunacy Acts, Lidbetter ... 1726-9
- Early treatment, importance of, Boyle 18,574-83, 18,653, 18,657-60, 18,665
- Provision for, in Glasgow, Carswell ... 16,594
- Separate accommodation for, in workhouses, advocated, Senior, Usher ... 3422-35
- in Same institution as adults, objection to, Yellowlees 5727-8; Flint 6242-8, 6275-7.

Kent County Mental Hospitals, see Chartham and Maidstone.

Lady Chichester Hospital, Hove, particulars re, Chichester, Boyle 18,501-610, 18,651, 18,659, 18,755-6

Lady Visitors, Lord ... 17,266-76

Lambeth Guardians, persons chargeable to, on account of illness or sickness, and number suffering from mental disorder, Baly ... 2886

Lambeth Infirmary:

- Justices, regular attendance, Baly ... 2494
- Legal position, Baly ... 2830
- Nature of accommodation, etc., Baly ... 2452-72

MENTAL CASES:

- Admission, methods, Baly ... 2473-7
- 14 days' detention, Baly 2530, 2681-2, 2702-28, 2792-803, 2820-5, 2894-911, 2947-53
- Increase in number partly owing to more rigid carrying out of Act, Baly ... 2536-45
- where Insanity due to physical condition, kept in infirmary if possible and not sent to mental hospital, Baly ... 2893
- Male ward, accommodation inadequate, Baly 2471-2, 2859-60
- Nature of, Baly ... 2490-3
- Numbers and classes, 1923-24, Baly ... 2516-35
- Patients not always detained 3 days, Baly 2881
- Procedure after admission, Baly 2478-515, 2570-83, 2616-866
- Straight jacket, case of using, Baly 2814, 2887-8
- Mental department, staff, Baly 2584-93, 2867-8

NURSING STAFF:

- Conditions of life, and service, Baly ... 2980-7
- Efficiency, Baly ... 2988-96
- Inadequate, Baly ... 2888, 2958-71

Lambeth Infirmary—cont.NURSING STAFF—cont.

- Men, source of, Baly ... 2976
- Qualifications obtainable after service, Baly 2977-9
- Remuneration, Baly ... 2972-8A
- Relative, friend or representative, attendance of, Baly ... 2570-9, 2650-6, 2871
- Specialist, cases of calling in, Baly 2826-8, 2844-5

Lancashire:

- Lunatics and mental deficient, accommodation for, Taggart ... 13,212-23

LUNATIC PATIENTS:

- Clinic for incipient cases, suggestion, Taggart 13,070-130; Hodgson 13,313.
- Discharges, statistics re, Taggart 13,114-25

MENTAL HOSPITALS:

- Medical Superintendent, appointment system, Taggart ... 13,243-9
- Number and accommodation, Taggart 13,212, 13,218
- Private patients, accommodation for, Taggart 13,058-61, 13,270-7
- Research work, Beard ... 19,556-7
- Poor law mental cases, statistics, etc., Leach 6147-50, 6158-61, 6183-93
- Visitation of Asylums by Guardians, procedure, Leach ... 6131-8
- Lancaster Mental Hospital, Morecambe Bay, private patients, Sandhurst ... 17,993-4
- Lavatory accommodation, see under Care and Treatment.

Leave of Absence:

- 48 hours, Dixon ... 3750-3, 4033, 4494-5
- Health, system, Macleod ... 467-9

ON TRIAL:

- Allowances during, Macleod 455, 466; Willis 523-4; Connell 4236-7; Devine 4555; Lovsey 5368-9; Barham 7480-1.
- Divergent practice re, Parker ... 11,106, 11,109
- Case remains under certificate, Willis 527-30; Chubb 6562-3.
- De-certification by, would restrict leave, Chubb 6829-30
- Discharge during, Chubb ... 6568-73
- Discharge at end of procedure, Macleod, Bond, Willis ... 475-80
- Divergence in application of section, Parker 11,106-11
- Encouragement by Board of Control, Bond 470; Willis 520, 524, 525.
- Extended use of, advocated, Parker 11,106, 11,109-23; Mr. L. 20,415.
- Extension, Chubb ... 6574-6
- Home conditions in connection with, Barr 7061-4

Non-return:

- some Amendment of practice desirable, Chubb 6603-11
- automatic Discharge, Chubb ... 6576-97
- Procedure, Willis 540; Devine 4452-6.
- Number of cases, 1922-23, from mental hospitals, Willis ... 519-20
- largely Resorted to, Macleod 454; Bond 460.
- Responsibility for patient during, Chubb 6586-90, 6596-7, 6612-25
- Return to hospital during, Chubb 6565-7, 6591-2
- Return to institution if necessary, before expiry of, Macleod, Willis ... 471-4
- Superintendent's fear of reputation suffering, question of, Bond, Willis ... 470
- System, and value of, Macleod, Bond, Willis 385-6, 452-9, 468-70, 472-5; Dixon 4033-6; Keene 4782-9; Chubb 6552-60; Barr 7065-6.
- Visiting of patients during, Lovsey 5366-7; Worth 17,255-6; Goodall 17,265.

Leeds Infirmary:

- Distinction felt by people between workhouse and, Ford ... 6213-7
- Mental blocks, Ford ... 6197, 6198
- Private cases in, Ford ... 6213-5
- Leicester City Mental Hospital, see Humberstone.

Letters, see Correspondence, under Care and Treatment.

Licensed Houses:

- Abolition advocated, Gibson 12,289-323, 12,367-88, 12,392-400
- Access to outside world, Fawcett 6988-9, 7016-23
- Accounts, audit of, would not be objected to, Craig 20,987-92
- Adequacy of accommodation, question of, Cole 17,046-7
- Admission to, through poor law, Chubb ... 6675-7
- Admissions, 1923, Edwards 6330
- Advantages of, Craig 20,993
- Advantages of public institution over, Miss C. 14,466-501
- Approval of system, Craig 20,924-8
- Balance sheet and list of shareholders, publication proposed, Lomax 12,928-34
- Bathing, etc., arrangements, complaint of, Miss B. 14,855-6
- alleged Bonus to doctor on each patient, Miss C. 14,584-6
- Charges, supervision question, Craig 20,985-92
- Complaints of detention not made at first interview, but by persons under detention for some period, Fawcett 6979-85
- COMPLAINTS:
- Deterrance from, owing to fear, no risk known, Fawcett 7037-9
- Investigation of, Fawcett 6917-27
- Continuance of, advocated, and want met by, Langdon-Down ... 13,500-12, 13,519-39
- should be under Control if certified cases taken, Boyle 18,707-8, 18,710-8, 18,723-6, 18,736-9, 18,741
- Convalescent and seaside homes, Edwards 6400-5
- Convalescent ward, personal experience and complaint, Miss C. ... 14,419-22, 14,425-34
- CONTROL:
- Board of Control, extent, Edwards ... 6475-6
- by Ministry of Health, no objection to, Edwards 6478-9
- Correspondence, Edwards 6365-6; Fawcett 7016-24.
- Criticism of, and increase objected to, Parker 11,288-329, 11,801
- public Demand for, Lomax 12,904-5; Verrall 13,516; Cole 17,044-5; Sandhurst 17,967-9, 17,987; Hildyard 18,231-40.
- Demand could not be met by registered hospitals, Langdon-Down 13,531
- DETENTION, IMPROPER:
- no Case known, Fawcett 6942-54; Barr 7054-61, 7113-6; Hildyard 18,234.
- certain Conflict of interest and duty, Sandhurst 17,997-8
- Safeguards against, Willis 497-9, 507-8; Edwards 6352-83, 6463-5; Fawcett 6988-9, 6993-5; Barr 7049, 7132-6; Langdon-Down 13,504, 13,543-4, 13,547-57; Cole 17,051, 17,060; Sandhurst 17,983, 17,995-7.
- Safeguard against, increase could be considered, Langdon-Down 13,558-9
- Tendency to keep people in, owing to profit made, Miss C. 14,411-7, 14,595-600
- Detention, unnecessary, denied, Cole 17,052-62
- Distinction from registered hospitals, Yellowlees 5818-20; Edwards 6333-9.
- unsatisfactory Distribution of, Cole ... 17,048
- Escape from, Miss C. 14,462-3
- Exploitation of patients, no risk of, Cole 17,052
- Extension, Board of Control should have power of, if necessary, Cole 17,281, 17,282
- Food, complaint of, Miss B. 14,857-9, 14,885, 14,887, 14,896
- History of, Edwards 6315-21
- Increase desirable, Sandhurst 18,005
- Interest on part of relatives to keep patients in, possibility of, admitted, Langdon-Down 13,708-9
- Lavatory accommodation, Mr. B. ... 14,721-2
- Letter writing and receiving not allowed, Miss B. 14,735-44, 14,750-5, 14,774, 14,895

LICENCES:

- Lapsed during last 15 years, Sandhurst 18,005-11
- Revocation, Lord Chancellor's power, Willis 619; Schuster 982-3.

Licensed Houses—cont

LICENSING:

- by Ministry of Health advocated, Edwards 6395
- System and procedure, Edwards ... 6394-5
- Limited liability corporations, Edwards 6472-4
- Medical supervision in, not always adequate, Sandhurst 17,897-915

MEDICAL SUPERINTENDENT:

- no Financial interest in many cases, Edwards 6463
- Mental qualifications desirable, Sandhurst 18,018-20
- inadequate Supervision by, Mr. B. 14,637-8, 14,652-4, 14,674-7
- Medical Visitor, duties, Fawcett 6899-904

METROPOLITAN:

- Licensed by Board of Control, Willis ... 616
- Number of cases in, 1st January, 1924, Willis 67
- Metropolitan and Provincial, numbers, Edwards 6343-6
- no New houses allowed under 1890 Act, Willis 82-8, 627-8, 923-4
- Notices, posting up of, Bond 802; Fawcett 7024-8.
- Number of, and of patients, decrease, Edwards 6321-8, 6340-2, 6351, 6421-4

NURSING STAFF:

- Advantages of public institution as regards, Miss C. 14,500-1
- Constant change, Gibson 12,319-22, 12,396-400
- Hours, Miss C. 14,581-3
- Period of service, Lomax 12,940-2
- Remuneration from patients' friends, objection to, Gibson 12,323
- Objection to, Miss C. 14,404
- Occupation, lack of, Miss C. 14,474-7; Mr. B. 14,678-82, 14,685.
- for Pauper patients formerly, but private only now, Edwards 6321, 6325-7
- Personal experience, Miss C. 14,557-77; Mr. B. 14,605-729; Miss B. 14,734-900.
- lack of Personal interest in patients, Mr. B. 14,605, 14,673, 14,682
- Private accommodation, provision in Lancashire by Local Authorities, Taggart 13,058-61, 13,270-7
- Private ownership of, objected to, and proposal re State or local running of, Lomax 12,901-20
- Profits, enquiry into, advocated, owing to temptation as result of, Parker 11,287-314, 11,317, 11,322-6, 11,801

PROVINCIAL:

- Licensed by justices, Willis 616
- Number of cases in, 1st January, 1924, Willis 67
- Visitation, Willis 294, 299-300; Macleod 299-302, 334-5, 341; Barnsley 1818-24; Langdon-Down 13,715-9.
- Receipt by patients of comforts for which payment made, question of safeguard, Sandhurst 17,999-18,004
- Recovery rates, Langdon-Down 13,504
- Recovery rate lowered by early discharge of patients by friends, Cole 17,053-4
- REMOVAL TO OTHER LOCALITIES:
- should be Allowable, Cole 17,048-9
- Difficulty, Sandhurst 17,970-9
- Removal of patients from one home to another, difficulty of, and procedure should be facilitated, Boyle 18,694-705, 18,729-31, 18,757-9
- Reports etc., scrutiny by Board of Control, Fawcett 6967-9
- RESTRICTIONS:
- a Mistake, Cole 17,044, 17,286-7; Sandhurst 17,967.
- Reason for, Sandhurst 17,980-2
- Repeal advocated, Langdon-Down 13,527-30; Boyle 18,682-93, 18,706, 18,719, 18,740-50.
- no Saleable value attached to, Edwards 6421-5
- Scottish system, Marr 15,478, 15,495-502, 15,533
- System, Willis 915-24
- Tenure, insecurity of, and suggestion, Chubb 6796-800
- Theoretical objection to, basis of, Langdon-Down 13,501
- Transference of licences, facilitation advocated, Edwards 6400-5
- Treatment in, complaint of, Miss C. 14,418-55

Licensed Houses—cont

very Useful and limitation might be reconsidered,
Willis ... 660-1
 Useful part played by, Edwards 6339, 6349-50

VISITATION:

by Commissioners, and interviews with patients,
Macleod 296-8, 301, 332-5, 341; Edwards
 6353-60, 6371-3; Chubb 6506-21, 6524-5, 6545-55, 6825-8, 6880-7.

by Justices and medical visitor, procedure and interviews with patients, Willis 294, 299-300;
Macleod 299, 302, 334-5, 341; Barnsley 1818-24;
Chubb, 6504-5, 6520, 6536-48, 6801-16, 6881,
 6883; Faussett 6905-87, 6990-2, 6996-7014;
Barr 7052-61.

by Magistrates, continuation necessary, Edwards 6396
 by Relatives, Chubb ... 6791-5

VOLUNTARY BOARDERS:

Admission on written request only, advocated,
Craig ... 20,697, 20,912

Encouragement of system advocated, Langdon-Down
 ... 13,520-3

Increase in number, Lord ... 17,048 becoming Insane, Amendment of Sec. 315 desirable, Edwards ... 6427-39

Well conducted, Lomax ... 12,901, 12,903

L.R.C.P. and M.R.C.S., Curriculum for, Baly
 3000-9

Liverpool, Lunatic Patients:

Maintenance charges, Taggart ... 13,053-61

Pauperisation of, even when friends pay contribution,
Taggart ... 13,036-68

Transfer to private side, system re, Taggart
 13,040-8

Local Authorities:

Financial conflict with Guardians, Gibson 12,407-11

Position re research and suggestions, Mott 17,138-40;
Goodall 17,163-4; Cole 17,287; Golla 21,075.

Power of Ministry of Health re, Brock 1098-101
 1111-5, 1191-2

Powers and duties of, Keene 4702-19, 4729, 4734

Provision of Clinics by, see under Clinics.

Subscription to after care work, Cole 17,279;
Sidney 1921-3, 19,280.

Local Government Board, transfer of powers to Ministry of Health, Brock ... 1070-80

London County Council:

Lunacy administration by, Keene ... 4703, 4715-8

MENTAL HOSPITALS:

Accommodation possessed by, Keene ... 4852

Admission, discharge and readmission statistics,
Keene ... 4792-801, 5018-33

Admissions, sources of, statistics, Keene 4909-19

Clothing, Sidney 19,317, 19,325-7; Gardner
 19,317-24, 19,328.

Committee, Keene ... 4709-13, 4773-6, 4840-4, 4975

Negotiations with National Asylum Workers'
 Union, Keene ... 4773-6

Sub-Committees, Keene ... 4865-9

Domestic staff, wages, Keene ... 5040-5

Farms at, Keene ... 4756-8

Food, Keene 4747-53, 4955; Sidney 19,297-8, 19,304, 19,306-7, 19,309-16; Gardner 19,299-303,
 19,305-6, 19,308-16.

Increase not anticipated, Gardner 19,380; Sidney
 19,380-2.

Laboratories, Sidney 19,352; Gardner 19,353.

Maintenance charge, Keene 4813, 4830, 4836-7.

Matrons, general hospital training desired,
Keene ... 4948-51

Medical Staff:

no Difficulty in obtaining, and method of,
Keene ... 4933-41, 5017

Facilities for qualifying in psychological medicine, Sidney 19,334-42; Gardner 19,339, 19,342-6.

Increase, Sidney ... 19,332-3

Qualifications required, Mott 17,106, 17,109;
Sidney 19,347-50.

Salaries, Keene ... 4759-63

Study leave, Mott ... 17,110

London County Council—cont.MENTAL HOSPITALS—cont.*Medical Superintendents:

Knowledge of individual cases, Sidney 19,386,
 19,400-1, 19,403-4; Gardner 19,402-3.

Position, Sidney ... 19,390-9

Nursing Staff:

Conditions of service improved, Sidney
 19,369

Female:

Difficulty of obtaining suitable nurses,
Keene 4942, 4951; Gardner 19,355,
 19,359-62; Sidney 19,367.

Employment in male wards under consideration, Sidney ... 19,354

Hours, Keene 4994-6; Sidney 19,368.

Promotion, Keene 4770-2, 4781; Gardner 19,372.

Remuneration, Keene 4764-81, 4944-6, 4990-3, 4997-5001.

Private patients in: Baly ... 2861

Admission as pauper patients and subsequent re-classification, Keene 4802-4, 4816-22, 4953-4, 4956-9, 5035-9, 5065-8.

Charge the same as for pauper patients,
Keene ... 4809, 4811-3

Ex-service men, etc. as, if maintenance paid by the State, Keene ... 4848-51

Maximum sum charged, Keene ... 5069-71

Reports on, by Visiting Committee, Keene
 4790-3

Treatment the same as that of pauper patients, Keene ... 4805-10

Villa system, extension of, Sidney ... 19,405-7

no Overlapping with Middlesex County Council,
Keene ... 4858-61

Research under, Golla 21,008-46, 21,051, 21,062-74

Statistics of patients under, Keene ... 4848

Lord Chancellor:

Appeal from, to House of Lords, Schuster 966

Inquisitions, see that title.

JURISDICTION: Willis 32-35, 36; Schuster 1020.

Charitable institutions, patients in, Schuster
 977-80

Departments, Schuster 951.

Retention, question of need for, Schuster
 1002-II, 1030-7, 1042-4

Legal position, Schuster ... 964-6

LETTERS FROM PATIENTS:

Method of dealing with, Schuster 995-1001

Nature of, Schuster ... 998

MASTER IN LUNACY:

Appeal from, to Lords Justices, Schuster 961-3

Appointment, Schuster ... 951

Department:

Functions, Hildyard
 18,025-9, 18,032-5, 18,039, 18,091-6

Notification to, in certain cases, suggestion,
Hildyard ... 18,057, 18,170-95

Organisation, Hildyard ... 18,030-1

Jurisdiction, Schuster 952-60; Sandhurst,
 17,833-6, 17,853-7.

One only, now, Sandhurst ... 17,774-5

Relation to Board of Control, Willis 729-30;
Schuster 973-81.

Revocation of licences, power, Willis 619; Schuster
 982-3.

Visitation by order of, Macleod, Willis 342-8,
 353; Schuster 975-6.

Visitation, overlapping with Board of Control,
 no difficulty caused, Willis ... 39-42

VISITORS IN LUNACY:

Amalgamation with Board of Control visitors, question of, Schuster ... 1053-6

Appointment and duties, Schuster ... 967

Functions, distinction from those of Board of Control, Schuster ... 1032-5

Number, Sandhurst ... 17,767-73

Overlapping with Board of Control's visitors.
Schuster ... 1054-8

Reports, method of dealing with, Schuster
 989-94

Section 183, interpretation question, Sandhurst
 17,779-84

Lord Chancellor—cont.VISITORS—cont.

- Special reports by, to Lord Chancellor, Sandhurst ... 17,785-6
 Visitation by, see Chancery Visitors under Visitation.
 Work of, could be done by Board of Control, Willis ... 43
 Lords Justices, jurisdiction of, Schuster ... 961-4

Lunacy Act:

See also Certification and Reception Order.

- Sections 11 and 20, unnecessary duplication, Whitemore ... 3542-3

SECTION 13:

- Classes of cases coming under, Lidbetter ... 1488

- Conversion of non-pauper into pauper by, Lidbetter ... 1489, 1492-4

- Demarcation between pauper cases and cases under, Macleod ... 277-8

- Functions of relieving officer under, Lidbetter 1485-8, 1526, 1537-8

- Misunderstanding in connection with, Lidbetter 1488-90

- Persons sent to Poor Law Institutions under, Bond ... 262, 272, 278-9, 286-7

- Procedure under, Macleod, Bond 254-66, 286-7; Willis, Macleod 737-44.

- Procedure under Section 14 or, difficulty, Leach 6081-8, 6249-53

- Section 14 more used than, in Sheffield, Flint 6232-7

- Use, extent of, Lidbetter ... 1495-6

- Working of, in Cardiff, Bond 261-6, 286-7; Sanders 2336-42.

Section 15, see Lunatic wandering at large.

SECTION 20:

- Extension to borough asylums, suggestion, Leach 6099

- Large number of cases dealt with under, Leach 6090-2

Sections 24, 25, 26, see under Poor Law Institutions.

Section 49, proposed elimination of certain words, Mr. L. ... 20,418-9

PART XI:

- Anomalies in, Bodkin ... 17,630-763

- Classification of offences in, question of justification for, Bodkin ... 17,708-12

- Orders under, acceptance without further proof should be provided for, Bodkin 17,633-41

- Summary proceedings, alternative by indictment in certain cases, suggestion, Bodkin 17,650-9, 17,723-31

SECTION 315:

- Amendment desirable, Edwards 6407-13, 6427-39

- Cases dealt with under, nature of, Bodkin 17,637-91

- Date of committing offence, Bodkin ... 17,661-5

- Difficulty in connection with, and possible remedy, Langdon-Down 7854-60, 7869-79

- Initiation of proceedings under, Bodkin 17,692-3

- Safeguard against wrongful incarceration, Bodkin ... 17,669-75

- Splitting up of, desirable and suggestion re, Bodkin ... 17,642-50

- Terminology, etc., difficulties in connection with, Bodkin ... 17,680-6, 17,732-35

- Variation in terminology in, and suggestion re, Bodkin ... 17,660-5

- Voluntary system, safeguarding of, Bodkin 17,666-8

Section 317, insertion in, of "Director of Public Prosecutions," question of reason, and need for, Bodkin ... 17,694-707, 17,713-5

Section 320, "Sued," criticism of wording, Bodkin ... 17,722

Section 321, criticisms, Bodkin ... 17,736-8

Section 322, criticism, Bodkin ... 17,756-61

Section 326, criticism, Bodkin ... 17,763

Lunacy Act—cont.

- Section 327, criticisms of wording, Bodkin 17,739-49

- Section 328, criticism, Bodkin ... 17,750-4

- Intention not carried out, Parker ... 10,430-2

- Synopsis of, should be made available in pamphlet form for information of the public, Parker 11,046-50

Lunacy Administration, see Administration.

Lunacy Commissioners, see Board of Control.

Lunacy Law:

- Administration difficulty, Parker ... 10,611-4

- Code, Willis ... 15-13

- previous Inquiries, Willis ... 19-26

- Legal aspect emphasised instead of medical, Craig ... 20,697

- Legal element, re-assertion of, Parker 10,415-27

- Machinery very good on the whole, Langdon-Down 7920-1

- Principles of, Willis ... 13-14

- Simplification desirable with necessary safeguards, Giles 3095-9, 3114-6; Cole 16,624-8; Collins 16,624-32, 16,634-5.

- Special Acts, Keene ... 4714

Lunatic "Wandering at Large" (Sec. 15):

- Interpretation, Lidbetter ... 1763-4

- Procedure re, Macleod 243; Lidbetter 1554-6.

Maidstone, Kent County Mental Hospital:

- Open door wards, numbers in, Lewis ... 4618

- Reception ward, Lewis ... 4646-7

- Staff, proportion to patients, Lewis 4648, 4675-6

Maintenance:

See also Chargeability and under Mental Hospitals.

- Discretionary trusts, and position of Master in Lunacy, Hildyard ... 18,085, 18,091-6

PAYMENT:

- by Guardians, Glanvill, Hill ... 18,365-70

- Methods, Hildyard ... 18,082-8

Master in Lunacy, see under Lord Chancellor.

Maudsley Hospital:

- Langdon-Down* ... 13,647-50, 13,655

- Admission of patients and selection, Mapother 15,793-8

- After care, Gardner ... 19,294

- Approval of system, Miss G. 20,435-8, 20,458-9

- Cases sent by Guardians, Gardner, Sidney, 19,037, 19,074-85, 19,089

- no Certification of patients at, Mapother 18,799-805, 18,811-3

- Class of cases taken, Mapother 18,839-40; Sidney, Gardner 19,012-9, 19,124-36.

- Cost of running, Mapother 18,853-9; Sidney 19,050-9.

- Detention in, extent of, Mapother 18,787-8; Sidney 19,062-9, 19,090-4.

- Dietary cost, Mapother ... 18,992

- Discharge not recovered, Mapother ... 18,955-8

- Features of, Keene ... 4935-7

- Free treatment in certain cases, Sidney, Gardner 19,028-42, 19,044-53

- Functions of, Mapother ... 18,777

- a Legal anomaly, Miller ... 17,417

- Non-provision for non-volitional patients, a disadvantage, Cole ... 16,799

NURSING STAFF:

- Female, employment in male wards, Goodall 17,072; Mapother 18,905-9.

- Interest in research work, Golla ... 21,092

- Training, Mapother ... 18,910, 18,918

- Objects of, Sidney ... 19,020-7

- Out-patient department, Keene ... 4932-4

- Particulars re, Mott ... 16,809-10

- Patient desiring to leave, procedure re, Sidney 19,062-74

- Pathological laboratory, Gardner 19,346, 19,353; Sidney 19,351.

- Paying patients, charge to, Sidney ... 19,043

- Psychiatric training at, Mott, 17,106, 17,110, 17,118, 17,127-32; Sidney, Gardner 19,337-46.

- Research, Mott 17,173-4, 17,195; Mapother 18,976-7, 18,984; Golla 21,009-46, 21,062-74.

- Source of patients, Gardner, Sidney ... 19,086-9

Maudsley Hospital—cont.

- Statutory provisions re, Sidney ... 19,008-88
 Success of, Mott ... 16,807
 Voluntary boarders, statutory provision for, Keene 4930-2
 Voluntary patient becoming non-volitional, question of procedure and certification at Maudsley objected to, Sidney ... 19,094-121
 Mechanical Restraint, see under Care and Treatment.

Medical Certificates, see Certificates.

Medical Education in Psychiatry:

- Bethlem, Phillips ... 5974-5

CLINICAL TEACHING:

- Advocated, Mott ... 17,101
 at Cambridge University, not obtainable, Mott 17,116; Goodall 17,164.
 at Oxford University, difficulty, Goodall 17,164-5 in Clinics, importance of, Goodall ... 17,164-7
 Clinics would be of value for, Buzzard 17,293-5
 Diploma, Edinburgh University, Robertson 15,732-5

- Edinburgh University course, Robertson 15,724-35
 Importance of, Mott ... 17,099-100
 Improvement desirable and lines of, Connell 4212-3; Craig 20,994-1000.

- Improvement necessary, Buzzard ... 17,291-5

- Inadequacy of, Goodall ... 17,164

- Lectures on general psychology at end of physiological course advocated, Mott 17,112-3, 17,126

- London M.D. in Psychological Medicine, Mott 17,132-6; Cole 17,136-7.

- at Maudsley Hospital, Mott 17,106, 17,110, 17,118, 17,127-32; Sidney, Gardner 19,337-46.

- Position re, Edwards ... 8002-9

- Provision in Mental Treatment Bill approved, Mapother ... 18,979

- Post-graduate courses, scheme, Mott ... 17,101

PSYCHOLOGICAL MEDICINE DIPLOMA:

- Good results from institution of, Mott ... 17,099
 Number of, and limitation to a few recognised universities desirable, Mott 17,110, 17,114-6, 17,119-22

- Obligatory for senior medical officers in London

- County Council asylums, Mott 17,106, 17,109

- Proportion of medical officers of asylums holding, question of, Mott ... 17,107-8

- Scotland, Sandhurst ... 18,024

- Teaching by general physician in ward desirable, Craig ... 20,995

Medical Staff of Institutions:

- Allocation of cases to, suggestion, Lomax 12,590, 12,592-4, 12,598-609

- Clerical work, Lomax ... 12,594-8

- greater Facilities for study and passing examinations desirable, Hodgson ... 13,326, 13,339

- Fluctuations and questions of preventing, Golla 21,083-5

- General medical experience desirable and position improving, Collins 17,230-3; Mott 17,230, 17,233.

- Inadequacy of, in many hospitals, Lomax 12,588-91

- Increase needed, Parker 11,801; Mr. L. 20,366.

- Interchange between asylums desirable, Hodgson 13,326-8, 13,339

- Proportion to number of patients, opinion re, Collins 17,196-200; Craig 20,977-80.

- Psychiatric training, see Medical education.

- Qualifications, Mott ... 17,107-8

- Retirement age, Keene ... 5001

- Salaries, scales, London County Council Mental hospitals, Keene ... 4759-63

- Special training, question of, Bond ... 859-65

- STUDY LEAVE:

- Difficulties in connection with, Collins 17,158-62.

- System under London County Council, Mott 17,110

Medical Superintendents:ADMINISTRATIVE DUTIES:*Delegation:

- Desirable and possible, Yellowlees 5401-11; Langdon-Down 13,560-81; Marr 15,658-60, 15,664; Collins, Cole 17,220-9, 17,233-41.

Medical Superintendents—cont.ADMINISTRATIVE DUTIES—cont.*Delegation—cont.

- in Practice, Robertson 16,228, 16,246-51; Collins 17,209-16, 17,226-9.
 Demarcation question, Lomax 12,471-6, 12,480-91, 12,507-15; Hodgson 13,333; Masterman, 13,582-93.
 Departmental heads advocated, Robertson 16,227-9

Relief from:

- Advocated, Lomax 12,465-91, 12,502-17, 12,562, 12,583-5; Hodgson, 13,329-38; Sandhurst 17,885-94; Mr. L. 20,366, 20,370.

- not Advocated, Superintendent must be supreme head, Langdon-Down 13,560-81; Robertson 16,226; Worth 17,333-41; Sidney 19,390-9.

- Difference of opinion re, Sandhurst ... 17,886-7

- Difficulty and possible solutions, Parker 11,362-426

- in Military hospitals, etc., Sandhurst 17,889-90

- not Possible, Marr ... 15,663, 15,667

- Question of possibility of certain relief, Barham ... 7433-49

- Transfer to clerk and steward advocated and no need for friction, Goodall 17,201-9, 17,219

APPOINTMENT:

- Assistance of Board of Control, case of, Willis 926-8

- Improvement in method advocated, Parker 11,348-54, 11,358-9

- by Ministry of Health, desirability, Lomax 12,492-501

- Period of, question, Parker ... 11,355-7

- Provisional, would be approved, Parker 11,360-1

- System, Lancashire, Taggart ... 13,243-9

- by Visiting Committees, objection to, Lomax 12,492-501, 12,577-80

- Dependence on Chief Attendant and suggested remedy, Mr. Y. ... 20,629-33

- Discharge by, see that title.

- Dismissal of nursing staff should be in power of Committee, not of, Gibson ... 12,328-44

- Duties, confining of, to medical affairs advocated, but remaining disciplinary authority with power of suspension only, Gibson ... 12,328-41

- should Go round wards with officers, Lomax 12,517, 12,569

- alleged Inattention on part of, complaints heard, Sandhurst 17,883-4, 17,895-6, 17,902-5, 17,913-5

- Individual attention to patients, extent of, Robertson ... 16,229-35, 16,240-61

- Interchange between asylums advocated, Hodgson 13,327-8

- Knowledge of cases, extent of, Devine ... 4559-60

- shorter Period of service for pension advocated, Hodgson ... 13,328

- Personal interest in patients, importance of, Lomax 12,568-9, 12,571-2, 12,576

- as Petitioner, should not be allowed, Miss G. 20,553-6

- POSITION OF:

- should be more Independent of Visiting Committee, Lomax ... 12,492-501, 12,563, 12,577-82

- as regards Medical treatment, Parker 11,335-47

- QUALIFICATIONS: Parker 11,352-4; Sandhurst 18,021-4.

- not always Adequate, Parker ... 11,640

- Medico-psychological technical, advocated, Hodgson ... 13,325

- Psychological medicine diploma, advocated, Mott 17,124

- Special, desirable, Walden ... 2131-3, 2161

- Reliance on subordinates to some extent essential in large institutions, Sidney 19,384, 19,386-9; Gardner 19,385.

- Research work, advantage to, Hodgson ... 13,328

- Retirement, age, Dixon 4007-11; Keene 5001.

- Senior medical officer for medical duties, suggestion, Parker ... 11,374-82, 11,385-95, 11,411-26, 11,801

Medical Superintendents—cont.

- subsequent Service under Board of Control, should count for pension, Hodgson ... 13,477
 Signing of certificates by, opinions re, Devine 4534-5; Lomax 12,822.
 Specialist advocated as, Lomax ... 12,573, 12,581
 Strain of work, Hodgson ... 13,328
 Surprise visits by, impossibility, Mr. Y. ... 20,678
 Visits to more advanced institutions or to research body, suggestion, Parker ... 11,355, 11,357

Medical Treatment, see under Care and Treatment.Medico-Psychological Association of Great Britain and Ireland:

- Evidence on behalf of, see Cole, Dr. R. H., M.D., F.R.C.P., etc. ... 16,599-17,287
 Certificate, see under Nursing Staff.
 Formation, objects, etc., Cole ... 16,602-5
 Relationship with General Nursing Council, Collins, Cole ... 16,613-9
 M.R.C.S., curriculum for, Baly ... 3000-9

Mental After-Care Association, see After-Care Association.Mental Board of Health:

- Approval of, Carswell ... 16,592
 Suggestion, Gibson ... 12,425-7
 Suggestion, Menzies ... 17,031

Mental Defectives:

- Accommodation difficulty, Devine ... 4515
 Increase question, Devine ... 4516-7
 Transfer from Lunacy Act to Mental Deficiency Act, difficult, Devine ... 4514

Mental Deficiency Act:

- Amendment of, to include cases of adolescent mental disorder, question of, Fox, Tredgold 21,241-3, 21,246-9
 Certification under, of patient who could not be certified under Lunacy Acts, Baly ... 2928-9
 Class of persons dealt with, and distinction from class under lunacy law, Willis ... 8-12
 Juveniles should be dealt with under, rather than under Lunacy Acts, Lidbetter ... 1726-9
 Semi-charitable institutions under, Langdon-Down 13,524-6
 Visitation by justices under, Barnsley 1881-911, 1936-41

Mental Disease, new attitude towards, required, Langdon-Down ... 7811Mental Excitement, decrease of, and causes, Robertson ... 16,144-68Mental Hospitals:

- Acute block, separation from mental hospitals, suggestion, Mott, Lord, Cole ... 16,948-53, 16,962
 Admission, see that title.
 Admissions, 1923, Edwards ... 6330
 might be Allocated for special types of cases, if suggestions re treatment in general hospitals, etc., carried out, Craig ... 20,800-3
 Atmosphere of, Blood 12,181-4; Gibson 12,185-6.
 Care and treatment, see that title.
 Cases from workhouses, proportion, Macleod 875
 Chronic cases only in, arguments against, not agreed with, Craig ... 20,811-2
 Class of cases that should and should not be dealt with in, Lomax 12,528-56; Boyle 18,611-7, 18,622, 18,649; Mapother 18,843-5. 18,961-2 (see also under Clinics).
 Closer association with teaching institutions and universities advocated, Worth ... 17,344
 Comfort of patients, jurisdiction of Board of Control, Willis ... 667
 Consultative alienist, desirable if possible, Parker 11,383-4

Detention in, see that title.Discharge from, see that title.*80 per cent. of cases are in, Willis ... 60Executive officer, medical man as desirable, Lomax 12,570-5Government grant, proposal, Gibson ... 12,285-8HOSPITAL CASES:

- Larger section of hospitals should be devoted to, Lomax ... 12,534, 12,999-3000
 Practice re, and medical officer should continue to attend to own cases, Lomax... 12,609-10

Mental Hospitals—cont.

- Hospitalisation of, progress in Scotland, and importance of, Robertson ... 16,095-143, 16,197-205

INTERNAL ADMINISTRATION:

- Committees of inquiry, Willis ... 669-70 no Statutory powers to Board, and not needed, Willis ... 841, 842-3

MAINTENANCE CHARGE AND CHARGEABILITY:

- in Excess of 14s., approval of County Council required, Keene ... 4831-5 per Head, Willis ... 524
 Medical arrangements, jurisdiction of Board of Control, Willis ... 668

Medical Staff, see that title.Medical Superintendent, see that title.

- Number, Willis ... 89

- Number of cases in, 1st January, 1924, Willis 67

Nursing Staff, see that title.

- Nursing and treatment satisfactory on the whole, Devine ... 4504-6

Private patients, see that title.PUBLIC INTEREST IN, INCREASE:

- Desirable, Dixon ... 3811-24
 Doubtful, Parker ... 10,575-87

PUBLICITY:

- Increase desirable, Dixon 3811-24; Barham 7608-10.

- Value of, Devine ... 4354-5

Reception, see that title.

- Rules and regulations, statutory requirement, Willis ... 666

SIZE:

- 1,000 patients, sufficient, Lomax ... 12,515-7
 2,000 patients not excessive, Sidney 19,383-4, 19,400

- Large, not objected to where only chronic cases, Mapother ... 18,862-4

- Limitation desirable, Parker 11,366-8, 11,801

- Question, Barham 7505-6, 7531-3, 7668-9; Craig 20,974-7.

- Staff, duties of Visiting Committee re, Keene 4735-9

- Stigma should be removed from, Yellowlees 5719

- Structural alterations, procedure, Keene ... 4723-7

- attached to Towns and part of communal life preferable to large isolated institutions, Devine 4351-64, 4468

- Transfer of cases to Poor Law Institutions, see under Poor Law Institutions.

- Transfer of senile cases to workhouses, suggestion, Beard ... 19,418-52

Visitation, see that title.Voluntary Boarders, see that title.*Mental Hospitals Association:

- Faudel-Phillips* ... 5926-9

- Constitution, functions, etc., Taggart 13,005-19

- Evidence on behalf of, see Taggart, Alderman J. G., J.P., and Hodgson, Alderman Sir William 13,005-13,499

- Objects of, Hodgson ... 13,443

- Mental Medical Officer of Health, regional local authorities should have power to appoint, Carswell ... 16,593

Mental Treatment Bill:

- After-care expenditure by Local Authorities, provision approved, Sidney ... 19,280, 19,291-3

- Approved, Phillips ... 5872-3

- Approved in the main, Langdon-Down 8164; Sidney 19,006-7.

- Board of Control staff, proposed reduction, Parker 10,449-54.

- Clause 2, permissive power only, not sufficient, Cole, Lord ... 16,849-50

- Inspectors, criticism of clause, Hodgson ... 13,449, 13,451-64

- Medical training provisions approved, Mapother 18,979

- Principle approved by Association of Municipal Corporations, Beard ... 19,453, 19,554-6

- Principle approved but not certain details, Hodgson ... 13,358-61, 13,471

- Provisions approved, Barnsley ... 1951-60

Mental Treatment Bill—cont.

- Research, provisions re, see under Psychiatric research.
 Selection of medical practitioners for certification of voluntary patients, criticism, Hodgson 13,465-71
 Single care cases, omission from, Cole 16,857-62
 Visiting Committees, provisions re, see under Visiting Committees.
 Voluntary boarder and voluntary patient, distinction objected to, and "voluntary patient" advocated, Cole, etc. ... 16,851-6, 16,862-73

Metropolitan Asylums Board:

- Number of cases under, Willis 67; Francis 1410, 1414-7.
 Senile dementia cases now received by, without certificates, Lidbetter ... 1737-9

Middlesex Hospital:

- St. Luke's Clinic, particulars re, Gilmour 18,391-500
 Special ward for temporary cases, Craig ... 20,719

Moorcroft:

- Contact with outside world, Mr. H. 8645-60, 8952-60
Fees, Stilwell ... 9784-5, 9789-93
 Life at, Mr. H. 8393-549, 8561, 8771-92, 8801-6, 8935-51, 8992-9002, 9075-6; Craig 9251-62, 9279-300, 9473-6; Steele 9560-616; Stilwell 9716-69, 9793-926, 9931-40; Smith 9973-40.
 Death certificates, complaint re, Mr. H. ... 8691
 Medical treatment prescribed by patient, Mr. H. 8617-21
 Patients, sources of, Stilwell ... 9775-82
 Position of witness re, Craig 9476-86, 9540-3

Morningside Royal Hospital:

- Admission to, methods, Robertson ... 15,812-20
 Exercise, Robertson ... 16,111-3
 Medical staff, Robertson ... 16,081-5, 16,231
 Nursing staff, Robertson ... 16,042, 16,080
 Particulars re, Robertson 15,687-723, 16,069-71, 16,228-61

Munro, Dr.:

- Opinion re, Mr. H. ... 9950
 Surrender of licence, Mr. H. 8553-60, 8727-34; Sandhurst 18,009.

Napsbury Mental Hospital, weights on going in and coming out recorded, Lohjoit ... 5168-9National Association of Masters and Matrons of Poor Law Institutions:

- Evidence on behalf of, see Senior, Harold, and Usher, George ... 3174-3539
 Membership, Usher ... 3259-65
 Representative character of, Usher ... 3479-80
 National Association of Relieving Officers, evidence on behalf of, see Lidbetter, Ernest James 1474-1775

National Asylum Workers' Union:

- Administration, Gibson ... 11,869
 Branches, Gibson ... 11,864-8
 Conferences, etc., Gibson ... 11,863
 Evidence on behalf of, see Blood, Walter; Gibson, George; and Wiese, Maud ... 11,835-12,451
 Magazine, Gibson ... 11,871-6
 Membership, and proportion of workers represented by, Gibson ... 11,852-5
 Negotiations with London County Council Mental Hospitals Committee, Keene ... 4773-6
 Objects of, Gibson ... 11,861-2
 Officers' section, Gibson ... 11,856-8

National Council for Mental Hygiene: Fox 21,244

- Evidence on behalf of, see Buzzard, Dr. E. Farquhar, M.A., F.R.C.P., etc. 17,288-17,433
 Formation, objects, etc., Buzzard... 17,288-90

National Society for Lunacy Reform:

- Evidence on behalf of, see Parker, Robert Montgomery Birch ... 10,346-11,834
 Formation, membership and objects, etc., Parker 10,346-64, 10,376
 Statement on behalf of, 23rd day.

Naval and Military hospitals, number of cases in, 1st January, 1924, Willis ... 64, 67

- Neurasthenic cases, voluntary treatment, Salford Union Infirmary, Giles ... 3157-8
 Non-certification of certifiable patient, case of, Barr 7117-23

Non-Volitional cases:

see also under Clinics.

- should be Admissible to clinics, Mapother 18,814-8
 Admission on application by relative, friend or public official, with two medical recommendations, proposal, Willis ... 21,355-60, 21,377
 Admission for six months' period, with power of extension, proposal, Willis ... 21,368-70
 Certification not advocated necessarily, Boyle 18,727-8
 Detention question, Lord, Goodall 16,738-45; Cole 16,914-7
 Discharge from passive class, proposed power to Board of Control, Willis ... 21,362
 Institutions, inspection by Board of Control, proposal, Willis ... 21,361
 Institutions proposed for, Willis ... 21,350-4
 Medical report to Board of Control within seven days, proposal, Willis ... 21,361
 Method of dealing with, Sidney, Gardner 19,152-68
 Notification, proposal, Lord 16,758-9; Menzies 16,779; Worth 17,323; Willis 21,361.
 Position, Willis ... 21,263-7 proposed Procedure, Barr 7091-7; Robertson 15,892-3.
 Recovery of volition, proposed procedure, Willis 21,371-5
 Removal by petitioner, proposal, Willis, Macleod 21,363-7 becoming Resistant, proposed procedure, Willis 21,376
 Voluntary boarders becoming, see under Voluntary boarders.

Norfolk County Mental Hospital:

- Cases, statistics, Connell ... 4220-30
 Children in, Connell ... 4181-4
 Classification of cases, Connell ... 4117-28
 Conditions in, Connell ... 4081-2, 4090
 Correspondence, method of dealing with, Connell 4065-8
 Diet, Connell ... 4140-1
 Employment of patients, Connell ... 4045-8, 4191-2
 Maintenance rate, Connell ... 4138-9
 Number of cases, Connell ... 4080

NURSING STAFF:

- Age of, Connell ... 4195-8
 Hours of work, Connell ... 4199
 Number of, to number of patients, Connell 4175-7
 Two cases of dismissal for ill-treatment of patients, Connell ... 4165-7
 Source of patients, Connell ... 4152-3
 Visits by medical officers, Connell ... 4170-4

Notices, see under Care and Treatment.

Notification of Patients:

see also under Non-volitional Cases and Nursing Homes.

- to Board of Control, advocated, in place of certification, with increased inspection and visitation, Robertson ... 15,832-52, 15,879-82, 15,899
 some Form of, necessary in certain cases, Craig 20,818
 Frivolous and needless, greater safeguards against, desirable, Whitemore ... 3584-5

Nursing Homes:

see also Private Houses and Single Care.

- Control not advocated unless certified cases taken, Mapother ... 18,819-33
 Registration and supervision, suggestions, Buzzard 17,299-321, 17,430; Mapother 18,824-6; Craig 20,637, 20,909.

TREATMENT OF MENTAL CASES IN:

- Advocated, Mapother, Craig 18,868; 20,697, 20,912-4 should be Allowed subject to inspection, Edwards 6410-3

Nursing Homes—cont.TREATMENT OF MENTAL CASES IN—cont.

Certified cases should be received in homes approved by Board of Control, Willis 21,386
 Desired, difficulty and question of solution, Buzzard 17,299-322, 17,429-30; Worth 17,327-32; Miller 17,428.
 Inspection of home by Board of Control, proposal, Willis ... 21,318-27
 Notification to Board of Control, proposal for, in certain cases, Willis, Macleod, Bond 21,274-84, 21,295, 21,303-7
 Suggestion, Willis, etc. ... 21,268-307 not Suitable, Barr ... 7163-5

Nursing Staff:ACCOMMODATION:

Claybury, Barham ... 7295-300
 Living out, desirable, Gibson 12,357, 12,359-61
 York, The Retreat, Yellowlees ... 5497
 Age, Connell ... 4195-8
 Better class advocated, Miss C. ... 14,528-37
 Career favourable compared with general nursing, Phillips ... 5916
 subsequent Careers, Yellowlees ... 5502-4
 Certificates, other qualifications more important, Lomax ... 12,668-9

CHARGE NURSE:

Duties, Gibson ... 11,911-22, 12,087
 Transfer to another institution, difficulty, Gibson 12,044-6 no Complaint of, Miss C. ... 14,498-9
 Conditions of service, improvement desirable, Dixon 3848-55; Lomax 12,674.
 no Difficulty experienced, Giles ... 3134
 Difficulty of obtaining, Keene ... 4951-2

DISABLEMENT FROM DISEASE:

present Procedure, Gibson 12,153-4, 12,163-74
 Special diseases should be scheduled as industrial diseases under Workmen's Compensation Act, Gibson ... 12,153-74
 Dismissal, should be in power of Committee and not of Medical Superintendent, Gibson 12,328-44
 EXAMINATIONS: Gibson 11,942-67, 12,442-6, 12,450-1; Wiese 11,965.

Desirable type of women excluded by, Gardner

19,359-66

Failure to pass final examination, procedure on, Gibson ... 11,903-9

Medico-Psychological: Gibson 11,951, 11,965-6 too Difficult, Mott ... 17,168-71, 17,184

Drawing up of scheme, Hodgson 13,479-80

Interest of nurses in lectures, Cole ... 17,188

Syllabus, not too difficult, Hodgson ... 13,481-2

same Syllabus adopted by General Nursing Council, Collins ... 17,190

Working of, in practice, Collins 17,184-92

Method of holding, criticism, Lomax 12,678-80; Gibson 12,681-2.

Standard too difficult, Lomax ... 12,668, 12,675

FEMALE:

Accommodation, Miss H. ... 19,581-3

Accommodation and suggested improvement, Gibson, Wiese ... 12,357-8

16 too young, Mr. P. ... 14,339-40

Bad class of, and use of bad language, Miss H.

19,577, 19,592, 19,600-12, 19,649

Complaint of, Mrs. G. ... 20,585

Difficulty of getting, Baly 2958-71; Devine 4471;

Keene 4942, 4951; Gardner 19,355, 19,359-62;

Sidney 19,367.

Employment in male wards:

Abroad, Goodall ... 17,072

Advantages of, Hodgson, Taggart 13,484-91;

Robertson 16,047, 16,060, 16,089-94.

Advocated, Parker 11,455-6; Marr 15,688;

Robertson 16,061-4; Goodall, Menzies 17,063-

87; Mapother 18,904-9.

All cases not suitable for, Menzies ... 17,085

Approved, Lomax... 12,993-5

Approved with certain limitations, Barham

7267-71, 7624-5

Camberwell House, Edwards 6414-20, 6457-62;

Gibson 12,135-7.

Nursing Staff—cont.FEMALE—cont.

Employment in male wards—cont.

Discretion to medical superintendent advocated, Lord ... 17,087-9 in London County Council hospitals, under consideration, Sidney ... 19,354

Male nurses will lose training necessary for registration, Wiese ... 12,175

Memorial from asylum medical officers to Board of Control, Robertson... 16,072

Objections to, Gibson, Wiese ... 12,100-52

Objections to, reply to, Robertson ... 16,056-9 in Practice, Comrie, 16,333-5, 16,352-4; Hodgson, Taggart 13,484-8; Goodall 17,072; Gilmour 18,490-3; Mapother 18,905-9.

Resignations awaited, no men displaced by, Robertson ... 16,086-8

Results not satisfactory, Gibson 12,143-52

in Scotland, Marr, Rose 15,669-72; Robertson

16,036-68, 16,075-9, 16,086-90.

Spreading of phthisical cases throughout institution owing to, Gibson ... 12,137, 12,152

Success of, Goodall ... 17,067-71, 17,082-4

Trade Union attitude, Robertson 16,073-7;

Goodall 17,073-9.

Fluctuations, Dixon 3930-3; Barham 7218, 7272-

5; Gibson, Wiese 11,975-81, 12,080-3;

Mapother 18,903.

Hospital training, lack of, and need for, Miss H. ... 19,612, 19,666

Illiteracy of, Miss C. ... 14,528-32

Personal experience as nurse, Miss H. 19,567-810

Recruiting method and difficulty, Barham 7223-7

Thefts by, Miss H. ... 19,682-3

Unsatisfactory prospects, Gibson, Wiese 11,990-3 large Floating population, Lomax ... 12,670-2

FOOD:

Badness of, Miss H. ... 19,701

Charge for meals even if not had, Miss H.

19,704-15

and Comparison with that of patients, Gibson

12,035-7

Good type, difficulty of obtaining, Gibson 12,406

HOURS OF WORK: Connell 4199; Devine 4470;

Keene 4994-6; Crosland, Yellowless 5482-9, 5501;

Chubb 6821-2; Barham 7204, 7325-30; Sidney

19,368.

Long hours in some cases, Gibson ... 12,092-5

Three-shift system and desirability of, Gibson,

Wiese 11,888, 11,891-4, 12,055, 12,068-9, 12,075-

97, 12,348-50, 12,434-9.

Ill-treatment by, see under Care and Treatment.

Increase needed, Parker 11,801; Mr. L. 20,366.

Inefficiency, Mrs. M. 13,870-1, 13,876-8.

in Infirmarys and Asylums, comparison, Leach

6101-10

INTERCHANGEABILITY WITH GENERAL HOSPITALS:

not Likely to be successful, Edwards ... 6441-5

Question of, Dixon 3856-8; Yellowlees 5428-32,

5445, 5449-57, 5467-8; Barham 7286-93, 7553.

Interest in patients, Blood, Gibson, Wiese 12,194-6

Key chains, abolition advocated, Gibson 12,253-4,

12,259; Wiese 12,254-8.

Leave, Gibson, Wiese 12,092-9.

should be Made a Vocation, Barham ... 7529

MALE:

Conditions more satisfactory than on female side, Gibson 11,984-90.

14 hours day, Mr. W. ... 20,303

Inexperienced, Mr. O. ... 20,222

Dr. Lomax's testimony to, quoted, Gibson

12,226

Personal experience as attendant, Mr. M.

19,812-20,038

more Satisfactory when in charge of sister,

Lambeth Infirmary, Baly ... 2988-96

Special:

Extra pay should be received by, Mr. M.

19,827, 19,835-44

Unable always to give whole attention to patient, Mr. M. ... 19,844

Thefts of patients' food by, Mr. M. 19,853-84

Nursing Staff—cont.MALE—cont.

20-30 patients in charge of one attendant while other attendants in playing fields, Mr. M. 19,931-47

Type of, complaint re, Mr. P. ... 14,340-8

Understaffing, Mr. O. ... 20,150-2

Matrons, general hospital training, desirable, Keene 4948-51.

MEDICO-PSYCHOLOGICAL CERTIFICATE:

Incentive to obtain, Hodgson ... 13,482-3

Number of awards, Gibson 11,968-9; Cole 16,606.

Requirements and system of certification and comparison with those of General Nursing Council, and question of fusion, Collins 16,608-18; Cole 16,619-20.

National Asylum Workers' Union, negotiations between London County Council Mental Hospitals Committee and, Keene ... 4773-6

Night, inadequacy of, and assistance by witness, Mrs. M. ... 13,943-5

One nurse in charge of four wards for 9-10 duty, Miss H. ... 19,715-52, 19,800-6

Patience of, under provocation, Lovsey ... 5273-4

Periods of service of male and female, Gibson 11,971-2, 11,980

POOR LAW INFIRMARIES:

Daily worker, Mrs. M. ... 13,729, 13,789-93

Extra work paid for, Southampton, Senior 3500-1

25 should be minimum age, Senior ... 3499

Training, proposal, Senior ... 3466

Prevention of discharge by, denial, Blood, Gibson 12,202-9

Private nursing, prospects, Gibson 12,008-19, 12,021-2, 12,023-6; Wiese 12,019-21, 12,023.

PROBATIONERS:

Charge of suicide cases at 18, Gibson ... 12,413-4

Contract to stay for certain period advocated, Lomax ... 12,672

Duties, pay, &c., Senior 3488-501; Gibson 11,884-92

Duties and training after first three months, Gibson ... 11,895-903

Good class of, important, and question of inducements, Gibson ... 11,923-9

Hours, Gibson ... 11,887-94

Monthly contracts generally, Gibson ... 11,880-3

Previous experience very rare, Gibson ... 11,877-9

Qualifications required, criticism, Miss H. 19,575-7

Promotion prospects, London County Council mental hospitals, Keene ... 4770-2 4781

Proportion to patients, Connell 4175-7; Yellowlees 5720-1; Barham 7204-7.

Qualifications desirable, Barham ... 7255-64

Receiving ward, number of nurses and patients, Mrs. M. ... 13,949-50

Recruitment, more supervision over character of nurses engaged needed, Lomax ... 12,672

Registration by General Nursing Council, Wiese, Gibson ... 12,175-80

REMUNERATION: Baly 2972-6; Senior 3222-4, 3490-1, 3498; Usher 3246-8; Dixon 3929; Keene 4764-81, 4944-6, 4990-3, 4997-5001; Edwards 6469; Chubb 6653-6.

no Emoluments generally nowadays, Gibson 12,404-5

Excessive for probationers and insufficient for seniors, Dixon ... 3849-50

Fixed salary with deduction for services given by authorities advocated, Gibson 12,028-39

no General standard, Gibson ... 12,001

Increase desirable for obtaining certificate, Gibson ... 11,930 of Male charge nurse, recommendation of Departmental Committee inadequate, Gibson 12,039-44

Recommendations, Gibson ... 12,047-53

by Salary and emoluments, objection to system, Gibson ... 12,027-39 of Uncertified staff, opinion re, Gibson 11,930-1, 12,351-2

Nursing Staff—cont.RETIREMENT:

Age of, Keene ... 5002-7 at 55, many female nurses break down before, Gibson ... 12,345-7

Status, improvement advocated, Parker 11,433, 11,451, 11,710

Subsequent experience in general hospitals, difficulty, Barham ... 7279-93

TRAINING:

Bethlem, Phillips ... 5915, 5918

Claybury, Barham ... 7213-22, 7234-9, 7294

Examinations, see that title above.

General hospital experience:

Desirable, Phillips 5917-8; Chubb 6659-63.

Desirable for certain number, Yellowlees 5442-4, 5454-6, 5470 not Desirable, Edwards ... 6441

Importance of, Leach ... 6101-6, 6280

Importance of, Gibson ... 11,932

Improvement, Gibson ... 11,924

Inefficient in some institutions, Gibson 11,907, 11,937-41

Lectures to, Dixon ... 3859

Maudsley Hospital, Mapother ... 18,910, 18,918

at the Retreat, York, Yellowlees 5424-70, 5491-500

Standards should not necessarily be enforced on existing staff, Lewis ... 4667-72

Subsequent training in general hospital, difficulty of obtaining, Wiese 11,994-7; Gibson 11,994-12,000

Tribute to, Leach ... 6104

Uncertificated, no new entries of, should be allowed, Gibson ... 12,353-4

Understaffing, Blood ... 12,198-9, 12,201

Unsympathetic, Mrs. M. ... 13,864-78

Untrained, Miss B. ... 14,896

Well qualified and well selected, importance of, Dixon ... 3846-55

Observation Hospitals, see Reception Houses.

Observation Period:

Cure during, possibility of, Walden 2071, 2076

Detention order would be necessary, Barnsley 1870-1 power of Detention during, would be necessary, Baly 2813-8; Giles 3090, 3100-9, 3160.

Discharge during, at any time, on Justices' order, advocated, Barnsley ... 1872-5

Legal restraint necessary during, Lomax ... 12,866

Longer than 14 days, Board of Control sanction should be required, as safeguard, Whitemore 3581-4, 3598

Need for, Lidbetter 1670-2, 1707-8; Walden 2065-6;

Lord 2248-51, 2283, 2289; Baly 2605, 2804-8;

Giles 3088-92, 3099, 3110-1, 3117; Whitemore 3578-84;

Broome Giles 3632-4; Faudel-Phillips 5957-8;

Probert 5993-5, 5997; Flint 6224-9;

Chubb 6731-9, 6753-68; Barr 7080; Langdon-Down 7839-44;

Phillips 10,308-11; Parker 10,479-82;

Mapother 18,926-32, 18,936-7.

PRIVATE CASES:

Desirable, and proposal re, Whitemore 3578-84; Broome Giles 3632-4.

Place of, question of, Broome Giles ... 3637-47

Securing of, by use of Section 24 in addition to Section 20, Lidbetter ... 1613-7, 1655-6, 1662-3

Temporary observation order, suggestion, Phillips 5880-95, 5909-12

WARDS ATTACHED TO GENERAL HOSPITALS:

Advantages of, Carswell 16,538, 16,574-6, 16,579-83

Advocated, Devine 4292-6; Phillips 5889-91.

Application to England, question of possibility, Carswell ... 16,596-7

Detention:

Compulsory power not advocated, Carswell 16,558-72

Position re, Carswell ... 16,545-59

Observation Period—cont.WARDS ATTACHED TO GENERAL HOSPITALS—cont.

Scotland, system, Marr, Rose 15,251-62, 15,269, 15,611-2; Carswell 16,474-83, 16,515-23, 16,535, 16,545-59, 16,574-91.

Treatment during, desirable, Lidbetter 1675-6, 1680; Giles 3170.

would be Useful for deciding whether case to be dealt with under Mental Deficiency or Lunacy Acts, Lidbetter ... 1732-4

Occupation, see under Care and Treatment.

Old Age Pensions:

Cessation during residence in asylum and objection to, Hildyard ... 18,109-18 of Patients in institutions, practice re, and anomaly in connection with, Francis 21,530-52

Overcrowding, Mental disorders a result, Baly 2879

Oxford University, clinical training difficulty, Goodall ... 17,164-5

Padded rooms, see under Care and Treatment.

Paranoiac patients:

Case of, Dixon ... 3879-904, 3923, 3937-40

Difficulty in connection with, Sandhurst 17,917-20

Parliament, questions in, Brock ... 1182-6

Parochial Asylum, Greenock, Rose 15,070-2, 17,076, 15,110; Marr 15,073-5.

Parole:

Approval of system, Mr. P. ... 14,264-72

Divergent practice re, Parker ... 11,774-7

Increased use of, advocated, Mr. L. 20,348-51, 20,414

Scotland, Robertson ... 16,118

Undertaking required not to post letters, Mr. L. 20,401A-3

Pass system, Scotland, Marr ... 15,396-9

Pauper:

Definition, and stigma question, Macleod 269-72; Willis 272-3.

Statutory definition, Lidbetter ... 1490

Stigma attaching to term, and question of remedy, Willis 58; Francis 1419-39; Usher 3458; Connell 4090; Langdon-Down 7905-8; Masterman 8205-7.

Temporary treatment of self-supporting person as, Macleod etc. 734-47; Francis 1419-39; Propert 5998-6025; Leach 6081-3, 6183-7, 6193.

Pauper Lunatics, number, 1st January, 1924, and distribution among different classes of institution, etc., Francis ... 1376-417

Pauperisation element, elimination advocated as far as possible and suggestions re, Lomax 12,944-6; Taggart 13,028-130; Hodgson 13,302-3; Cole, Lord, Menzies 16,967-87, 16,990-1.

Peckham House, After care, Sandhurst ... 18,017

Penshurst, Cassel Hospital, Craig 20,735-8, 20,974-6

Peritane House, see Winchelsea.

Persons incapable of looking after themselves, dealt with under Lunacy Act for want of other machinery, Lambeth, but procedure under Public Health Act preferable, Baly 2542-69, 2834-40.

Petition, see under Private under Certification.

Phipps Institute, Baltimore, Mott 17,149; Boyle, 18,567-70.

Plans of Buildings, see under Buildings.

Pneumonia, delirious, legal position, re restraint, Comrie ... 16,288-94

Police Stations:

See also under Interview with patient under Justice of the Peace.

Taking of mental cases to, not desirable, Baly 2922-4

Poor Law:

Mental health should be dissociated from, Devine 4439; Lewis 4579, 4636.

OUT-DOOR RELIEF FOR NON-CERTIFIED INSANE:

Number of patients in receipt of, 1st January, 1924, Willis ... 67, 809-11

System, Willis, Macleod, Bond ... 626, 809-17

Persons in receipt of relief, number, 1st January, 1924, and number insane or mentally defective, Francis ... 1374-9

Poor Law—cont.

Prejudice against, decreasing, and poor law relief becoming popular, Propert ... 6002-5, 6023-4

Stigma not agreed with, Ford ... 6212

Stigma attaching to, Cole, Mott ... 16,960-2

Stigma of, and elimination desired, Lobjoit 5128, 5142-9

Stigma less than if patients taken direct to Asylum, Propert ... 5998

Transfer of lunacy administration from, means of, etc., Francis ... 21,403-29, 21,562

Poor Law Institutions:ACCOMMODATION, ETC.:

Improvement, means of, Francis... 21,553-69

Relation of Board of Control to, Francis 21,510-2, 21,525-9, 21,565

Removal of chronic cases to workhouses would assist, Lidbetter ... 1710-1

Satisfactory on the whole, but certain improvements desirable, and position re, Francis 21,553-69

Admission of cases to, procedure, Macleod, Bond 876-82; Lidbetter 1485-520.

Buildings, power of Ministry of Health re, Francis 1249-52

CASES IN:

Acute cases, advantages of retention in workhouse, and provision for, Francis ... 1449-52

Board of Control's powers and duties re, Macleod, Willis ... 708, 711, 713-6, 891-2

Board of Control not always aware of, Willis 874; Macleod 874.

Classes of, Francis ... 1275-9, 21,403-19

two Classes, separate accommodation in some cases, Francis ... 1442-6

Classification in, Hill ... 18,386-9

no Continuation report or certificate, Macleod 711

Correspondence, position re, Willis 718; Francis 1286-97

Number of, 1st January, 1924, Willis ... 67

Separate accommodation and special staff in some institutions only, Francis ... 1266-82

Clinics attached to, not advocated, Goodall 16,055

Detention, wrongful, see that title.

Discharge from, see that title.

Experience in, Mrs. M. 13,765-824; Mr. P. 14,210.

Ill-treatment, see that title.

Indefinite detention in, after reception order, illegal, Lidbetter ... 1712-6

Insane persons in, cases of failure to certify, Bond 858

Mental wards, separate from Infirmary in some cases, Senior, Usher ... 3524-8

Mixing up of patients, Mrs. M. 13,729-30, 13,777-82, 13,807-8, 13,814-7

Nursing Staff, see that title.

Objection to detention in, Lomax ... 12,946

OBSERVATION WARDS:

Fulham, Propert ... 5998, 6010-3, 6036

Southampton, and more classification desirable, Senior ... 3193-7, 3206-15

OFFICERS:

Dismissal, power of Minister of Health, Francis 1253-5

Ministry of Health jurisdiction, extent of, Francis ... 1458-65

Premature superannuation if not up to work, power of, Francis ... 1453-7

Qualifications, Francis ... 1471

PERMANENT DETENTION IN:

Class of patients, Southampton, Senior 3185-91

Justices' power to order, under Section 24, Barnsley ... 1813-7

Justices' order and two medical certificates required, Willis 693-5, 696-8, 700; Macleod 698-700.

Periodical revision of cases by rota of justices, proposal, Senior, Usher 3382-421, 3486-7, 3536, 3539

Provision re, Willis ... 693-5

Poor Law Institutions—cont.

- "Poor Law Institution," wording should be used instead of Workhouse, Usher ... 3458
- Private patients passing through, to mental hospital, Cardiff, Sanders ... 2443-7
- Private patients taken to, in emergency, Willis, 633-4
- Reconstitution for reception of non-certified patients would be approved, Ford ... 6292-3
- Regulations, Francis ... 1256-61
- Sending of patients to asylum or, largely accidental and need for discrimination, Willis 701-8, 709-10, 719-21

Senile dementia cases in, see that title.

- Separate buildings desirable, Lomax ... 12,946
- Stage not passed through in Scotland, admission direct to asylum, Rose ... 15,247-50, 15,262-9

TEMPORARY DETENTION IN:3 days:

- Cases rarely disposed of during, Senior 3325, 3331-4
- Date on which order made should not count, Senior ... 3379-81
- Difficulties in connection with Section 20, and procedure under Section 24 in addition, but need for amendment, Lidbetter ... 1608-25
- Discharge during:
- on Justices' order, Lidbetter 1690, 1701-3
 - without Magistrates' order, Giles 3046-9
 - by Master, question of, Lidbetter 1696-701
 - Possibility and extent, Lidbetter ... 1685-91
- in Many cases people should not be sent to workhouse, Broome Giles ... 3709-10
- Patient not seen by doctor before removal to workhouse, Lidbetter ... 1766-71
- Refusal of accommodation, power under Section 20, and consequent difficulties, Lidbetter 1626-43
- Remand, no power of, and need for, Proper 5992-5, 5997
- Results of cases, Salford Union Infirmary, Giles 3038-65, 3079-85, 3112-3, 3119-26, 3151-3
- 14 days' detention: Barnsley 1796-803; Lord 2242-7.

Adjournment, power of, needed, Whitemore

3589

- Discharge during, large number of cases, Senior ... 3199-202
- little Experience of, in Birmingham, Barnsley 1799, 1925, 1929

Increase to 28 days, suggestions, Giles 3139-44, 3171-2; Senior, Usher 3202-5, 3234-7, 3311-5, 3319, 3364-71, 3504-5.

Difficulties in connection with, Baly 2704-17; Senior, Usher 3319-34, 3336-72.

Lapse of order during, or at end of, if patient recovered, Baly ... 2792-803, 2894-6

Magistrate should visit institution and see patient before making order, Senior 3319

Methods of securing, Baly, 2530, 2631-2, 2702-20, 2846-8, 2947-53; Senior 3319-30, 3336-63; Usher 3359-61.

Power to detain cases for longer period desirable, Baly ... 2880

Recertification under Section 24, Baly 2792-803

not Sufficient in all cases, but if lengthened means of treatment would be necessary, Baly 2820-5, 2883

Suspension not resorted to, Salford Union Infirmary, but permanent order made, Giles 3031-7

Suspension not resorted to at Southampton, Senior ... 3328

Treatment during, no facilities, Southampton, Senior ... 3208-11

Accommodation should be separate from that for permanent detention cases, Giles ... 3144-9

Admission to asylums direct from homes, preferable, Lewis ... 4645

Advantage of, Leach ... 6096-101

Certification prevented by, in some cases, Devine 4281

Poor Law Institutions—cont.TEMPORARY DETENTION IN—cont.

must Continue for certain class, Parker 10,616-41

Disadvantageous to prospects of recovery, Devine 4281-91, 4296

Discharges during, Lidbetter 1669-71, 1677-84

50 per cent. of cases cured during, Hartlepool

Poor Law Institution, Usher ... 3235-6

Need for system, question of, Bond ... 883-5

Objection to, Sidney 19,249-50, 19,252; Gardner 19,250-2.

without Order, desirable in some cases, Senior 3464

Order for extended observation in, question of, Sidney ... 19,268-9, 19,275-7 certain Poor Law Institutions unsuited for, and proposed remedy, Usher 3281-310, 3481-3, 3509, 3520; Senior 3510.

one Poor Law Institution should be specially selected and equipped for, in each district, Usher, Senior 3281-310, 3314-5, 3481-5, 3509-10, 3517-22, 3537-9

Portsmouth system, Devine ... 4277-91

no Provision for, in Act, and method of securing, Lidbetter ... 1655-84 proper Reception houses advocated instead, Lidbetter, 1742-51, 1772; Walden, 2066-73.

Relieving officer should have power to effect, at any time, without waiting for justices' order, Lidbetter ... 1650-4

Removal to asylum by relieving officer, Lidbetter 1549-51

Separate ward desirable, Devine ... 4283

Sections of Act dealing with, Willis, Macleod 685-92

Tying down in bed, Mr. O. ... 20,055-9

Transfer of cases from Asylums: Willis 700; Francis 1236-45.

Desire of patients for, in some cases, Leach 6143, 6166-71; Ford 6198.

Increase advocated, Flint ... 6239-41

Lancashire, position re, Leach 6147-50, 6158-61

Sections 25 and 26 might be made greater use of, Leach ... 6143-71

Senile cases, suggestion, Beard ... 19,418-52

Transfer of cases to mental hospitals from, power of, Macleod ... 708

Transfer of premises to asylum accommodation, possible means of, etc., Francis 21,420-47, 21,513-29, 21,562

Use of buildings as clinics, suggestion, Cole 16,958-9 might be Used as clearing houses if chronic cases removed to mental hospitals, Craig 20,809-10

Visitation, see that title.

Poorhouses, Lunatic Wards, Scotland:

Admission system, Rose 15,426; Marr 15,427-31, 15,441-2, 15,451-65.

DETENTION IN:

Authority of Board of Control required, Marr 15,432; Rose 15,432-4.

Legal power, question of, Marr 15,445-8, 15,458

Discharge system, Marr ... 15,466

Inspection by Board of Control, Marr ... 15,439

Licensing by Board of Control annually, Marr 15,422

Relationship of Board of Control with Poor Law authorities, Rose ... 15,674-6

Satisfactory for certain type of patient, Marr 15,467-8

Sending of cases to asylum or, decision as to, Marr, Rose ... 15,436-40

Statistics, Rose ... 15,076-80

Transfer of cases to, from asylums, Marr... 15,435, 15,465, 15,470-1

Portsmouth Borough Mental Hospital:

Accommodation and number of patients, Devine 4249-56, 4526-7

all Cases taken first to Infirmary, Devine 4277-91

Children in, Devine ... 4472

Maintenance rate, Devine ... 4289, 4518-9

Medical staff, Devine ... 4520-1

Portsmouth Borough Mental Hospital—cont.

Nursing staff, Devine ...	4468-71
Overcrowded, Devine ...	4365-6
Private cases, Devine ...	4522-5, 4536-9
Readmissions, Devine ...	4553-4
Reception of new cases, classification and accommodation, Devine ...	4297-332
Recovery rate, Devine ...	4551-2
Type of cases, and few could be removed to Poor Law Institution, Devine ...	4367-72
Visiting days, Devine ...	4496-7

Prestwich Asylum, use of croton oil, Parker ...	11539-50
Prisons, mental cases in, Boyle ...	18,652-6, 18,661-5
Private Asylums, see Licensed Houses.
Private Asylums, Scotland, Rose, Marr ...	15,066-9, 15,109, 15,114-5, 15,118

Private Houses:

See also Nursing Homes and Single Care.

Freedom to take in patients without supervision advocated, except in case of certified patients, Boyle ...	18,682-93, 18,706, 18,719, 18,740-50, 18,753-4
Scotland, system, Devine ...	4389, 4546-7; Marr, Rose 15,083, 15,118, 15,605-10, 15,614-7, 15,619-22, 15,624; Robertson 15,936-16,035.

Private Patients:

Accommodation, see that title.

Privileges for which payments made, not received, case of, Mr. M. ...	18,845-52 number of, 1st January, 1924, and number of paupers, Bond ...	849
Privileges, leaflet explaining, for relatives and patients, worth consideration, Rose ...	15,291; Marr 15,301-2.

Probation:

Interview by whole Visiting Committee before, objection to, Broome Giles ...	3649-50
Scotland, Marr ...	15,396
Propaganda work, for education of public re mental disease, suggestion, Beard ...	19,459-66

Property:ADMINISTRATION OF:

County Court jurisdiction over small estates, suggestion, Hildyard ...	18,128, 18,150, 18,168, 18,196-8
various Methods of, Hildyard ...	18,143-66
Patients under Section 116 (1) (d):
Difficulties in connection with, where receiver appointed, Sandhurst ...	17,816-9
Increase in number owing to Harnett case, Sandhurst ...	17,820-1
Post office jurisdiction, drawbacks of, and question of alternative, Hildyard ...	18,154-66
in Provisional Order cases, Craig ...	20,889-95
System, Willis, Macleod ...	611-5
many Cases not in Chancery which should be, Schuster ...	1056-61
Control of, without finding person to be a lunatic, Willis ...	777-8
Notification to Master in Lunacy Department, suggestion re , Hildyard ...	18,057, 18,170-95

RECEIVERSHIPS:

Administration of estate, procedure, Hildyard ...	18,063-81
Appointment of receivers in all cases, question of, Hildyard ...	18,057-62, 18,119
Costs, Hildyard ...	18,119-42
Persons appointed, Hildyard ...	18,097-100
Termination, procedure, Hildyard ...	18,218-30
Relieving officers' powers re , Lidbetter ...	1601, 1604-6
of Voluntary patients, administration question, Hildyard ...	18,189-94, 18,199-204
Prosecutions for misdemeanour under Act, power of Minister of Health to direct, Brock ...	1109-10

Provisional Orders:

Advantage of, from public point of view, doubted, Boyle ...	18,618, 18,627-8, 18,675-7, 18,726
Certification after expiry, proposed procedure before Justice of the Peace, Cole, Lord, Menzies ...	16,888-94, 16,907-13, 16,925
Period, question of, Cole, Lord ...	16,927-30
Proposal approved, Parker ...	10,861-3
Stigma, question of, Cole ...	16931-2; Craig 20,896.

Provisional Orders—cont.

Suggestions for, Lewis ...	4584-5; Chubb 6724-30; Langdon-Down 7943; Parker 10,483-5; Robertson 15,936; Menzies, Lord, Goodall, Cole 16,780-99, 16,877-87, 16,895-906, 16,919-24, 17,009; Worth 17,390-3; Mapother 18,926-32, 18,936-7; Sidney 19,168; Craig 20,697, 20,861-4, 20,876, 20,885, 20,888-96; Willis, Macleod 21,378-85, 21,387-400.
Psychological medicine, reluctance of doctors to take up owing to legal difficulties, Craig ...	20,697, 20,698-700

Psychiatric Research:

Backwardness of, compared with other research, Golla ...	21,035, 21,407
Birmingham, Mott ...	17,146, 17,152, 17,176-7
Central laboratory in association with University psychiatric clinic advocated, Goodall ...	17,164
Central laboratory in connection with University for group of asylums, scheme, Mott ...	17,146, 17,152-4, 17,172-7, 17,183, 17,194-5
Comparison with foreign countries, Golla ...	21,086-91
Control of, by Board of Control, not desirable, Mott ...	17,182
Differentiation of functions between asylum laboratory and, Mott ...	17,153-4
Facilities for pathological research at individual mental hospitals and central laboratories advocated, Golla ...	21,004-8, 21,050-9, 21,095
Financial assistance, need for, Mott ...	17,146-9
Grants by Local Authorities would be approved if under some Central Authority, Golla ...	21,075
Importance of, Mapother ...	18,979-88; Golla 21,035-40, 21,076-7, 21,093-4
Investigation of cases by ordinary medical officer, importance of, Golla ...	21,033-4
in Laboratories associated with central school and university desirable, Mapother ...	18,986
Laboratories, expense of fitting up, Golla ...	21,061
Lines on which desirable, Mapother ...	18,981-2
Local authorities' position re , and suggestion, Mott ...	17,138-40; Goodall 17,163-4; Cole 17,287.
under London County Council, Golla ...	21,008-46, 21,051, 21,062-74
Maudsley Hospital, Mott ...	17,173-4, 17,195;
Mapother ...	18,976-7, 18,984; Golla 21,009-46, 21,062-74.
in Provinces, Golla ...	21060, 21,079-82
present Provision for, Mott, Collins ...	17,146, 17,155-8
Provisions in Mental Treatment Bill:
Approved, Mapother ...	18,979
Reply to criticisms, Mott ...	17,179-83
Scheme for, Mott ...	17,138-54, 17,172-7, 17,183, 17,194-5
Three months' seconding of men from mental hospitals to Maudsley Hospital, Golla ...	21,015, 21,041-6, 21,062-4
Public Education of, important, Devine ...	4423-30
Public Health Authority, substitution for Poor Law Authority, desirable, Carswell ...	16,592-3
Public Prosecutions, Director of, powers and functions, Bodkin ...	17,716-21
Puerperal Cases:
Accommodation in after-care homes not in asylums advocated, Hill ...	18,272, 18,291-4
should not be Certified, Mrs. G. ...	20,576
Punishment, see under Care and Treatment.
Queen Adelaide Fund, Keene ...	5008; Lobjoit 5150; Worth 17,243-3.
Readmissions, percentages, Keene ...	4800-1, 5018-30
Receiving Rooms, Scotland, Robertson ...	16,206
Reception:
OF NEW CASES:
Classification and accommodation, Connell ...	4117-28; Devine 4297-332.
Examination:
Complaint re , Mrs. M. ...	13,925-38, 14,030; Miss H. , 19,584-9, 19,594-6.
System, Bond ...	845-8; Baly 2479-82, 2488-93, 2570-83, 2594-7, 2616-7, 2864-6, 2889-90, Dixon 3785-9.

Reception—cont.OF NEW CASES—cont.

- Frightening effect of official atmosphere, Mrs. M. 13,857-63
- Procedure on, Bond ... 845-8
- Symptoms described on certificate not present, cases of, Dixon ... 3790-9, 4023-5
- Pauper, without certificates prior to 1811, Edwards 6318
- Personal experience, Mrs. M. 13,832-43; Mr. O. 20,082-97.
- WARDS: Connell 4117; Devine 4297-326.
- Desirability of, Dixon ... 3837-8
- Difficulty, Yellowlees ... 5739
- Injurious effect of association with violent cases, Mrs. M. ... 13,844-56, 13,939-47
- more Single rooms desirable, Craig ... 20,952-9

Reception Houses (Observation Hospitals):

- Advocated in co-operation with clinics in place of present observation wards, and scheme, Mapother 18,846-52, 18,923-42, 18,945-8, 18,959-60, 18,963, 18,991

- Attachment to asylums advocated, Lomax 12,861-5
- Attached to general hospitals, advantages and disadvantages, Lomax ... 12,861
- Attached to general hospitals or mental hospitals, question of, Barham ... 7490-8
- should be under Board of Control, Walden 2093
- Desirable in some cases, but not needed at Cardiff, Sanders ... 2424-5

DETENTION, POWERS OF:

- for Certain period advocated, Mapother 18,926-37
- would be Necessary, Gardner ... 19,272
- Local Authorities should be responsible, with central supervision by Board of Control, Mapother ... 18,969-70
- London County Council scheme, Sidney 19,248, 19,254-67
- Need for, and proposals, Lidbetter 1742-51, 1772; Barnsley 1834-80; Walden 2066-81; Lobjoit 5125-7; Langdon-Down, Edwards 8178-89; Sidney, Gardner 19,248-56.
- Number required, question of, Walden ... 2173-7
- Poor Law institutions not the most suitable for, Giles ... 3161-70
- good Proportion of cases would go to, Walden 2170-1

- would Relieve pressure on asylums, Walden 2083
- Sending of patient to, should be at discretion of justice, Barnsley ... 1850
- Special institutions for acute recoverable cases, suggestion, Mapother ... 18,949-52
- Value of, Barnsley 1951-60; Walden 2172.
- Visitation by justices, proposal, Walden... 2078-9
- Voluntary resort to, should be possible, Barnsley 1839, 1876-80

Reception Orders:

see also Certification and Lunacy Act.

- Change of wording from "certified lunatic," question of, Dixon ... 3968-70
- Deterrent effect, Langdon-Down ... 7910
- Duration, Macleod ... 303
- Given without enquiry into patients' financial position, Lord ... 2259-63
- Granted too freely, and suggestions, Chubb 6845, 6853-63

SUMMARY:

- under Section 13, system and procedure, Macleod, Bond ... 254-66, 286-7
- under Section 13 or under Section 14, difficulty, Leach ... 6081-8, 6249-53
- Section 14 used more than Section 13 in Sheffield, Flint ... 6232-7
- proposed Procedure, Lomax ... 12,822
- System and procedure, Macleod ... 237-53
- Temporary 3 days order on one medical certificate and subsequent 28-31 days order by justice if necessary, suggestion, Langdon-Down 8068-139
- Term "pauper" should be removed, Connell 4090
- Records, improved system, proposal, Lidbetter 1748-9, 1751

Recovery:

Discharge, see that title.

RATE:

- Dixon* 3927, 4021-2, 4040-1; Connell 4096, 4221-30; Devine 4551-2; Keene 5010-1.
- Calculation method, criticism, Parker 11,694-702
- Competition among Medical Officers to secure good rate, Willis ... 325
- great Improvement not anticipated with present medical knowledge, Barham 7658-60
- in Licensed houses, Chubb 6748-51, 6887-90; Cole 17,053-4; Langdon-Down 13,504.
- in Private institutions, comparison with public institutions desirable, Parker ... 11,703
- within Three months and six months, Leach 6068, 6139-40
- Voluntary boarders, Bethlehem, Phillips 5874
- Recreation, see under Care and Treatment.
- Recurrent Cases might be treated at clinics, Lewis 4574
- Refractory ward, see under Care and Treatment.

Registered Hospitals:

- Admissions, 1923, Edwards ... 6330
- Charitable work, Yellowlees ... 5725
- Discharge, duty of superintendent, Willis 506-7
- Distinction from private asylum and licensed house, Yellowlees 5818-20; Edwards 6333-9.
- Extension desirable, Mapother ... 18,881-5
- Funds, Yellowlees ... 5396-8
- no Limitation on number, Willis ... 84-5
- Management, Yellowlees ... 5385-6
- Management Committees, representative of local authority on, would be approved, Gibson 12,373-9, 12,392-4
- Medical staff, women on, advocated, Yellowlees 5412, 5415-8, 5825-31
- Medical superintendent, administrative work must be under, with suitable delegation, Yellowlees ... 5401-11
- Nature of, Willis ... 64
- Notices, posting up of, Bond ... 802
- Number, Willis ... 90
- Number of cases in, 1st January, 1924, Willis 67
- Personal experience in, Miss G. ... 20,428-559
- Profits, no inducement to make, Yellowlees 5724-5
- VISITATION:
- by Commissioners, account of, by ex-attendant, Parker ... 11,245-9
- by Managing Committees, Macleod ... 353
- Wrongful detention, safeguard against, Willis 497-9, 507-8
- Regulations and rules, danger of over-elaboration, Parker ... 11,640-8

Relatives and Friends:

- Access to Board of Control, Willis ... 607-10
- Attitude of, Baly 2871; Giles 3103, 3121-6.
- Charge of lunatic by, Willis, Bond, Macleod 283-5, 818-24; Parker 11,045-6, 11,051-6.
- Power to discharge, see under Discharge.
- Visitation by, see under Visitation.

Relieving Officers:

- Admission to clinics through, question of, Craig 20,836-9, 20,843
- All cases might be dealt with by, followed by two medical certificates, Lidbetter ... 1558-61
- possible Alternative to, if entire administration taken over by lunacy authority, Francis 21,469-509

APPOINTMENT:

- Method, Lidbetter ... 1480-3
- Qualifications, Lidbetter ... 1482
- Functions, Francis ... 1368-9, 1599-600
- Functions re lunatic not a pauper and not wandering at large, Macleod ... 254-60
- Methods by which cases come to notice of, Lidbetter ... 1497-507
- Ministry of Health position re, Francis 1367, 1370-3
- Notice to justice of alleged lunatics, Macleod 239-40, 254

Relieving Officers—cont.

should have Power to effect temporary removal to Poor Law Institution without Justice's order, Lidbetter ... 1650-4

POWERS AND DUTIES:

under Acts of 1890 and 1891, Lidbetter ... 1485-551
 Conveyance to and from and between institutions, Lidbetter ... 1600-3, 1607
 Lunatic wandering at large ... 1554-6
 Property, Lidbetter ... 1601, 1604-6
 Procedure by, after receipt of information, Lidbetter ... 1508-44
 Protection by Section 330, Lidbetter ... 1693
 Removal of patients, assistance, provision for, Lidbetter ... 1765
 Responsibility of, Lidbetter ... 1693-4, 1704-6
 Special designation of, to perform duties under Lunacy Act, by Section 2 (2) of Act of 1891, Lidbetter 1598; Baly 2497-503.
 Work well done, Lewis ... 4641-3
 Research, see Psychiatric research.
 Rochdale, Infirmary nursing staff, Leach ... 6107-10
 Routine employment, bad mental results, Boyle 18,584-6, 18,667-70

Rowditch Mental Hospital, Derby:

Dietary, Blood ... 12,232, 12,238-9
 Patients, hours of bedtime, Blood ... 12,065-7

Royal or Chartered Asylums, Scotland:

Admission, system, Marr, Rose 15,154-82, 15,205-39
 Numbers, etc., Rose ... 15,048-57
 Patients from England and Ireland, Marr, Rose 15,127-45
 Paupers in, payment for, Rose, Marr 15,146-53
 Powers of General Board of Control re, Rose 15,093-6
 Private patients, Rose, Marr 15,056, 15,090-2, 15,113-7
 System, Marr ... 15,120-6

Royal Commission of 1904-8 (under Lord Radnor), Willis ... 23-6
 Recommendations, Parker ... 10,434-8, 10,445
 Rules in Lunacy, codification desirable, Sandhurst 17,813-4

Safeguards:

see also under Certification, Improper; Detention Wrongful, and Voluntary Boarders.
 Existing machinery adequate, Willis ... 934 against Ill-treatment, Connell ... 4072-9 no Overlapping of jurisdiction, Willis ... 38 any Practicable suggestions would be welcomed, Willis ... 935-7
 St. Bartholomew's Hospital, Out-patient mental department, Phillips ... 5902-8
 St. George's Retreat, Fawcett ... 6903-4
 St. Luke's Hospital Clinic, particulars re, Gilmour 18,391-500

Salford Union Infirmary:

Accommodation for mental cases, procedure, etc., Giles ... 3016-20, 3030-169
 Medical staff, Giles ... 3136
 Nursing staff, Giles ... 3134-5 as Observation place, would not be satisfactory unless improvements made, Giles ... 3161-3
 Permanent cases, Giles ... 3069-79

Salisbury, Old Manor:

Accommodation, nature of, Chubb ... 6483
 Admission to, through poor law, Chubb ... 6675-7
 Cases, statistics, Chubb ... 6482-4
 Children in, formerly, Chubb ... 6847-9
 Classification of patients, Chubb ... 6776-81
 Clothing, Chubb ... 6526-9
 Consulting surgeon and operations, Chubb 6664-7, 6669-70
 Dental treatment, Chubb ... 6667-8
 Ex-service patients, Chubb 6483, 6526, 6841-4

Salisbury, Old Manor—cont.

Farms and dairy in connection with, Chubb 6636-43
 Fees, Chubb ... 6632-5
 History, Chubb ... 6482-97
 Leave of absence on trial, Chubb ... 6552-97
 Licensing by Subsidiary Justices, Chubb ... 6503 no Mechanical restraint, Chubb ... 6815-6
 Medical staff, Chubb ... 6644-5, 6831-3
 Medical Superintendent, position, Chubb 6497-502
 Nursing staff, Chubb 6646, 6650-6, 6821-2, 6887-8
 Occupation, Chubb ... 6788-9
 Ownership, etc., Chubb ... 6485-97
PATIENTS:
 Daily life, Chubb ... 6530-5
 Some taken on special terms or gratuitously, Chubb ... 6629-31
 Walks into town and country unattended, Chubb 6522-3, 6782-7, 6838-40
 Recovery rate, Chubb ... 6748-51, 6887-90
 Recreation, Chubb ... 6790
 Sharp tools, use of, by patients, Chubb ... 6647-9
VISITATION:
 by Commissioners and interviews with patients, Chubb 6506-21, 6524-5, 6545-55, 6825-8, 6880-7 by Justices, Chubb 6504-5, 6520, 6536-48, 6801-16, 6883 by Medical visitor, Chubb ... 6537-44
 by Relatives, Chubb ... 6791-5
 Voluntary boarders, Chubb 6753-73, 6834-7, 6863-78

Scotland:

Accommodation, types and numbers, Rose 15,048-85
 Administration, see that title.
 After-care, Rose ... 15,653-4
 Boarding-out system, Marr, Rose 15,472-604; Robertson 16,032-5.
CARE AND TREATMENT:
 Bathing privacy, arrangements, Marr ... 14,994-5
 Communication with outside world, Marr, Rose 15,376-84
 Exercise, Robertson ... 16,095-115
 Food, Rose, Marr ... 15,655-8
 Ill-treatment, prosecutions, Marr 15,010-26, 15,030-2, 15,034
 Institution shops and refreshment room, Marr 15,379 no Locked seclusion, Robertson ... 16,121-9, 16,202-5
 Mechanical restraint, abolition of, Robertson 16,129
 Occupation, Marr ... 15,665-6
 Open-door system as far as possible, and success of, Robertson ... 16,116-20 no Padded rooms, Robertson 16,121-26, 16,197
 Parole system, Robertson ... 16,118
 Pass system, Marr ... 15,396-9
 Post boxes in wards, Marr ... 15,298-9
 Reading and writing room, Marr ... 15,379
 Visit by own medical man, provision for, Marr, Rose ... 15,383-4 no Written notices, Marr 15,286-90; Rose 15,292-7.
 Certificates, nature of errors in, Robertson 15750, 15,757-66

CERTIFICATION:

Avoidance of, by every possible means, Robertson 15,888-9
 System, Marr, Rose 15,154-82, 15,205, 15,216-31, 15,270-80; Robertson 15,736-7. procedure re Dangerous lunatics, Rose ... 15,240-6
 Detention, appeal to Board of Control, right of, Marr 15,272, 15,275-80, 15,286, 15,293-4, 15,302.
DISCHARGE:
 by Escape, Marr ... 15,410
 by General Board of Control, Marr, Rose 15,404-9 by Petitioner, Marr, Rose ... 15,411-20 as Recovered, Marr, Rose 15,385-7, 15,391, 15,394-5, 15,401 not Recovered, Marr 15,385, 15,391, 15,402-3

Scotland—cont.DISCHARGE—cont.

System, Rose, Marr 15,385-7, 15,391, 15,394-5, 15,401-20

District Asylums, see that title.

Emergency certificates, Marr 15,219, 15,232-5;
Robertson 15,812-9.

General Board of Control, see that title.

Grant, Marr 15,149-53; Rose ... 15,673

Inspector of the Poor, Rose, Marr 15,677-83

Juveniles in Asylums, Robertson ... 16,224-5

Licensed houses, Marr 15,478, 15,495-502, 15,533

Lunatics, statistics, Ross, Marr 15,042-7, 15,086-8, 15,127-36

Medical training in mental science, Sandhurst
18,024

Mental hospitals, hospitalisation of, Robertson
16,095-143, 16,197-205

Observation wards attached to general hospitals, system, Marr, Rose 15,251-62, 15,269, 15,611-2; Carswell 16,474-83, 16,515-23, 16,535, 16,545-59,
16,574-91.

Pauper lunatics, transfer to England and Ireland, procedure, Marr ... 15,422-5

Poorhouses, see that title.

Private Asylum, Rose, Marr 15,066-9, 15,109,
15,114-5, 15,118

Private houses, system, Devine 4389, 4546-7; Rose,
Marr 15,083, 15,118, 15,605-10, 15,614-7, 15,619-
22, 15,624; Robertson 15,936-6035.

Private patients, provision for, Rose, Marr 15,056,
15,090-2, 15,105-17, 15,392; Cole 17,050.

Probation, Marr ... 15,396

Receiving rooms, Robertson ... 16,206

Royal, or Chartered Asylums, see that title.

Sheriff detention order by, system, Marr 15,207-9;
Robertson 15,738-66, 15,792-3, 15,797-9, 15,822-31.

Single care, Marr, Rose ... 15,472-604

Verandahs, Robertson ... 16,101, 16,104

Visitation, see that title.

Voluntary Boarders, see that title.

Seclusion, see under Care and Treatment.

Senile Dementia Cases:IN POOR LAW INSTITUTIONS:

Difficulty re, Usher, Senior ... 3459-63

Transfer to asylum, objection to, Lovsey
5247-9, 5286-8, 5370-4

Treatment in, desirable, Dixon ... 3905-7, 3925-6

Certification of, not advocated except in very rare cases, Lidbetter ... 1726, 1737-9 now Received by Metropolitan Asylums Board without certificates, Lidbetter ... 1737-9

Special certificate for, proposal, Usher, Senior 3459-63

Transfer to workhouses, advocated, Taggart
13,203-25

Sheffield:

Cases dealt with, statistics, Flint ... 6225-36

Cases discharged without certification, Flint
6227-8, 6267-74, 6303-8

Pauper, or non-pauper, reasons for classification as, Flint ... 6259-66

Single Care:

see also Nursing Homes and Private Houses.

Admissions, 1923, Edwards ... 6330

Approval of, and wide powers advocated, Craig
20,697, 20,910-3, 20,920-3

Approved, Parker ... 11,315-6

Economy, tendency, Sandhurst ... 18,015 other Insane persons in home, cases of failure to certify, Bond ... 858

More than two patients should be allowed, Cole
17,282-5

Number in, 1st January, 1924, Willis ... 67

Objection to, Gibson ... 12,312

Provision for, in Mental Treatment Bill needed,
Cole ... 16,857-62

Removal suggested in some cases, Sandhurst
18,012-4

Removal of patient, power of Board of Control if not satisfied with house, Willis ... 661-2

Scottish system, Marr, Rose ... 15,472-604

Single Care—cont.

System, Willis, Bond, Macleod 639-41, 643, 644

Transfer of cases to, from institutions, Willis 519

Visitation, Macleod, Willis 353-5, 356; Sandhurst
17,830-2.

Voluntary boarders should be allowed, subject to supervision and control, Mapother 18,868-80

Wrongful detention, safeguard against, Willis
497, 507-8

Social service, development would be useful,

Langdon-Down 13,615-7; Boyle 18,643-4.

South-West Lancashire Association for Mental Welfare, work of, Andrew ... 21,213-29

Southampton Poor Law Institution:

Accommodation, class, etc., Senior 3189-215, 3328,
3503, 3524-6, 3528

Aliens admitted under deportation law, Senior 3470

Character of, Senior ... 3180

Diet, Senior ... 3225-8

14 days' detention, procedure, Senior ... 3341-59

Maintenance cost of patient and comparison with asylum, Senior ... 3229-30

Mental wards, staff, number, remuneration, etc.,
Senior ... 3216-24

NURSING STAFF:

Diet, and cost of, compared with inmates, Senior 3494-7

Probationer nurses, duties of, pay, etc., Senior 3488-501

Qualifications, Senior ... 3465, 3476-8

Permanent cases, number, Senior ... 3529

Springfield Mental Hospital, children in, Lobjoit
5175

Statistics, lines on which further statistics desirable,
Leach ... 6064-78

Sterilization of Lunatics:

Cases known of, Robertson ... 16,188

Objection to, Robertson ... 16,180-95

Stigma:

see also under Certification; Pauper; Poor Law and Provisional Orders.

Dislike of, Giles ... 3103, 3127-9, 3150, 3159

Nature of, Cole, Menzies, etc. ... 16,931-48

Removal of, by treatment of mental cases in general hospital, proposal, Baly ... 2930-46

Study Leave, see under Medical Staff.

Suicide:ATTEMPTED:

Cases brought to Poor Law Institutions, difficulty in connection with, and proposals, Senior,
Usher ... 3447-57, 3502, 3506-8

Cases brought in under Section 20, dealt with under Lunacy Act, Lambeth Infirmary, Baly
2773-85

Examination of all cases by mental expert:

Advocated, Senior ... 3447-52, 3516-6

not Advocated, Usher ... 3454

Methods of dealing with, Baly ... 2773-85

Difficulties in connection with, Miller 17,403-16

Summary Reception Orders, see under Reception
Orders.

Terminology:

Assimilation as far as possible to that of ordinary hospital desirable, Phillips ... 5913-4

ASYLUM:

Objection to use of word, and deterrent effect of,
Hodgson ... 13,304-11

possible Use of "mental hospital" instead,
Langdon-Down ... 7845-52

Change advocated as concession to public feeling,
Langdon-Down ... 7824-5

Change desired by public, ProPERT ... 6021

suggested Classification, Langdon-Down ... 7887-92, 7897-905

"Hospital" advocated in lieu of "asylum" or "mental hospital," Leach ... 6176-9

Terminology—cont.

- "Insanity," definition question, Parker 10,645-720, 11,801
- "Mental abnormality," suggestion, Langdon-Down 7887, 7902-5
- "Mental ailment" and "mentally ailing," suggestion, Langdon-Down ... 7865-8, 7898-902
- "Mental disability," suggestion, Langdon-Down 7880-6
- "Mental disorder," suggestion, Langdon-Down 7862-3
- "Pauper," elimination desirable, Langdon-Down 7905-8; Masterman 8205-7.
- "Person of unsound mind," suggested use of, and definition, Langdon-Down... 7826-30, 7858, 7861-8
- Suggestion, Phillips ... 5913-4
- OF UNSOUND MIND:
- Definition question, Parker ... 10,703-19
- Definition by Royal Commission in 1908, Parker 10,437
- Ticehurst House, Fawcett 6903-4, 7028-37; Mr. H. 8688-748.

Treatment:

- Assimilation to treatment of other forms of illness desirable as far as possible, Propert 6026-30; Ford 6288-91; Craig 20,794-5.
- Certified nurses should be sent to homes in some cases, Gibson ... 12,324-6
- Close association with treatment of physical disease desirable, Craig ... 20,697, 20,725, 20,908
- in Specialised mental institutions undesirable, general institution preferable, Baly ... 2858

Treatment without Certification:

- Administration by lunacy or public health authorities, question of, Beard ... 19,465-70
- Advantages, Comrie ... 16,303-10
- initial Certification process and continued suspensions, suggestion approved, Devine ... 4473-80
- Clinics, see that title.

DETENTION:

- Patient could be certified if treatment objected to, Devine ... 4394, 4396-7
- Possibility of, needed, Miller, Buzzard 17,417.
- certain Power of, necessary, and suggestions, Connell 4158-64; Leach, Ford 6120-7, 6202-4, 6281-2; Gibson 12,417-24.
- Question of, Rose, Marr ... 15,614-7, 15,626-49
- in Foreign countries, Boyle ... 18,560-71

IN GENERAL HOSPITALS:

- would Alleviate fear of stigma, but not advocated, Giles ... 3130
- Opposed as regards certain cases, Devine 4410-3, 4421
- Desirable, Ford 6205-12, 6278-9; Parker 10,596-606, 11,801.
- Desirable in many cases, Baly ... 2884-5, 2930-46
- Undesirable, Giles ... 3130-3
- in General hospitals, or special hospitals, or clinics separate from mental hospitals, Craig ... 20,697, 20,726

- General hospitals and clinics as clearing houses advocated, Craig ... 20,807-10
- Institutions taking cases should be under control and supervision, Devine ... 4404, 4447
- Need for, Sanders 2411-3; Dixon 3908; Devine 4389; Lewis 4573-8, 4664-6; Propert 6042; Leach 6117-9, 6281; Ford 6196-200, 6204; Barham 7485-9; Miss C. 14,522-3; Robertson 15,853-9; Cole 16,636-9; Worth 17,364-71; Buzzard 17,431-3; Boyle 18,560-6, 18,653-66, 18,677-81; Mapother 18,834-7; Beard 19,453; Craig 20,697, 20,784-91.
- Notification system would be approved, and suggestion, Devine ... 4389-4422, 4435-50
- Number of cases that could be treated voluntarily, Devine ... 4542-4
- Nursing homes, see that title.
- Postponement of certification for three months advocated when possible, Gibson 12,417, 12,440-1
- Problem of, Yellowlees ... 5694-718
- Psychosis cases, proposal re, Devine ... 4389-422

Treatment without Certification—cont.

- in Public mental hospitals advocated, Devine 4407-9
- Reception Houses, see that title.
- Reluctance of people to send incipient cases to asylums, Ford ... 6308-9
- Scheme, Langdon-Down 8065-139; Craig 20,864-6.
- IN SCOTLAND: Devine 4389, 4546-7; Rose, Marr 15,605-10, 15,614-22, 15,624.
- Detention question and power not advocated, Marr, Rose ... 15,614-7, 15,626-49
- Notification desired, Rose 15,615, 15,621-2; Marr 15,627.
- Statistics suggested to strengthen case for, Leach ... 6064-78
- Supervision, by Board of Control advocated, Craig ... 20,697, 20,899-903
- Voluntary Boarders, see that title.
- Trial Leave of Absence, see under Leave of Absence.
- Tuebrook Asylum:
- Visitation of, Barr 7052-61.
- Voluntary boarders, Barr 7067-9.

- Unemployment, a cause of mental disorder, Baly 2869, 2879

Urgency Orders:

- Application to pauper cases, suggestion, Lobjoit, 5142-9
- Clerk to justices should be notified and record kept, Beard ... 19,545
- must Continue in certain cases, Parker 10,616-41, 10,818-25
- Extended use of, suggested, in connection with proposed appointment of specially selected certifying doctor, Carswell ... 16,485-98
- Objection to, Parker ... 10,614A, 11,471
- Procedure, Parker ... 10,616-41
- proposed Procedure, Lomax... 12,822
- Provisional, suggestion, Willis, etc. 21,382-3, 21,395-8
- Scotland, Marr 15,219, 15,232-5; Robertson, 15,512-9.
- for Short period only, advocated, Beard 19,509-10, 19,540-1
- Sworn statement should be required, Parker 10,821-4
- System, Macleod ... 94-5, 105-9
- Used too frequently and provisional order suggested in place of, Chubb... 6724-30
- Urgent cases, question of procedure, Langdon-Down 8082-92, 8177-85, 8190-203; Edwards 8186-9; Masterman 8204-14.
- Utrecht Neuro-psychiatric Clinic, Langdon-Down 13,638-45; Goodall 17,072, 17,164; Boyle 18,569, 18,617, 18,666.

Verandahs, see under Buildings.

Villa system, see under Buildings.

Violent cases might be dealt with in special portions of mental hospitals without certification, Craig 20,813-5

Visitation:

- by Board of Control, Macleod 337-8, 353, 874; Willis 726-7; Connell 4069-71.
- Account of, by ex-attendant, Parker ... 11,245-9
- Adequacy of, Bond ... 361-7
- of All cases, desirable, Willis ... 42-3
- Complaints to, difficulty of making, and suggested remedies, Parker ... 11,264-70
- Farcical nature of, Mr. P. ... 14,311-7
- no Help from, rather harm, personally, Miss C. 14,587-92
- Ineffectiveness of, Parker ... 11,239-80
- Information always received beforehand, Parker 11,249-51; Mr. P. 14,312-4.
- Interviews with patients, insufficient time for, Mr. M. ... 19,971

Visitation—cont.

by Board of Control—cont.

Licensed houses, see that title.Notification of, and preparation for, Gibson 12,190-1; Mr. M. 19,966-8; Mr. O. 20,167.Ordering of, by Lord Chancellor, power of, Macleod, Willis 342-8, 353; Schuster 975-6.Patient's account of, Parker ... 11,264Patients actually seen and talked to, Willis 29 of Poor Law Institutions, Macleod 708; Willis 713-6; Senior 3396-8.Preparation for, no time for, generally, Blood 12,192-3Private interviews with patients, Willis, Macleod, Bond

29, 357-60, 366-8, 381, 384, 387-90

Difficulty of obtaining, Parker ... 11,264Pauper patients, no right of, but given if asked for, Macleod 358; Bond 368-9, 372-4.Right of, to pauper patients, no objection to, but no more interviews would result, Willis ... 375Record of, extent, Bond 370, 371, 379-81, 392-3; Willis 371, 375-8.Value of, Bond ... 394-6, 403Procedure, Macleod ... 357-60as Safeguard against wrongful detention, Bond, Willis, Macleod ... 382-5, 403Single patients, Macleod 353-5, 356; Willis 355.Statutory, Macleod ... 451Value of, Macleod ... 401-3

BY CHANCERY VISITORS:

Complaints received on, nature of, *Sandhurst, 17,840-4, 17,858-75, 17,883-4, 17,895-6, 17,902-17.*Division of cases between visitors, *Sandhurst, 17,807, 17,878.*Duties of, Sandhurst ... 17,776-92, 17,803-6Nature of, etc., Schuster 967-73, 1038-40Number of cases on books and classes of, Sandhurst ... 17,794-800to Persons discharged relieved, Sandhurst 17,822-9Private houses, Sandhurst ... 17,830-2Procedure, etc., Sandhurst 17,815, 17,845-52, 17,863-7where Receiver appointed, Sandhurst 17,808-14Special reports to Lord Chancellor (Sec. 185), Sandhurst ... 17,785-6Special visits by request, Sandhurst ... 17,806Suggestions, no difficulties experienced re getting suggestions carried out, Sandhurst 17,846-52.

BY GUARDIANS:

right of Access at all times to proper representatives advocated, Hill 18,281-90, 18,379-81; Glanvill 18,381.Announced beforehand, uselessness of, Hill 18,249-63, 18,280Complaints, procedure on, Hill ... 18,261-8Farical nature of, Mr. P. ... 14,309-10Ineffectiveness of, Parker ... 11,281Nature of, Senior ... 3384-90Nature of, and comparison with, visitation by Visiting Committee, Sanders ... 2373-81Powers re, ignorance of, Hill ... 18,255Procedure, Leach 6131-8; Glanvill 18,382-3.every Six months advocated, Leach ... 6137Special visiting committees, advantage of, Hill 18,249, 18,279, 18,287, 18,312; Glanvill 18,331.Surprise visits instituted, Wandsworth, Hill 18,249, 18,255, 18,258, 18,267Value of, Leach ... 6123-30on Home Secretary's order, Brock ... 1091-4of Inquisition cases, Macleod 342-52; Sandhurst 17,801-3, 17,879-82.

BY JUSTICES:

of Licensed houses, see that title.no Objection to proposal, Dixon ... 3964-5of Reception houses, proposal, Walden 2078-9as Safeguard against wrongful detention, proposal, Barnsley ... 1894-905, 1930-5

Visitation—cont.

BY JUSTICES—cont.

Scheme under Mental Deficiency Act advocated, Barnsley ... 1881-911, 1936-41careful Selection of visitors necessary, Barnsley 1906-9Licensed houses, see that title.by Lord Chancellor, see that title.by Medical practitioner appointed by Guardians, Parker ... 11,282-5

BY PETITIONER:

Obligatory once in six months, Willis 353; Bond 404.Provision not entirely satisfactory and suggested improvement, Sandhurst 17,956-63

OF POOR LAW INSTITUTIONS:

by Ministry of Health, Francis 1262-5, 1351-66by Visiting Committee of Asylum, proposal not agreed with, Usher ... 3414-21of Registered hospitals, by Managing Committees, Macleod ... 353BY RELATIVES AND FRIENDS: Bond, etc. 405-8, 412-7; Chubb 6791-5; Parker 11,087-95.Complaints to, uselessness of, Miss H. 19,680-2.Effect, Dixon ... 3974more Frequent in case of poor patients than wealthy, Sandhurst ... 17,964-6Nurses not allowed to talk to, Miss H. 19,677-9Personal experiences, Mrs. M. 14,051-4, 14,109-15, 14,171-2, 14,176; Miss B. 14,794-801.Scotland, Marr, Rose ... 15,381-4

SCOTLAND:

by Justices of the Peace, Rose ... 15,377by Parish Councillors, Rose ... 15,378by Sheriff, Marr ... 15,376System, Marr 15,376; Rose 15,377-8.of Single care patients, Macleod, Willis 353-5, 356Surprise visits, difficulty of securing, Parker 11,259; Gibson 12,189-91.by Unpaid visitors, Keene ... 4892-4

BY VISITING COMMITTEES:

Comparison with visitation by Guardians, Sanders ... 2373-81

Complaints to, by patients:

Action on, Keene 4877-80, 4886-91, 4895, 4897, 4978-81, 5045-65Committee should sit for certain time at intervals to hear, Lomax 12,626-35, 12,659Freely made, Hodgson ... 13,343-4Freedom of, and action on, Lovsey 5257-9, 5268-72, 5275-9, 5339-50Prevention of, through fear, doubted, Lobjoit 5095-6, 5100Dinner should be abolished as a function, Lomax 12,636-42Farical nature of, Lomax 12,615-21, 12,626, 12,649; Mr. P. 14,300-8; Mr. L. 20,370.Free access to, Blood 12,217-20; Wiese 12,221-2.Ineffectiveness of, Parker ... 11,239-80Interviews with patients: Walden 2099-106, 2111-5; Sanders 2382-7; Broome Giles 3655-60, 3665-7, 3672-3; Connell 4060; Keene 4976-80.no Difficulty experienced by patients in obtaining, Lobjoit ... 5090-4, 5100no Facilities for, Mr. P. ... 14,308Records of, extent of, Walden 2154-8; Keene 4871-6.Right of private patient to demand, and no reason against pauper patients having, Keene ... 4898-9any Member should have access to institution at any time, Lomax ... 12,662-7of Poor Law Institutions, proposal not agreed with, Usher ... 3414-21Procedure, Connell 4060-1; Lobjoit 5088-105, 5200.System, Macleod, Willis 335-8, 353; Walden 2098; Keene 4740-2.Visitors independent of lunacy administration, suggestion, Parker ... 11,801 (22)by Voluntary visitors, desirability doubted, Lovsey 5337-8

Visiting Committees:

Appointment of, by central department desirable,
Lomax 12,645
 Continuation reports and certificates might be counter-signed by two members of, Lobjoit
 5180-1

CO-OPTION OF MEMBERS:

Approved, Cole 16,850-1
 Criticism, Hodgson 13,362-93
 Possibility of, through use of Mental Deficiency Act, Keene 4706-13, 4975 outside the Local Authority would be useful,
Lomax 12,660-2
 Doctors on, would be approved, Lovsey ... 5335-6
 Examination of letters by, Lobjoit ... 5103-5
 Interview of patient before probation, by whole
 Committee, objection to, Broome Giles 3649-50
 Medical Superintendent should be more independent of, Lomax 12,492-501, 12,563, 12,577-82
 Name, alteration desirable, Beard 19,471-5
 One for number of Asylums, Keene ... 4703

POWERS AND DUTIES OF:

Keene 4719
 Accommodation and upkeep, Keene 4719,
 4723-33, 4926
 Admissions, consideration of new cases, Lobjoit
 5154-6
 Dietary, Keene 4829
 re Discharge, Willis 509-12, 767-71, 798-800;
Keene 4743-5.
 Dismissal of nursing staff, proposal, Gibson
 12,328-44
 Research, subject to approval of Board of Control, criticism of Mental Treatment Bill,
Hodgson ... 13,394-409, 13,412-29, 13,495-9
 to make Rules and regulations, Keene 4823-6 to Spend Money, Keene 4723; Hodgson 13,366-9, 13,371-6
 Staffing of asylums, Keene 4734-9
 Visitation, see that title.
 Representatives of County Councils on, expenses should be paid, Taggart 13,492-4
 Responsibility for accommodation should rest on,
Willis 21,386
 Strengthening advocated, Parker 11,801
 Sub-Committees, suggestion, Mr. L. 20,370, 20,372
WOMEN ON:
 Importance of, Lomax 12,667
 no Objection to, Beard 19,562-4
 Visitors, Chancery, see under Lord Chancellor.

Voluntary Boarders:ADMISSION:

on Application and immediate notification, desirable, Barr 7071-5
 of Attempted suicide as, objection to, Miss G.
 20,539-44
 Delay objected to, and power to admit cases with subsequent notification to Board of Control, &c., advocated, Edwards ... 6389-92 less Formality advocated, Barr 7071-5; Langdon- Down 8147.

to Mental Hospitals:

Advocated, Lewis 4585, 4600-4; Edwards 6393;
Barham 7499-501; Parker 10,487-90, 10,501;
Goodall 16,718-20; Sidney, Gardner 19,141-3, 19,149-51, 19,172, 19,191, 19,197-201; Craig
 20,697, 20,867-8.
 Advocated at discretion of medical superintendent, Boyle 18,751-2
 becoming Certifiable, question of procedure,
Sidney 19,117-8
 Procedure, question of, Gardner 19,173,
 19,177-8, 19,180, 19,183, 19,187-90; Sidney
 19,174-86, 19,192-5.
 Question of, Barr 7081-4 to Public institution, recommendation might be made by medical superintendent, Willis
 21,309-12

Voluntary Boarders—cont.ADMISSION—cont.

on own Written application or if under 18 on written application of parent or guardian, with one medical recommendation, suggestion,
Willis 21,262, 21,287, 21,300, 21,307-12
 Advantage of system, Dixon ... 3771-6, 3975-8
 Approval of system, Lovsey 5250-3
 Approval of system as carried out at Maudsley
 Hospital, Miss G. 20,435-8, 20,458-9
 Attitude of Board of Control, Yellowlees
 5745-6, 5749-50
 Bedding, complaint of, Miss G. 20,484-9
 Bethlem Royal Hospital, Phillips
 5861-75, 5931-3, 5953-6
 Camberwell House, Edwards 6383-90, 6470-2, 6476

SUBSEQUENT CERTIFICATION:

Bethlem practice re, Phillips 5863-70
 Objection to, and question of alternative,
Robertson 15,896-904
 Personal experience and objection to, Mrs. G.
 20,566-72
 Possibility of, would act as deterrent, Chubb
 6753-4
 Procedure, Phillips 10,326-45
 in Same Institution:
 Advocated, Edwards 8155-63
 Objection to, Miss G. 20,515
 Objection to, but less objectionable in case of existing institutions, Parker 10,529-52
 Personal experience and complaint, Miss G.
 20,511-38, 20,557-9

Correctness of description "voluntary," question of, Goodall, Cole, Lord ... 16,729-37

DETENTION:

24 hours approved, Parker 10,502-28
 72 hours:
 Approved, Langdon-Down 8148-54
 Approved, but should be maximum time,
Lobjoit 5130-41, 5176-9
 too Long, Parker 10,503-9, 10,519
 Proposal, Connell, 4111-6, 4161-4, 4214-9;
Willis, Macleod, ... 21,291-4, 21,337-49.
 Proposal not agreed with, Lomax ... 12,866
 Bethlem, Phillips 5864, 5866-7
 some Control necessary, Connell 4100-2, 4108, 4111-6
 Undertaking to give right to authorities of detention and control for 28 days if required, advocated, Lomax 12,866, 12,976
 Voluntary agreement for, for certain period, system would be useful, Phillips 5968-73; Leach
 6281

Documents signed by patient on admission, misrepresentations and suggestion re, Miss G.
 20,443-57

Encouragement of system desirable, Connell 4098-9, 4109-16, 4136-7; Phillips 5861, 5876; Faudel-
Phillips 5953-8; Barr 7069-71, 7077-8.
 Extension of facilities desired, Lobjoit... 5129 present Facilities for, Sidney, Gardner 19,197-201
 Increase in number owing to reluctance of doctors to certify, Chubb 6762-7, 6770, 6850-2, 6864-78
 Inspection by Board of Control proposal, Willis,
Bond 21,318-27, 21,337
 Institutions proposed for, Willis ... 21,262, 21,289
 Institutions should be under Local Authorities, not Board of Control, unless Board reorganised with District Commissioners, Parker 10,554-74A, 11,801
 Maudsley Hospital, Keene 4930-2; Sidney 19,094-121
 Medical report within seven days, proposal, Willis
 21,313-7
 Melancholic cases, difficulty, Yellowlees ... 5705
 Mental Treatment Bill, would be approved, Phillips
 5872-3
 New class of institution for, desirable, Parker
 10,500, 10,553

BECOMING NON-VOLITIONAL:

Evanesence, case of, Macleod 21,331-6
 Maudsley Hospital, Sidney 19,094-121 proposed Procedure, Craig 20,869-85; Macleod, Bond, Willis 21,328-37.
 Provision re, Macleod, Bond ... 21,330-37

Voluntary Boarders—cont.

- Notification not advocated unless restraint necessary, Worth ... 17,323-32
 Observation period under provisional certificate preferable, Chubb ... 6753-68
 Patients persuaded to come in as, by friends, when certifiable, Barr ... 7071, 7076, 7085-90

PAUPER:

- Encouragement of system advocated, Phillips 5877-8
 Facilities would be availed of, Carswell 16,589
 Personal experience, Miss G. ... 20,429-559
 Refusal at mental hospitals, Menzies ... 16,766
 Removal, proposed powers to Board of Control, Willis ... 21,322-3

SAFEGUARDS:

- Certificate from usual medical attendant, Robertson ... 15,890-1
 Necessary, Langdon-Down ... 8140-6
 Necessary, in connection with Section 315, Bodkin ... 17,666-8
 Question of need for, Parker ... 10,491-6
 Seeing of, by Commissioners, and making of return, Robertson ... 15,885-6
 Statement of willingness to remain, daily signing or initialling of, suggestion, Miss G. 20,508
 Scheme, Langdon-Down ... 8163-75

SCOTLAND:

- Admission on written application to superintendent, Rose, Marr 15,307, 15,340-9; Robertson 15,861-2, 15,864-78, 15,917.
 Certifiable persons as, and difficulty in connection with, Marr, Rose 15,324-6, 15,328-35, 15,336-8, 15,340-52.
 becoming Certifiable, procedure, Marr 15,353-70 subsequent Certification on ground of giving notice to go, Robertson ... 15,894-6, 15,903
 Development of system, Robertson ... 15,922-9
 Notification to Board of Control and sanction, Rose 15,308-9, 15,371-5; Robertson 15,862-3.
 Paupers sent as, in some cases, but Government grant not applicable to, Marr 15,366-8; Robertson 16,007-9, 16,217-21; Comrie 16,435.
 Percentage of, Marr 15,320; Robertson 15,908. sufficient Protection provided in, Rose 15,372-5
 no Regulations re, Marr ... 15,312
 72 hours' detention, Rose, Marr 15,310-20, 15,356-60; Robertson 15,909-15.
 Signing of form under persuasion in some cases, Robertson ... 15,918-9
 Statutory provisions re, Marr, Rose 15,313-28
 Statutory recognition, Robertson ... 15,912-3
 System, Robertson ... 15,860-78, 15,884, 15,888
 Value of system, Rose ... 15,336-9 in Single care should be allowed, subject to supervision and control, Mapother ... 18,868-80
 Six-monthly reports, proposal, Willis ... 21,314-8
 System, Willis ... 80-1
 System approved for certain class of cases, Chubb ... 6769, 6772-5 should be Treated apart from ordinary inmates on, Chubb ... 6879-80
 Treatment as certified lunatic, complaint of, Miss G. ... 20,465-83
 Tuebrook Asylum, Barr ... 7067-9
 York, The Retreat, Yellowlees ... 5742-50

Voluntary treatment:

see also Voluntary Boarders.

- Certain cases suitable for, and compulsory detention not desirable, Langdon-Down ... 7800-5 Desire for, Mrs. M. 13,729, 13,734-7, 13,809-12, 13,813; Mr. P. 14,208.

- Will, power of making in asylum, Craig ... 20,916-7
 Winchelsea, Periteau House, Fawssett ... 6903-4
 Work by patients for payment, see under Occupation under Care and Treatment.
 Workhouses, see Poor Law Institutions.

York, The Retreat:

- Access to outside world, Yellowlees, Crosland 5531-44, 5548-76.
 Accommodation and number of patients, Yellowlees ... 5395
 Admission of cases, and subsequent procedure, Yellowlees ... 5577-611 Buildings, Yellowlees ... 5388-9
 one Child in, Yellowlees ... 5727
 Continuous bath, Yellowlees ... 5674, 5840
 Correspondence, procedure re, Yellowlees 5561-7
 Detention, attitude of patients towards, Yellowlees 5620-5, 5669
 Dietary, Yellowlees ... 5734
 Discharge, methods and procedure, Yellowlees 5627-35
 Domestic staff, Yellowlees ... 5490
 Drugs, control over, Yellowlees ... 5681-9, 5797-8
 Favourable position of, Yellowlees ... 5772-8
 Fees, Yellowlees ... 5722-6
 Foundation and management, Yellowlees 5385-6, 5412-3
 Funds, Yellowlees ... 5396-7
 Holiday home, Yellowlees ... 5841-3
 Lady doctor, Yellowlees ... 5828-30
 Maintenance cost, Crosland, Yellowlees ... 5731-3
 Managing Committee, Crosland, Yellowlees 5419-23
 Managing Committee, contact with patients, Yellowlees, Crosland ... 5530, 5532-7
 Medical staff, Yellowlees ... 5415-8
 Medical superintendent, contact with patients, Yellowlees ... 5511-29
 Medical treatment, Yellowlees 5670-89, 5839-40, 5844
NURSING STAFF:
 Accommodation, Yellowlees ... 5497
 subsequent Careers, Yellowlees ... 5502-4
 Dismissals, Yellowlees ... 5507-9
 Hours, Crosland, Yellowlees ... 5482-9, 5501
 Proportion to number of patients, Yellowlees 5720-1
 Recruitment and training, Yellowlees 5424-70, 5491-500
 Remuneration, Crosland, Yellowlees 5472-9, 5484
 Tribute to, Yellowlees ... 5501
 Organisation, Yellowlees ... 5400-11
 Selection of cases, Yellowlees ... 5735-8
 Special position of, Gibson ... 11,995
 Staff, Yellowlees ... 5399-401
 Visitation by Commissioners, Yellowlees 5548-54
 Visits by friends and relatives, Yellowlees 5556-60
 Visits to town on parole, Yellowlees ... 5568-76
 Voluntary boarders, Yellowlees ... 5742-50

INDEX TO WITNESSES.

- AFTER CARE ASSOCIATION, evidence on behalf of, see Vickers Miss ... 7695-795
- ANDREW, Miss FLORENCE, see Tredgold, Alfred Frank, M.D., F.R.S. (Edin.), &c. 21,099-259
- ASSOCIATION OF MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS, evidence on behalf of, see Beard, Sir Lewis 19,412-565
- ASSOCIATION OF POOR LAW UNIONS, evidence on behalf of, see Probert, Rev. P. S. G., etc. 5982-6309.
- B., Mr.: ... 14,601-14,732
 Licensed houses, experiences of ... 14,605-729
- B., Miss: ... 14,733-14,900
 Licensed house, experiences of ... 14,734,900
- BALY, Dr. A. L., M.R.C.S., L.R.C.P., Medical Superintendent, Lambeth Infirmary: 2449-3009
 Accommodation ... 2688-97
 Alcoholism ... 2746-73, 2874-7
 Certification ... 2841-5, 2858, 2912-9, 2930-46
 Delirious cases ... 2723-45, 2785-9
 Detention, power of ... 2739, 2744-5
 Domestic trouble ... 2607-14, 2869-70
 Form 8, doubtful cases 2597-640, 2681-2, 2702-20, 2790-803, 2818-9, 2846-8, 2894-909 14 days' detention system 2530, 2681-2, 2702-303, 2820-5, 2846-8, 2880, 2883, 2894-911, 2947-53.
 Justice, position of ... 2855-7
 Lambeth Infirmary 2452-545, 2570-97, 2616-868, 2888-90, 2956-38A
 L.R.C.P. and M.R.C.S. curriculum ... 3000-9
 Mental Deficiency Act ... 2928-9
 Observation period ... 2605, 2804-8, 2813-8
 Persons incapable of looking after themselves, method of dealing with ... 2542-69, 2834-40
 Police stations, taking of mental cases to, not desirable ... 2922-4
 Relatives and friends of patient 2570-9, 2650-77, 2849-57, 2864, 2871
 Relieving officer ... 2497-503
 Suicide, attempted ... 2773-85
 Treatment of mental cases in general hospital, proposal ... 2858, 2884-5, 2930-46
 Unemployment and overcrowding ... 2869, 2879
 Workhouse, discharge without order being made 2625-30, 2698-701
- BARHAM, Dr. G. F., M.D., Medical Superintendent of London County Mental Hospital at Claybury: 7166-7694
 After care ... 7457-60, 7481
 Care and treatment, improvement ... 7653-60
 Claybury Hall ... 7175-7, 7361-5
 Claybury Mental Hospital ... 7169-694
 Clothing ... 7369-76
 Discharge 7457-79, 7522-4, 7587-607, 7613-22
 Employment of patients 7316, 7320-2, 7353-9, 7636-40
 Hospital visitors, voluntary 7391-408, 7611-12, 7627-8
 Meals and bed time, hours of ... 7332-53
 Medical staff ... 7508-10, 7661-2, 7666-7
 Medical superintendents 7433-56, 7647-52, 7663-5, 7694
- MENTAL HOSPITALS:
 Publicity ... 7608-10
 Size ... 7505-6, 7531-3, 7668-9
 Nursing staff 7201-9, 7213-27, 7231-2, 7234-51, 7255-309, 7325-30, 7553, 7624-5 7642-6
 Psycho-analysis ... 7421-2, 7689-90
 Reception houses ... 7490-8
 Treatment without certification ... 7485-9
 Voluntary boarders ... 7499-501
- BARNES, Rev. W. E. C., M.A., Chaplain at Harrow and Cane Hill Mental Hospitals: 17,530, 17,554-629
 Chaplains, nature of work, &c. 17,530, 17,554-629
- BARNSELEY, Brig.-Gen. Sir JOHN, D.L., V.D., J.P.: ... 1776-2015
 Asylums, visitation by justices, proposal 1881-911, 1930-41
 Birmingham, number of lunatics, accommodation, &c. ... 1969-72, 1975, 1980-90
 Certification of private patients 1827, 1965, 1979
 Certificates, pauper ... 1807-12, 1942-50
 Clinics for outpatients ... 1834-5, 1966
 Justices of the Peace, duties of, and proceedings before ... 1782-824, 1926-9, 1973-4, 1991-2015
 Licensed houses ... 1818-24
 Mental Treatment Bill ... 1951-60
 Poor Law infirmaries 1796-803, 1813-7, 1925, 1929
 Reception houses ... 1834-80, 1951-60
- BARR, Sir JAMES, C.B.E., D.L., M.D., F.R.C.P.: 7040-7165
 Certificates ... 7104-12
 Certification, protection of medical men 7143-4, 7154-63
 Clinics ... 7079, 7145-8
 Contact with outside community ... 7152-3
 Detention, improper 7049, 7054-61, 7113-6, 7132-6
 Discharge ... 7140-2
 Judicial authority, proceedings before 7098-103, 7125-31
 Justice of the Peace, proceedings before ... 7149-51
 Leave of absence on trial ... 7061-6
 Licensed houses, visitation ... 7052-61
 Non-certification of certifiable patient ... 7117-23
 Nursing homes ... 7163-5
 Observation period ... 7080
 Tuebrook Asylum ... 7052-61, 7067-9
 Voluntary boarders ... 7067-78, 7081-90
- BEARD, Sir LEWIS, on behalf of the Association of Municipal Corporations: 19,412-565
 Board of Control ... 19,547-52
 Discharge ... 19,475-80, 19,484-94
 Justices of the Peace, procedure before 19,497-544, 19,561, 19,564
 Lunacy administration ... 19,547-9
 Mental hospitals, transfer of senile cases to work-houses ... 19,415-52
 Mental Treatment Bill ... 19,453, 19,554-6
 Petition ... 19,559-61
 Propaganda work ... 19,459-66
 Treatment without certification 19,453, 19,465-70
 Urgency orders ... 19,509-10, 19,540-1, 19,545
 Visiting Committees ... 19,562-4, 19,471-5
- BLOOD, WALTER; GIBSON, GEORGE; and WIESE, Miss MAUD, National Asylum Workers' Union: ... 11,835-12,451
- CARE AND TREATMENT:
 Bathing ... 12,389-91
 Bed time ... 12,055-74
 Clothing ... 12,244-6
 Diet ... 12,037, 12,229-40, 12,407-11
 Drugs ... 12,212-6, 12,355-6, 12,428-33
 Ill-treatment ... 12,187-8, 12,201
 Recreation and employment 12,247-52, 12,362-6
 Remedial treatment... 12,197-9, 12,201
 Classification ... 12,137-42
 Control ... 12,241-3, 12,261-84
 Discharge ... 12,202-11
 Government grant ... 12,285-8
 Licensed houses... 12,289-323, 12,367-88, 12,392-400
 Medical superintendent ... 12,328-41
 Mental Health Authority ... 12,425-7
 National Asylum Workers' Union ... 11,852-76
- NURSING STAFF:
 Accommodation ... 12,357-61
 Charge nurses ... 11,911-22, 12,044-6, 12,087
 Disablement ... 12,153-74
 Dismissal, power of ... 12,328-44

BLOOD, WALTER, etc.—cont.

NURSING STAFF—cont.

Female:

Employment in male wards	12,110-52, 12,175
Prospects	11,990-3
Hours and leave	11,887-94, 12,055, 12,068-9, 11,932, 11,937-69, 11,994-2000, 12,442-6, 12,450-1, 12,681-2.
Key chains	12,253-9
Periods of service	11,971-2, 11,975, 11,980, 12,080-3, 12,401-3
Private nursing	12,008-26
Probationers	11,877-92, 11,895-903, 11,923-9, 12,413-4
Registration	12,175-80
Remuneration	11,930-1, 12,001, 12,027-53, 12,404-5
Superannuation	12,345-7
Training and examinations	11,895-909, 11,924, 11,932, 11,937-69, 11,994-2000, 12,442-6, 12,450-1, 12,681-2
Understaffing	12,198-9, 12,201
Registered hospitals	12,373-9, 12,392-4
Single care	12,312
Treatment without certification	12,324-8, 12,415-24, 12,440-1.
Visitation	12,189-93, 12,217-22

BOARD OF CONTROL, evidence on behalf of, see Willis, Sir Frederick J., K.B.E., C.B., Macleod, S. J. Fraser, K.C., and Bond, Dr. C. H., C.B.E., D.Sc., M.D., F.R.C.P. 1-944, 21,260-400

BODKIN, Sir ARCHIBALD, K.C.B.: 17,630-17,763
Lunacy Act, Part XI, anomalies in 17,630-763

BOND, Dr. C. H., C.B.E., D.Sc., M.D., F.R.C.P., see Willis, Sir Frederick J., &c. 1-944, 21,260-400

BONE, Dr. J. W., M.B., C.M., on behalf of British Medical Association, see Langdon-Down, Dr. R., &c. 7796-8215, 13,500-719

BOYLE, Dr. HELEN, see Chichester, Countess of, and Boyle, Dr. Helen 18,501-18,759

BRITISH MEDICAL ASSOCIATION, evidence on behalf of, see Langdon-Down, Dr. R. &c. 7796-8215, 13,500-13,719

BROCK, L. G., C.B., Assistant Secretary, Ministry of Health: 1066-1222
Board of Control, relations of Ministry of Health with 1127-34, 1136-41, 1082-9, 1106-8, 1189-90, 1193-5
Buildings 1087-9, 1098-103, 1213
Certification 1174
Detention, wrongful 1139-40, 1174
Discharge 1163-71, 1174-80
Health, Ministry of, powers re lunacy administration, &c. 1070-82, 1096-141, 1181-2, 1191-2, 1195-208, 1215-3
Home Office, powers re lunacy administration 1076, 1090-5
Ill-treatment, complaints of 1195-208
Medical treatment 1128-9, 1142-62, 1209-10, 1215-6, 1219-21

BROOME GILES, Colonel P., C.B., F.R.C.S., J.P.: 3599-3711
After care 3664
Alcoholism 3709-10
Certificates 3699-708
Discharge 3692-7
Ill-treatment 3660-4
Judicial authority, proceedings before, and interview with patient 3606-16, 3621-8, 3669-70, 3674-85, 3690-1
Justices, interview with patient 3686-8
Observation period 3632-4, 3637-47
Visitation, interview with patients 3655-60, 3665-7, 3672-3

BUZZARD, Dr. E. FARQUHAR, M.D., F.R.C.P., MILLER Dr. H. CRICHTON, M.D., and WORTH, Dr. R., O.B.E., M.B., on behalf of the National Council for Mental Hygiene: 17,288-17,433

Board of Control 17,403, 17,419-26

BUZZARD, Dr. E. FARQUHAR, M.D., F.R.C.P., etc.—cont.

Clinics	17,293-8, 17,372-402, 17,414
Consultants	17,344-52
Incipient cases	17,364-71, 17,431-3
Medical superintendent	17,333-41
National Council for Mental Hygiene	17,288-90
Non-volitional cases	17,323
Nursing homes	17,299-332, 17,428-30
Provisional Orders	17,390-3
Psychiatry, education in	17,291-5
Suicides, potential	17,403-16
Treatment without certification	17,417
Voluntary patients	17,323-32

C, Miss: 14,394-14,600
After care 14,510-21, 14,593
Care and treatment 14,482-97, 14,502, 14,568-73
Certification 14,457-61, 14,466-501, 14,524-6, 14,538-56, 14,578-80
Discharge 14,593
Escape 14,462-3
Licensed house, experience of, and objections to 14,404, 14,411-55, 14,474-7, 14,557-77, 14,584-6, 14,595-600
Mental hospitals, grounds 14,502-7
Nursing staff 14,498-9, 14,500-1, 14,528-37, 14,581-3
Private patients, accommodation for 14,405-10
Treatment without certification 14,522-3
Visitation by Commissioners 14,587-92

CARSWELL, Dr. JOHN, F.R.F.P.S. (Glasgow), L.R.C.P. (Edinburgh): 16,470-16,598
GLASGOW:

Hospitals and accommodation for mental cases 16,523-34

Observation wards 16,474-83, 16,515-23, 16,535, 16,545-59, 16,574-91

Mental Board of Health 16,592

Mental Medical Officer of Health 16,593

Mentally defective children 16,594

Observation wards attached to general hospitals 16,538, 16,558-72, 16,574-6, 16,579-83, 16,596-7

Public Health Authority substitution for Poor Law authority 16,592-3

Specialty appointed certifying doctor 16,479, 16,482-520, 16,539-42

Treatment without certification 17,417

Voluntary patients, pauper 16,589

CENTRAL ASSOCIATION FOR MENTAL WELFARE, evidence on behalf of, see Tredgold, Alfred Frank, M.D., F.R.S. (Edin.), &c. 21,099-259

CHELMSFORD, the Rt. Rev. the Lord Bishop of, Chaplains, position of, and suggestions, re 17,434-17,553

CHICHESTER, the Countess of, and BOYLE, Dr. HELEN: 18,501-18,759
Boarding out 18,666
Lady Chichester Hospital 18,501-610, 18,651, 18,659, 18,755-6

Clinics 18,554-9, 18,569-70, 18,604-6, 18,611-7, 18,622-9, 18,630-42, 18,645-8, 18,650, 18,671-4

Licensed houses 18,682-93, 18,706-8, 18,710-9, 18,723-6, 18,736-50

Mental hospitals, admission direct 18,733-4

Non-volitional cases 18,727-8

Private houses, freedom to take in patients 18,682-93, 18,706, 18,719, 18,740-50, 18,753-4

Provisional certificates 18,618, 18,627-8, 18,675-7, 18,726

Removal of patients from one home to another 18,694-705, 18,729-31, 18,757-9

Routine employment 18,584-6, 18,667-70

Social service 18,643-4

Treatment without certification 18,560-71, 18,653-66, 18,677-81

Voluntary boarders 18,751-2

- CHUBB, Sir CECIL, Bart., LL.B., proprietor of the Old Manor, Salisbury ... 6480-6891
Certificates ... 6672-80, 6707-15, 6719-21, 6817-20
Certification ... 6762-7, 6770, 6850-2, 6864-72
Detention, improper ... 6740-7
Discharge ... 6740-3
Escape ... 6598-607
Judicial authority, proceedings before
6680-701, 6716-22, 6845, 6860-1
Leave of absence on trial 6552-97, 6608-25, 6829-30
Licensed Houses, tenure ... 6796-800
Nursing staff 6646, 6650-6, 6659-63, 6821-2, 6887-8
Observation period ... 6731-9, 6753-68
Reception orders ... 6845, 6853-63
Salisbury, Old Manor ... 6482-6891
Urgency orders ... 6724-30
Visitation 6504-21, 6524-5, 6536-55, 6791-5, 6801-16,
6825-8, 6880-7
Voluntary boarders
6753-75, 6834-7, 6863-78, 6850-2, 6864-80
- COLE, Dr. R. H., M.D., F.R.C.P.; COLLINS,
Dr. M. A., O.B.E., M.D.; GOODALL, Dr. E.,
C.B.E., M.D., F.R.C.P.; LORD, Dr. J. R.,
C.B.E., M.B.; MENZIES, Dr. W. F., B.Sc.,
M.D., F.R.C.P.; MOTT, Sir FREDERICK W.,
K.B.E., LL.D., M.D., F.R.C.P., F.R.S., and WORTH, Dr. R., O.B.E., M.B., on behalf of the Medico-Psychological Association ... 16,599-
17,287
After care ... 17,242-71, 17,277-9
Board of Control ... 17,016-43
Cardiff, Clinic and hospital ...
16,650-1, 16,653, 16,816-48, 17,163
Certification 16,625, 16,633, 16,888-97, 16,907-11,
16,913, 16,963-5, 16,993-7015
Classification ... 16,948-53
Clinics 16,645-7, 16,650-1, 16,655, 16,691, 16,703-62,
16,766-79, 16,801-5, 16,808-15, 16,849-50,
16,914-7, 16,955-9, 17,287
Continuation reports and certificates ... 17,091-2
Discharge ... 16,872, 17,094-5
Disposal of cases between different types of institution ... 16,767-71, 16,801
Lady visitors ... 17,266-76
Licensed houses 17,044-62, 17,281-2, 17,286-7
Lunacy law ... 16,624-32, 16,634-5
Maudsley Hospital 16,799, 16,807-10, 17,106, 17,110,
17,118, 17,127, 17,173-4, 17,195
Medical education
17,099-116, 17,119-23, 17,126, 17,132-6, 17,164-7
Medical staff 17,110, 17,158-62, 17,196-200, 17,230-3
Medical Superintendents
17,124, 17,201-16, 17,219, 17,220-9, 17,233-41
Medico-Psychological Association 16,602-5, 16,613-9
Mental Treatment Bill ... 16,849-73, 17,179-83
NURSING STAFF:
Examination and training
16,606, 16,608-20, 17,168-71, 17,184-94
Female employment in male wards 17,063-89
Pauperisation ... 16,967-87, 16,990-1
Petition ... 16,966
Private patients ... 17,050
Provisional Orders
16,780-99, 16,877-913, 16,919-24, 16,928-32, 17,009
Psychiatric research
17,138-58, 17,163-4, 17,172-83, 17,194-5, 17,287
Psychology, London M.D. in ... 17,136-7
Single care ... 16,857-62, 17,282-5
Stigma ... 16,931-2, 16,934-48, 16,960-2
Treatment without certification ... 16,636-9
Voluntary boarders ... 16,718-20, 16,766
- COLLINS, Dr. M. A., O.B.E., M.D., on behalf of the Medico-Psychological Association, see Cole,
Dr. R. H., &c. ... 16,599-17,287
- COMRIE, Dr. JOHN D., M.A., B.Sc., M.D.,
F.R.C.P.: ... 16,262-16,469
Alcoholic cases ... 16,450-7
Classification ... 16,345-9, 16,351, 16,361-6, 16,385
Edinburgh Royal Infirmary, special ward for mental cases ... 16,264-469
Mechanical restraint ... 16,337-8
- COMRIE, Dr. JOHN D., M.A., B.Sc., M.D., F.R.C.P.—cont.
Special wards of general hospitals, advantages, &c.
16,385, 16,399-401, 16,439-49, 16,458-65
Treatment without certification ... 16,303-10
Voluntary patients, pauper ... 16,435
- CONNELL, Dr. O. G., M.C., L.R.C.P., Medical Superintendent, Norfolk County Mental Hospital: ... 4051-4244
After care ... 4143, 4190
Certification 4052-9, 4093-6, 4134, 4155-7, 4238-44
Discharge ... 4082-5, 4142-4
Employment of patients ... 4145-8, 4191-2
Ill-treatment ... 4072-9
Insanity, types of ... 4096
Justices ... 4211
Leave on trial ... 4236-7
Medical men, training ... 4212-3
Reception order ... 4090
Norfolk County Mental Hospital 4117-28, 4045-8,
4065-8, 4080-2, 4090, 4138-41, 4152-3, 4165-7,
4170-7, 4181-4, 4191-2, 4195-9, 4220-30
Recovery rate ... 4096
Treatment without certification 4098-9, 4100-2,
4108-16, 4136-7, 4158-64, 4205, 4214-9
Visitation ... 4060-4, 4069-71
- COUNTY COUNCILS' ASSOCIATION, evidence on behalf of, see Hodgson, Alderman Sir William 13,005-13,499
- COURTENAY LORD, Dr. C., M.R.C.S., L.R.C.P., on behalf of British Medical Association, see Langdon-Down, Dr. R., &c. ... 7796-8215
- CRAIG, Sir MAURICE, C.B.E., M.D., F.R.C.P.: 9123-9543, 20,689-21,000
Attorney, power of ... 20,913-9
Board of Control ... 20,697, 20,899-906, 20,929
Cassell Hospital ... 20,735-8, 20,974-6
CERTIFICATION: 9303-6, 9391-6, 9402-11, 20,697,
20,761, 20,771-4, 20,816-25, 20,841-4, 20,886,
20,930, 20,940-1, 20,981-4
Protection of medical men 20,755-70, 20,933-51
Charge against, Mr. H. ... 8832-57, 8870-85
Classification ... 20,780-4
Clinics 20,697, 20,727-34, 20,796-7, 20,826-63,
20,884, 20,960-1, 20,966-72
Delirious cases ... 20,697, 20,702-14
Guy's Hospital ... 20,697, 20,719-24, 20,727-34
Mr. H. case ... 9123-543
Insanity, definition difficulty ... 20,740-54
Licensed houses 20,697, 20,912, 20,924-8, 20,985-93
Lunacy Acts ... 20,697
Mental Hospitals ... 20,800-3, 20,811-2, 20,974-7
Medical staff ... 20,977-80
Nursing Homes ... 20,697, 20,909, 20,912-4
Poor Law Infirmary ... 20,809-10
Position of, as acting for Mr. H. and his brother 9357-70
Property ... 20,889-95
Provisional certification or notification
20,697, 20,861-4, 20,876, 20,888-96, 20,907
Psychiatric medicine training ... 20,994-1000
Reception wards ... 20,952-9
Single care ... 20,697, 20,910-3, 20,920-3
Treatment without certification ... 20,697, 20,726,
20,784-91, 20,807-10, 20,864-6, 20,899-903
Treatment of mental disease ... 20,697, 20,725,
20,794-5, 20,908
Violent cases ... 20,813-5
Voluntary boarders ... 20,697, 20,867-85
Wards in general hospitals ... 20,716-24, 20,792-3, 20,798-9, 20,807, 20,898
- CROSLAND, Mrs. CONSTANCE, M. R., member of the Managing Committee of The Retreat, York, see Yellowlees, Dr. Henry, O.B.E., M.D., and Crosland, Mrs. Constance, M. R. 5381-5851
- DEVINE, Dr. H., O.B.E., M.D., F.R.C.P., Medical Superintendent of Portsmouth Borough Mental Hospital: ... 4245-4560
After care ... 4383
Care ... 4346-7, 4350-1

DEVINE, Dr. H., O.B.E., M.D., F.R.C.P.—cont.

Certification

4265-76, 4384-8, 4502-3, 4528-35, 4540-1A, 4544

Children ... 4472

Chronic cases ... 4466

Continuation reports and certificates

4333-40, 4485-92

Detention ... 4288, 4343-9, 4431-4, 4457-60

Discharge ... 4373-9, 4498-9, 4555-60

Leave of absence, on trial ... 4452-6, 4555

Mental defectives ... 4514-7

Nursing staff ... 4468-71

Observation ... 4292-6

Poor Law Institutions, temporary detention in 4277-91, 4296

Portsmouth Borough Mental Hospital

4249-56, 4277-91, 4297-332, 4365-72, 4468-72,

4494-7, 4518-27, 4536-9, 4551-4

Public, education of ... 4423-30

Public Mental Hospitals, attachment to towns rather than large isolated institutions

4351-64, 4468

Reception of new cases ... 4297-332

Recovery rate ... 4551-2

Treatment without certification

4389-422, 4435-50, 4473-80, 4542-7, 4550

DIXON, Lt.-Col. J. FRANCIS, M.A., M.D., Medical

Superintendent of the City Mental Hospital,

Humberstone, Leicester: ... 3712-4050

After care ... 4036-7

Bathing arrangements ... 3956-63

Care of patients ... 3951, 3955-63, 3990-1

Certification

3780, 3867-74, 3909-22, 4006, 4017-20, 4029-32

Chronic cases ... 3905-7

Classification ... 3833-8

Correspondence ... 3955

DETENTION: ... 3975-9, 3983-7

Orders ... 3740-9, 3754-70, 3934-6, 4000-3

Safeguards ... 3827-9

Discharge ... 3799-811, 3814, 3901-3, 3941-6

Justices ... 3802-6, 3964-5, 4004-5

Leave, 48 hours ... 3750-3

Leave, on trial ... 4033-6

Leicester City Mental Hospital, Humberstone

3720-34, 3778, 3831-7, 3839-45, 3859-61, 3875-9,

3927-33, 3947-63, 3979-82, 3989-96, 4021-2,

4038-42, 4045-50

Medical superintendents ... 4007-11

Nursing staff ... 3846-59, 3929-33

Paranoiac patients, care of 3879-904, 3923, 3937-40

Publicity and public interest ... 3811-24

Reception of new patients 3788-99, 3837-8, 4023-5

Reception order ... 3968-70

Senile cases ... 3905-7, 3925-6

Treatment without certification ... 3908, 4012-6

Visitation by friends and relatives ... 3974

Voluntary boarders ... 3771-6

Week-end reports ... 3785, 3800, 3971-3

E., Mr.: ... 14,350-393

Ill-treatment ... 14,379-86

Wrongful detention ... 14,354-92

EDWARDS, Dr. F. H., Medical Superintendent,

Camberwell House: ... 6310-6479

Accommodation for private patients ... 6329-32

Camberwell House

6365-6, 6383-90, 6395, 6414-20, 6427-72, 6476

Certification, improper ... 6440

Convalescent and seaside homes ... 6400-5

Inspection ... 6399

Licensed houses

6315-28, 6333-46, 6349-83, 6394-8, 6400-5, 6421-5,

6472-6, 6478-9

Lunacy Act, Section 315 ... 6407-13, 6427-39

Nursing staff ... 6441-5

Voluntary boarders 6389-90, 6427-39, 6470-2, 6476

EDWARDS, Dr. F. H., M.D., M.R.C.P., on behalf of British Medical Association, see Langdon-

Down, Dr. R., &c. ... 7796-8215

FAUDEL-PHILLIPS, LIONEL L., governor of Bethlem Royal Hospital, see Phillips, Dr. J. G.

Porter, M.D., F.R.C.P., and Faudel-Phillips,

Lionel L. ... 5852-5981

FAWSSETT, Dr. FRANK, M.B., Medical Visitor to

Licensed Houses: ... 6892-7039

Licensed houses, visitation of, and safeguards against improper detention, &c.... 6894-7039

FLINT, J. W., J.P., Member of the Sheffield Board of Guardians and representing the Association of Poor Law Unions, see Probert, Rev. P. S. G.,

&c. ... 5982-6309

FORD, JAMES H., Clerk to the Leeds Union and representing the Association of Poor Law Unions, see Probert, Rev. P. S. G., &c. ... 5982-6309FOX, Miss EVELYN, see Tredgold, Alfred Frank,

M.D., F.R.S. (Edin.), &c. ... 21,099-259

FRANCIS, H. W. S., O.B.E., Assistant Secretary of the Ministry of Health: ... 1223-1473, 21,401-569

Health, Ministry of, Poor Law Division, powers and duties ... 1224-473

Old Age Pensions ... 21,530-52

"Pauper," stigma, attaching to term ... 1419-39

Pauper lunatics, statistics and distribution 1376-417

Poor law administration, question of transfer to lunacy authority ... 21,401-569

POOR LAW INFIRMARIES:

Insane patients 1266-82, 1286-97, 1442-6, 1449-52

Medical officers ... 1458-65, 1471

Officers, premature superannuation ... 1453-7

Regulations ... 1256-61

Treatment, complaints re

1285, 1295, 1300-50, 1466-70

Wrongful detention, complaints 1283-4, 1288-94

Relieving officers ... 1367-73

G., Mrs., Personal experiences ... 20,560-621

G., Miss, Personal experiences ... 20,428-20,559

GARDNER, Mrs. ROSE DUNN, J.P., L.C.C., see

Sidney, Hon. William, J.P., L.C.C., and

Gardner, Mrs. Rose Dunn, J.P., L.C.C.

19,002-19,411

GENERAL BOARD OF CONTROL, SCOTLAND,

evidence on behalf of, see Rose, Sir H. Arthur,

D.S.O., and Marr, Dr. Hamilton C.

14,901-15,683

GIBSON, GEORGE, General Secretary National

Asylum Workers' Union, see Blood, Walter, &c.

11,835-12,451

GILES, Dr. J. DUDGEON, M.D. Edin., and Medical

Superintendent of Salford Union Infirmary:

3010-3173

Code, simplification desirable ... 3095-9, 3114-6

Neurasthenic cases ... 3157-8

Observation period

3088-92, 3100-11, 3117, 3160, 3167-9

Poor Law institutions in provinces, temporary detention in ... 3031-7, 3066-7, 3139-49, 3171-2

Reception houses ... 3161-70

Relatives ... 3103, 3121-6

Salford Union Infirmary, mental cases, accommodation, procedure, &c. ... 3030-169

Stigma ... 3103, 3127-9, 3150, 3159

Treatment of mental cases in general hospital

3130-3

GILMOUR, Dr. RICHARD WITHERS, M.B.,

B.Sc. (Durham), M.R.C.S., L.R.C.P.:

18,390-500

Clinics attached to general hospitals 18,394-8,

18,411-31, 18,437-40, 18,444-7, 18,459, 18,470-867

St. Luke's Hospital Clinic ... 18,391-500

GLANVILL, Mrs. F. M., and HILL, GEORGE,

Wandsworth Board of Guardians: 18,248-18,389

Cane Hill, padded room ... 18,347-62

Classification ... 18,268-78, 18,294-5, 18,386-9

Clothing ... 18,363-4, 18,370-6

GLANVILL, Mrs. F. M., etc.—cont.

Guardians, further powers of investigation advocated	18,297-310, 18,344-6
Ill-treatment	18,297, 18,308, 18,312, 18,315
Maintenance, payment by Guardians	18,365-70
Puerperal cases	18,272, 18,291-4
Punishment	18,297, 18,305, 18,313-43
Visitation by Guardians	18,249-68, 18,280-90, 18,312, 18,379-81
GOODALL, Dr. E., C.B.E., M.D., F.R.C.P., on behalf of the Medico-Psychological Association. See Cole, Dr. R. H., &c	16,599-17,287
GOLLA, Dr. FREDERICK LUCIEN, Research work	21,001-98
GRAVES, Dr. T. C., B.Sc., F.R.C.S., Superintendent Rubery Hill and Hollymoor Asylums. See Lovey, William Edward, and Graves, Dr. T. C.	5206-380

H., Mr.:	8216-9122
Account of illness	8217
Action against Dr. Stilwell	8935-46

CERTIFICATION:

Dr. Dempster not a certifying doctor as a personal friend, Craig	9442-51
Negligence, complaint of	8262-363, 8817-922, 9039-79

Certification, neglect, reply to charges re, Craig	9207-50, 9267-78, 9307, 9396-401, 9490-505, 9514-9; Stoddart 9631-704; Smith 9950-68, 9983, 10,016-23, 10,129-32.
---	---

Charges at Moorcroft, Stilwell	9757-67
Conveyance to Moorcroft, 8368-94, 8923-30; Phillips	10,163-70, 10,173-5, 10,217-24.

Cheques paid by, 9084-91; Craig	9370-7, 9384-90.
Correspondence, complaint re treatment of, at Moorcroft	8595-6

Escape, telegram to Board of Control after	9020-30
--	---------

EXAMINATION OF:

by Elrich Adler, 8243-53, 8272, 8877; Craig	9155-68, 9312-26, 9338-53.
--	----------------------------

by Dr. McNaughton, 8517-24, 8526-47, 8782-90; Craig	9257-9, 9262.
--	---------------

by Dr. Porter Phillips, 8290-311, 8686-7, 8815-21, 8919-26; Craig	9243-7, 9354-7, 9421-7; Phillips 10,136-62, 10,176-248.
--	--

by Dr. R. P. Smith, 8262-71, 8312-62, 8815-21, 8886-918, 9039-74; Craig	9233-42, 9354-7, 9449; Smith 9950-70, 10,016-23, 10,129-32.
--	--

by Dr. Butter Stoddart, 8271-4, 8361, 8878-85; Craig	9207-15, 9371-7, 9514-9; Stoddart 9620-704.
---	--

Experiences at Teignmouth	9054-63
---------------------------	---------

General Paralysis of the Insane:

Diagnosis, Stoddart ...	9631, 9692-6
--------------------------------	--------------

Diagnosis and treatment, Craig	9166-204, 9262, 9264-78, 9312-53
---------------------------------------	----------------------------------

Diagnosis, probable wrong, Craig	9488-9
---	--------

Information not given to patient, Craig	9429-41
--	---------

Wrong diagnosis of	8247-59, 8361, 8438-46, 8526, 8536-45, 8660-87, 8701-2, 8738-53, 8853-8, 8870
--------------------	---

Interview with solicitor, Mr. Steele	8625-46, 8978-90
--------------------------------------	------------------

Life at Moorcroft and escape, 8393-549, 8771-92, 8801-16; Craig	9251-62; Stilwell 9852-926.
--	------------------------------------

Life at Moorcroft after recapture, 8561, 8935-51, 8992-9002, 9075-6; Craig	9279-300, 9473-6; Stilwell 9716-69, 9793-851, 9931-40; Smith 9973-8.
---	--

Life at Ticehurst and escape	8688-748
------------------------------	----------

Medical history, Craig ...	9124-78
-----------------------------------	---------

Medical treatment at Moorcroft, Stilwell ...	9874-95
---	---------

Position in relation to and interviews with, at Moorcroft, Steele	9546-616
--	----------

Removal from Moorcroft, steps taken by Mr. Steele, 8630; Steele	9592-610.
--	-----------

Removal to Ticehurst	8628
----------------------	------

Residence at Dr. Dempster's house, Croydon, and subsequent action against	8226-368, 9004-12, 9031-8, 9041-4
---	-----------------------------------

Residence with Dr. Dempster, Craig	9148-250
---	----------

Sitting room at Moorcroft, Steele	9611-5; Stilwell 9769-74, 9793-7.
--	--

Urgency order, reason for, Craig	9490-505, 9528-39; Stoddart 9636-9; Smith 9962-8, 10,002.
---	---

H., Mr.—cont.

Visits to, at Moorcroft, Craig	9452-72
Wife's attitude on, 8859-69, 9105-11; Craig	9145, 9146-8, 9148-52.

Will, proceedings re, Steele	9559-60, 9578-81, 9585, 9616
-------------------------------------	------------------------------

H., Miss: Personal experiences as nurse	19,566-19,811
---	---------------

HAWTHORNE, Dr. C. O., F.R.C.P., M.D., on behalf of British Medical Association, see Langdon-Down, Dr. R., &c.	7796-8215, 13,500-13,719
---	--------------------------

HEALTH, MINISTRY OF, evidence on behalf of, see Brock, L. G., C.B., 1066-1222, and Francis, H. W. S., O.B.E.	1223-1473, 21401-569
--	----------------------

HILDYARD, G. M., K.C., Master in Lunacy	18,025-18,247
---	---------------

Classification	18,205-17
----------------	-----------

Co-operative and Provident Societies	18,101-9
--------------------------------------	----------

Guardians	18,070-3
-----------	----------

Inquisition	18,033, 18,041-53
-------------	-------------------

Licensed houses	18,231-40
-----------------	-----------

Maintenance, payment for, methods	18,082-8
-----------------------------------	----------

Master in Lunacy, functions, &c.	18,025-35, 18,039, 18,085, 18091-6
----------------------------------	------------------------------------

Old Age Pensions	18,109-18
------------------	-----------

Private patients, accommodation	18,231-47
---------------------------------	-----------

Property and estates, administration	18,057-81, 18,085, 18,091-100, 18,119-66, 18,170-204, 18,218-30
--------------------------------------	---

HILL, GEORGE, see Glanvill, Mrs. F. M., and Hill, George, Wandsworth Board of Guardians	18,248-18,389
---	---------------

HODGSON, Alderman Sir WILLIAM, on behalf of the Mental Hospitals Association, see Taggart, Alderman J. G., J.P., and Hodgson, Alderman Sir William	13,005-13,499
--	---------------

KEENE, HENRY FURSE, O.B.E., Chief Officer of the Mental Hospitals Department of the London County Council:	4699-5071
--	-----------

Accommodation and buildings	4727-9
-----------------------------	--------

After care	5008-9
------------	--------

Complaints by patients	4870-908, 4978-89, 5045-65
------------------------	----------------------------

Chargeability	4853-7, 4862-4
---------------	----------------

Chronic and harmless cases	4920-9
----------------------------	--------

Correspondence	4900-5, 4984-9
----------------	----------------

Dietary	4747-58, 4955
---------	---------------

Discharge	4744-5, 4960-74, 5012-5
-----------	-------------------------

Leave of absence on trial	4782-9
---------------------------	--------

Local Authority, powers and duties	4702-19, 4729, 4734
------------------------------------	---------------------

London County Council, lunacy administration	4703, 4715-8, 4848, 4852, 4858-61
--	-----------------------------------

LONDON MENTAL HOSPITALS:
--------------------------	--

Admissions, &c.	4792-801, 4909-19, 5018-33
-----------------	----------------------------

Committee and Sub-Committees	4709-13, 4840-4, 4865-9, 4975
------------------------------	-------------------------------

Domestic staff	5040-5
----------------	--------

Maintenance charge	4813, 4830-7
--------------------	--------------

Medical staff	4759-63, 4938-41, 5001, 5017
---------------	------------------------------

Nursing staff	4764-81, 4942, 4944-51, 4990-5007
---------------	-----------------------------------

Private patients in	4790-3, 4802-13, 4816-22, 4848-54, 4956-9, 5035-9, 5065-71
---------------------	--

Structural alterations	4723-7
------------------------	--------

Maudsley Hospital	4930-7
-------------------	--------

Special Acts	4714
--------------	------

Visitation, unpaid visitors	4892-4
-----------------------------	--------

Visiting Committees	4706-13, 4719, 4723-45, 4823-6, 4829, 4926, 4975
---------------------	--

L., Mr.:	20,316-427
-----------------	------------

Certification	20,417, 20,420
---------------	----------------

Classification	20,344
----------------	--------

Complaints by patients	20,420
------------------------	--------

Correspondence	20,389, 20,394-404
----------------	--------------------

Criminal Lunatics Act, patients under	20,415
---------------------------------------	--------

Discharge	20,352-4, 20,356-61, 20,374-7, 20,410, 20,417-9, 20,427
-----------	---

Food	20,366-70, 20,372, 20,386, 20,390-2
------	-------------------------------------

Ill-treatment	20,380-6, 20,417
---------------	------------------

Leave of absence on trial	20,415
---------------------------	--------

L., Mr.—cont.

- Medical staff ... 20,366
 Medical Superintendent ... 20,366, 20,370
 Nursing staff ... 20,366
 Parole ... 20,348-51, 20,401A-3, 20,414
 Recreation and exercise ... 20,339-48, 20,370
 Visitation by Visiting Committee ... 20,370
- LANGDON-DOWN, Dr. R., M.B., M.R.C.P.
 (London); BONE, Dr. J. W., M.B., C.M.
 (Luton); EDWARDS, Dr. F. H., M.D.,
M.R.C.P. (London); HAWTHORNE, Dr. C. O.,
F.R.C.P., M.D. (London); MASTERMAN, Dr.
E. W. G., M.D., F.R.C.S. (London);
MURRELL, Dr. CHRISTINE, M.D. (London);
VERRALL, Sir JENNER, LL.D., L.R.C.P.,
M.R.C.S. (Leatherhead); and LORD, Dr. C.
COURTENAY, M.R.C.S., L.R.C.P., British
Medical Association 7796-8215, 13,500-13,719
 After-care ... 13,594-614, 13,617-25, 13,710-4
 Approved homes ... 7893-6
 Board of Control ... 13,706-7
 Certificates ... 7963-86, 7989-8012
 Certification: ... 7924-60
 Protection of medical practitioners
 8014-64, 13,679-703
 Reluctance of doctors 8011-12, 8024-6, 8048-9
 Clinics ... 13,626-45, 13,648-50, 13,656-9, 13,704-5
 Clothing ... 7910-9
 Detention, wrongful ... 7819-22, 7924
 Judicial authority and justices
 7936-60, 7987, 8013, 13,660-78
 Licensed houses 13,500-12,
 13,516, 13,519-39, 13,543-59, 13,708-9, 13,715-9
 Lunacy Act, Section 315 ... 7854-60, 7869-79
 Medical Superintendent ... 13,560-93
 Mental Treatment Bill ... 8164
 Observation period ... 7839-44
 Reception and clearing houses 8068-139, 8178-90
 Reception Order ... 7910
 Temporary Orders ... 7942
 Terminology 7824-30,
 7845-52, 7858, 7861-8, 7880-92, 7897-908, 8205-7
 Urgent cases 8080-92, 8177-85, 8186-9, 8190-214
 Voluntary boarders ... 8140-75
 Voluntary treatment ... 7800-8
- LEACH, R. A., Clerk to the Rochdale Union and representing Association of Poor Law Unions.
see Propert, Rev. P. S. G., &c. 5982-6309
- LEWIS, Dr. HERBERT WOLSELEY, M.D.,
F.R.C.S., Medical Superintendent, Kent County
Mental Hospital, Maidstone: ... 4561-4698
 Certification ... 4584-5, 4632-3
 Clinics 4566-782, 4585-7, 4590-9, 4664-6, 4677
 Conveyance to asylum ... 4645
 Detention and discharge
 4605-35, 4649-56, 4674, 4679-84
 English Lunacy Legislation Committee ... 4697-8
 Justices of the Peace ... 4657-63
 Maidstone, Kent County mental hospital
 4618, 4646-8, 4675-6
 Nursing staff ... 4648, 4667-72, 4675-6
 Poor Law ... 4579, 4636, 4641-3
 Voluntary boarders ... 4585, 4600-4
- LIDBETTER, ERNEST JAMES, President of the National Association of Relieving Officers:
 1474-1775
 After-care ... 1751
 Asylum accommodation ... 1709-20
 Certification 1523-4, 1532-5, 1540-8, 1552-3, 1558-65,
 1570-8, 1596-7, 1581-94, 1726, 1748-55,
 1758-62
 Clinics, for out-patients ... 1751
 Judicial authority, interview with patient important ... 1563, 1569-73
 Justices, difficulty in getting hold of ... 1721-6
 Juveniles ... 1726-9
 Lunatic wandering at large ... 1554-6, 1763-4
 Lunatic not wandering at large, &c.
 1485-96, 1526, 1537-8
 Observation period 1613-7, 1655-84, 1707-8, 1732-4
 Pauper, statutory definition ... 1490
 Poor Law Infirmaries 1485-520, 1549-51, 1608-43,
 1650-4, 1685-91, 1696-703, 1712-6, 1766-71

LIDBETTER, ERNEST JAMES—cont.

- Property ... 1601, 1604-6
 Reception houses ... 1742-51, 1772
 Records ... 1748-9, 1751
 Relieving officers, appointment, powers, &c.
 1480-3, 1485-551, 1554-61, 1598-607, 1693-4,
 1704-6, 1767
 Senile dementia ... 1726, 1737-9
- LOBOIT, WILLIAM GEORGE, O.B.E., J.P.,
 Chairman of Visiting Committee of Middlesex
 Mental Hospitals and of Mental Hospitals Committee for Middlesex: ... 5072-5205
 After-care ... 5150-1
- CARE:
 Access to independent person ... 5091-105
 Complaints by patients ... 5095-6, 5100, 5197-202
 Correspondence ... 5103-5
 Outside doctor ... 5193-6
 Employment ... 5172-3
 Certification 5108-23, 5128-9, 5142-9, 5170, 5182-3
 5203-5
 Continuation orders ... 5180-1
 Detention, improper ... 5084
 Discharge ... 5157-67, 5184-90
 Justices, Special ... 5170-1
 Reception houses ... 5125-7
 Urgency orders ... 5142-9
 Visiting Committees ... 5088-105, 5154-6, 5200
 Voluntary boarders ... 5129-41, 5176-9
- LOMAX, Dr. MONTAGU, M.R.C.S.: 12,452-13,004
 Admission of person no longer insane ... 12,977-87
 Board of Control ... 12,873-94
 Boarding out system ... 12,775-6
- CARE AND TREATMENT:
 Bedtime ... 12,991
 Croton oil ... 12,996-8
 Food ... 12,988-92
 Ill-treatment ... 12,692, 12,704-31, 12,754-68
 Certification 12,553-6, 12,818-53, 12,956-62, 13,002-4
 Clinics ... 12,974
 Convalescence ... 12,870-2
 Coroners ... 12,732-47
 Detention ... 12,769-80
 Discharge ... 12,517-20, 12,812-4
 Infirmary wards ... 12,946
 Licensed houses ... 12,901-34, 12,940-2
 Nursing staff 12,668-72, 12,674-5, 12,678-80, 12,993-5
 Observation period ... 12,866
 Medical staff ... 12,588-609
 Medical Superintendent
 12,465-520, 12,562, 12,568-9, 12,571-3, 12,576-85
- MENTAL HOSPITALS:
 Classes of patients that should and should not be dealt with in ... 12,528-56
 Executive officer ... 12,570-5
 Hospital cases 12,534, 12,609-10, 12,999-3000
 Size ... 12,515-7
 "Pauperisation" ... 12,944-6
 Reception houses ... 12,861-5
 Visiting Committees
 12,615-21, 12,626-42, 12,645, 12,649, 12,659-67
 Voluntary boarders ... 12,866, 12,976
 Workers, patients employed as 12,555, 12,776-80
- LONDON COUNTY COUNCIL, representatives, *see
Sidney, Hon. William, J.P., and Gardner, Mrs.
Rose Dunn, J.P. ... 19,002-19,411
- LORD, Dr. J. R., C.B.E., M.B., on behalf of the Medico-Psychological Association, see Cole, Dr.
R. H., &c. ... 16,599-17,287
- LORD, WILLIAM HENRY, Justice of the Peace:
 2181-2304
 Certification ... 2190-293
 Lunacy Acts, working of, in Birmingham 2181-304
 Observation period ... 2248-51, 2283, 2289
- LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT, evidence on behalf of, see Schuster, Sir Claud, K.C.B., C.V.O., K.C. ... 945-1065
- LOVSEY, WILLIAM EDWARD, Chairman of the Birmingham Asylums Committee, &c., and
GRAVES, Dr. F. C., B.Sc., F.R.C.S.: 5206-380
 Birmingham asylums, admission method ... 5290-2
 Certification ... 5213-4, 5218-46, 5294, 5364

LOVSEY, WILLIAM EDWARD, etc.—cont.

Complaints by patients	5257-9, 5268-72, 5275-9, 5339-59
Detention, wrongful	5313-33
Discharge	5260-7, 5296-310, 5313-33
Ill-treatment	5275-8
Leave of absence on trial	5366-9
Lunacy administration	5280-5
Nursing staff	5273-4
Re-admissions	5375-80
Senile cases	5247-9, 5286-8, 5370-4
Visitation by Voluntary visitors	5337-8
Visiting Committees	5335-6
Voluntary boarders	5250-3

M., Mr., Personal experience as attendant

19,812-20,038

M., Mrs.:	13,720-14,192
Admission and reception	13,832-63, 13,925-38
Bathing and washing arrangements	13,952-73, 14,013-26

Care and treatment	13,730-3, 13,777-81, 13,939-49, 13,977-14,012, 14,027-9, 14,032-43
--------------------	--

Certification	13,796-821
Clothing	13,974-6, 13,988-95
Conveyance to hospital	13,825-31
Correspondence	14,055-96
Diet	14,095
Discharge	14,113-27, 14,178-89
Illness of	13,738-64
Infirmaries	13,729-30, 13,765-824
Lavatory accommodation	13,880-8, 13,910-4
Medicines	13,880, 13,889-910, 13,968-9
Nursing staff	13,729, 13,789-93, 13,864-78, 13,943-5, 13,949-50
Padded cells	13,915-22, 14,143-6
Receiving ward	13,949-50
Refractory wards	14,056-8, 14,082, 14,103-7, 14,128-57, 14,162-76
Visitation by relatives and friends	14,051-4
Voluntary treatment	14,109-15, 14,171-2, 14,176

MACLEOD, S. J. FRASER, K.C., see Willis, Sir Frederick J., &c.

1-944, 21,260-400

MAPOTHER, Dr. EDWARD, M.R.C.P., F.R.C.S.:

18,760-19,001

Qualifications, etc.	18,761-76
Classification	18,781, 18,783-6, 18,886-900, 18,913-7
Clinics	18,789-814, 18,860-1, 18,865-6, 18,919-22, 18,943-8, 18,959-60, 18,969-70
Convalescent homes	18,946, 18,953
Food	18,992
Grant	18,989-90
Maudsley Hospital	18,777, 18,787-8, 18,793-805, 18,811-3, 18,839-40, 18,853-9, 18,905-10, 18,918, 18,955-8, 18,976-7, 18,984, 18,992

MENTAL HOSPITALS:

Class of cases suitable for	18,843-5, 18,961-2
Size	18,862-4
Nursing homes	18,819-33, 18,868
Nursing staff	18,903-7
Observation hospitals	18,846-52, 18,923-42, 18,945-53, 18,959-60, 18,963, 18,969-70, 18,991
Private patients, accommodation	18,868
Registered hospitals	18,881-5
Research	18,976-7, 18,979-88
Single care	18,868-80
Treatment without certification	18,834-7
Villa system	18,993-19,001

MARR, Dr. HAMILTON C., Senior Commissioner, General Board of Control for Scotland, see Rose, Sir H. Arthur, D.S.O., and Marr, Dr. Hamilton C.

14,901-15,683

MASTER IN LUNACY, see Hildyard, G.M., K.C., 18,025-18,247

MASTERMAN, Dr. E. W. G., M.D., F.R.C.S., on behalf of British Medical Association, see Langdon-Down, Dr. R., etc.

7796-8215, 13,500-13,719

MEDICO-PSYCHOLOGICAL ASSOCIATION OF GREAT BRITAIN AND IRELAND, evidence on behalf of, see Cole, Dr. R. H., etc.

16,599-17,287

MENTAL AFTER CARE ASSOCIATION, evidence on behalf of, see Vickers, Miss 7695-795

MENTAL HOSPITALS ASSOCIATION, evidence on behalf of, see Taggart, Alderman J. G., J.P., and Hodgson, Alderman Sir William

13,005-13,499

MENZIES, Dr. W. F., B.Sc., M.D., F.R.C.P., on behalf of the Medico-Psychological Association, see Cole, Dr. R. H., etc.

16,599-17,287

MILLER, Dr. H. CRICHTON, M.D., on behalf of the National Council for Mental Hygiene, see Buzzard, Dr. E., Farquhar, etc.

17,288-17,433

MOTT, Sir FREDERICK W., K.B.E., LL.D., M.D., F.R.C.P., F.R.S., on behalf of the Medico-Psychological Association, see Cole, Dr. R. H., etc.

16,599-17,287

MURRELL, Dr. CHRISTINE, M.D., on behalf of British Medical Association, see Langdon-Down, Dr. R., etc.

7796-8215, 13,500-13,719

NATIONAL ASSOCIATION OF MASTERS AND MATRONS OF POOR LAW INSTITUTIONS, evidence on behalf of, see Senior, Harold, and Usher, George

3174-3539

NATIONAL ASSOCIATION OF RELIEVING OFFICERS, evidence on behalf of, see Lidbetter, Ernest James

1474-1775

NATIONAL ASYLUM WORKERS' UNION, evidence on behalf of, see Blood, Walter, etc.

11,835-12,451

NATIONAL COUNCIL FOR MENTAL HYGIENE, evidence on behalf of, see Buzzard, Dr. E. Farquhar, etc.

17,288-17,433

NATIONAL SOCIETY FOR LUNACY REFORM, evidence on behalf of, see Parker, Robert Montgomery Birch

10,346-11,834

O., Mr., personal experiences

20,039-237

P., Mr.:

14,193-349

Attendants

14,339-48

CARE AND TREATMENT:

Bed time	14,277-9
Closet accommodation	14,241-52
Curative treatment	14,289-95
Employment	14,285-7, 14,296-9
Food	14,275-6
Ill-treatment	14,340-8
Medicine	14,242, 14,295
Washing and bathing arrangements	14,239-41, 14,253-63

Certification

14,210-19

Classification

14,220-4, 14,237

Conveyance to asylum

14,210

Discharge

14,306, 14,318-25

General Paralysis of the Insane, wrong diagnosis

14,328-37

Illness of 14,201-7

Infirmaries

14,210

Parole system

14,264-72

Visitation

14,300-17

Voluntary treatment

14,208

PARKER, ROBERT MONTGOMERY BIRCH,

Chairman of the National Society for Lunacy Reform:

10,346-11,834

After-care

11,801

Board of Control

10,396-406, 10,438-40, 10,449-54, 10,456, 10,469-73, 10,476, 11,111-6, 11,801

Boarding out

11,124, 11,127-8

Buildings

11,677, 11,783-6

CARE AND TREATMENT:

Bathing

11,730-1

Books and periodicals

11,748-50, 11,760, 11,762-73

Case books

11,331-4, 11,627-30

Contact with outside world

10,594-5

Correspondence

11,060-86, 11,801

Curative treatment

11,661-75, 11,801

Diet

11,714-28, 11,820-5

PARKER, ROBERT MONTGOMERY BIRCH, etc.—cont.

- Drugs ... 11,464-8, 11,472-578, 11,801
 Employment ... 11,654-9, 11,743-5, 11,752-9
 Environment 11,649-54, 11,746-7, 11,761, 11,801
 Examination of lunatic ... 11,103-4, 11,801
 Hours of rising and going to bed 11,777-82
 Ill-treatment ... 11,432-54, 11,459-64
 Information as to rights 11,097-102, 11,801
 Latrines ... 11,579-92
 Medical treatment facilities 11,678-93
 Parole ... 11,774-7
 Punishment
 11,488-9, 11,494-9, 11,501, 11,503, 11,514-8, 11,522, 11,601-25, 11,631-3
 Recreation ... 11,654-9
 Shaving ... 11,733-8
 Visits by personal doctor ... 11,104
 Central administration and certain localisation
 10,441-8, 10,458-74A, 11,801
 Certification ... 10,608-10, 10,721-1036, 11,801
 Classification ... 11,660, 11,790-7, 11,801
 Convalescence ... 10,659-79
 Detention, improper ... 11,209
 Discharge 10,658-720, 11,131-235, 11,801, 11,826-34
 Hospital visitors ... 10,590-5
 Hulk Mental Hospital ... 11,738-41
 "Insanity," definition question 10,645-720, 11,798
 Internal administration ... 11,640-3
 Leave of absence ... 11,106-23
 Licensed houses ... 11,287-329, 11,801
LUNACY ACT:
 Section 22 ... 11,045-6, 11,051-6
 Synopsis for public ... 11,046-50
 Lunacy law ... 10,415-27, 10,430-2
 Medical staff ... 11,801
 Medical superintendents 11,335-426, 11,640, 11,801
 Mental hospitals, size ... 11,366-8, 11,801
 Month-end reports ... 11,058-9
 National Society for Lunacy Reform
 10,346-64, 10,376

- Nursing staff
 11,433, 11,451, 11,455-6, 11,706, 11,710, 11,801
 Observation period ... 10,479-82
 Provisional order ... 10,483-5
 Recovery rates ... 11,694-703
 Royal Commission ... 10,434-8, 10,445
 Single care ... 11,315-6
 Treatment without certification 10,596-606, 11,801
 "Unsound mind" ... 10,437
 Urgency orders 10,614A, 10,616-41, 10,818-25, 11,471
 Visitation ... 11,087-95, 11,239-85, 11,801
 Voluntary boarders 10,487-96, 10,500-74A, 11,801

PHILLIPS, Dr. JOHN GEORGE PORTER, M.D.,

- F.R.C.P.: ... 10,133-10,345
 Certification 10,249-55, 10,266-306, 10,312-6
 Charges against, Mr. H. ... 8815-57
 Examination by, Mr. H.
 8290-311, 8686-7, 8815-21, 8919-26
 Mr. H. case ... 10,136-62, 10,176-248
 Observation period ... 10,308-11
 Voluntary boarders 10,307, 10,321, 10,326-45

PHILLIPS, Dr. JOHN GEORGE PORTER, M.D.,

- F.R.C.P., and FAUDEL-PHILLIPS, LIONEL
 L., Bethlem Royal Hospital, &c.: 5852-981
 Accommodation for private patients ... 5980-1
 Bethlem Royal Hospital
 5861-75, 5915, 5918-21, 5931-56, 5959-67, 5974-5
 Certificates ... 5978-9, 5896-8
 Clinics, out-patient ... 5894, 5899-901, 5976-7
 Mental Hospitals Association ... 5926-9
 Nursing staff ... 5915-8
 Observation period ... 5880-95, 5909-12, 5957-8
 St. Bartholomew's Hospital, out-patient mental department ... 5902-8
 Stigma ... 5959-60
 Terminology ... 5913-4
 Voluntary boarders ... 5861-78, 5953-8, 5968-73

PROPERT, Rev. P. S. G.; LEACH, R. A.; FORD, JAMES H., and FLINT, J. W., J.P., on behalf of the Association of Poor Law Unions:

5982-6309

PROPERT, Rev. P. S. G., etc.—cont.

- Admission to asylum direct ... 6089-101
 Admission of new cases ... 6139-42
 Certification and reception
 6031-5, 6038-46, 6079-88, 6293-4
 Certificates ... 6049-50, 6111-6, 6254-8
 Clothing ... 6172-3
 Discharge by Guardians ... 6283-6
 Fulham, observation wards 5998, 6010-3, 6036
 Inquests ... 6174-5
 Juveniles ... 6242-8, 6275-8
 Lancashire cases ... 6183-93
 Leeds infirmary ... 6197, 6198, 6213-7
LUNACY ACT:
 Sections 13 and 14 ... 6081-8, 6232-7, 6249-53
 Section 20 ... 6090-2, 6099
 Lunacy administration ... 5986-90
 Nursing staff ... 6101-10, 6280
 Observation period ... 5993-5, 5997, 6224-9
 Paupers, temporary treatment of self-supporting person as ... 5998-6025, 6081-3, 6183-7, 6193
 Poor Law, stigma question 5998, 6002-5, 6023-4
POOR LAW INSTITUTIONS:
 Temporary detention in ... 6096-101
 Transfer to, from asylums 6143-71, 6198, 6239-41
 Poor Law Unions, Association of ... 6053-61
 Sheffield, cases ... 6225-8, 6259-74, 6303-8
 Statistics ... 6064-78
 Stigma ... 6212
 Terminology ... 6021, 6176-9
 Treatment ... 6026-30
 Treatment without certification
 6042, 6064-78, 6117-27, 6196-212, 6278-9,
 6281-2, 6308-9
 Visitation by Guardians ... 6128-38
 Voluntary boarders ... 6281

ROBERTSON, Professor GEORGE M., M.D.,

- F.R.C.P. (Edin.): ... 15,684-16,261
 Boarding out ... 16,032-5
 Certification
 15,736-7, 15,750, 15,757-84, 15,822-52, 15,879-82,
 15,888-9
 Classification ... 16,206-12
 Continuation reports and certificates 15,799-811
 Detention orders 15,738-66, 15,797-9, 15,822-31
 Drugs and sedatives 16,130-6, 16,174-9, 16,222-3
 Emergency certificates ... 15,812-9
 Epileptics ... 16,105-7
 Exercise ... 16,095-115
 Feeble-minded cases ... 16,189
 Ill-treatment ... 16,237-9
 Judicial procedure 15,740-56, 15,785-93, 16,169-73
 Juveniles ... 16,224-5
 Locked seclusion ... 16,121-9, 16,202-5
 Lunacy laws, administration in Scotland 15,928-33
 Mechanical restraint ... 16,129, 16,165
 Medical Superintendent ... 16,226-35, 16,240-61
 Mental excitement ... 16,144-68
 Mental hospitals, hospitalisation of 16,095-143, 16,197-205.

Morningside Royal Asylum

- 15,687-723, 15,812-20, 16,042, 16,069-71, 16,080-5, 16,111-3, 16,228-61
 Noisy patients ... 16,213-7
 Non-volitional cases ... 15,892-3
 Notification ... 15,832-52, 15,879-82, 15,899
 Nursing staff, female employment in male wards
 16,036-94
 Open door system ... 16,116-20
 Padded rooms ... 16,121-6, 16,165, 16,197
 Parole ... 16,118
 Private dwellings system ... 15,936-6035
 Provisional Order ... 15,936
 Psychiatric education ... 15,724-35
 Recreation ... 16,069-71
 Sterilization ... 16,180-95
 Treatment without certification ... 15,853-9
 Voluntary patients
 15,860-78, 15,884-6, 15,888, 15,890-929, 16,007-9, 16,217-21.

- ROSE, Sir H. ARTHUR, D.S.O., Chairman of the General Board of Control for Scotland; and MARR, Dr. HAMILTON C., Senior Commissioner: ... 14,901-15,683
- Accommodation ... 15,048-85
- Administration ... 14,940-67
- After care ... 15,653-4
- Boarding out ... 15,472-604
- CARE: ... 14,994-5, 15,286-306, 15,379
- Communication with outside world, ... 15,376-84
- Employment ... 15,665-6
- Food ... 15,655-8
- Certification ... 15,154-205, 15,216-31, 15,270-85
- Dangerous lunatics ... 15,240-6
- Detention 15,272, 15,275-80, 15,286, 15,293-4, 15,302
- Discharge 15,385-7, 15,391, 15,394-5, 15,401-20
- District Asylums 14,944-5, 15,058-64, 15,098-108, 15,111-2
- District Boards ... 15,388-93
- Emergency Orders ... 15,219, 15,232-5
- General Board of Control 14,908-9, 14,911-63, 14,970-5039, 15,093-6, 15,650-2, 15,655
- Grant ... 15,149-33, 15,673
- Ill-treatment ... 15,010-26, 15,030-2, 15,034
- Inspector of the Poor ... 15,677-83
- Licensed houses ... 15,478, 15,495-502, 15,533
- Lunatics, statistics 15,042-7, 15,086-8, 15,127-36
- Medical Superintendent ... 15,658-67
- Nursing staff, female, employment for male cases 15,668-72
- Observation wards ... 15,251-62, 15,269, 15,611-2
- Parochial Asylum ... 15,070-6, 15,110
- Pass system ... 15,396-9
- Petition ... 15,175-82
- Poorhouses, lunatic wards 15,076-80, 15,422, 15,426-42, 15,445-8, 15,451-68, 15,670-1, 15,674-6
- Private Asylums, 15,066-9, 15,109, 15,114-5, 15,118
- Private dwellings ... 15,083
- Private patients ... 15,056, 15,090-2, 15,105-17
- Probation system ... 15,396
- Royal and Chartered Asylums 15,048-57, 15,090-6, 15,113-7, 15,120-82, 15,205-39
- Treatment without certification 15,605-10, 15,614-7, 15,619-22, 15,626-49
- Visitation ... 15,376-8, 15,381-4
- Voluntary boarders ... 15,307-375
- SANDERS, Councillor C. F., J.P., Cardiff: 2305-2448
- Cardiff, working of Lunacy Acts ... 2305-47
- Justices, proceedings before 2323-35, 2396-402, 2406-18, 2554-70
- Reception houses ... 2424-5
- Section 13 ... 2336-42
- Treatment without certification ... 2411-3
- Visitation ... 2373-87
- SANDHURST, The Lord: ... 17,764-18,024
- After care ... 17,921-7, 17,934-40, 18,016-7
- Certification ... 17,820-1, 17,835-9
- Chancery Visitors, duties, &c. ... 17,767-17,917
- Classification ... 17,858-60
- Detention, wrongful ... 17,948
- Discharge ... 17,921-40, 17,945-55
- Ill-treatment ... 17,827-9, 17,863-75
- Inquisition cases ... 17,793, 17,801-5, 17,879-82
- Judge in Lunacy ... 17,853-7
- Licensed houses 17,897-915, 17,967-83, 17,987-18,020
- Master in Lunacy ... 17,774-5, 17,833-6, 17,853-7
- Medical Superintendents 17,883-96, 17,902-5, 17,913-5, 18,021-4
- Paranoiacs ... 17,917-20
- Rules in Lunacy ... 17,813-4
- Single care ... 18,012-5
- Visitation: by Friends and relatives ... 17,964-6 by Petitioner... 17,956-63
- SCHUSTER, Sir CLAUD, K.C.B., C.V.O., K.C., Permanent Secretary to the Lord Chancellor: 945-1065
- Aliens ... 1045-7
- Board of Control, Members, appointment 1025-6
- Certificates ... 1011-9
- Controlling body ... 1006-12, 1037
- Inquisitions ... 1027-9
- LORD CHANCELLOR: Jurisdiction of, and question of retention 951-1061
- Letters from patients ... 995-1001
- Public inquiry to determine sanity or insanity of inmate of institution ... 1051-3, 1062-5
- Visitors in Lunacy 967-73, 989-94, 1032-5, 1053-6
- SENIOR, HAROLD, and USHER, GEORGE, National Association of Masters and Matrons of Poor Law Institutions: ... 3174-3539
- Certification of paupers ... 3364-79
- Children ... 3422-35
- Chronic harmless cases ... 3295-301
- Delirious cases ... 3464, 3511-4
- Discharge, power of ... 3371-8, 3438, 3440-6
- Hartlepool Poor Law Institution ... 3231-58
- Justices, proceedings before ... 3436-7, 3471-5
- National Association of Masters and Matrons of Poor Law Institutions ... 3259-65, 3479-80
- Nursing staff 3222-4, 3246-8, 3465-6, 3476-8, 3488-501
- "Pauper" ... 3458
- Poor Law Institutions 3199-205, 3208-11, 3234-7, 3281-310, 3311-5, 3319-72, 3379-421, 3464, 3481-7, 3504, 3509-10, 3517-22, 3526-7, 3536-9
- Senile dementia cases ... 3459-63
- Southampton Poor Law Institution 3180-230, 3341-59, 3465, 3470, 3476-8, 3488-501, 3524-6, 3528-9
- Suicide, attempted 3348-9, 3447-57, 3502, 3506-8, 3515-6
- Visitation ... 3384-90, 3396-8, 3414-21
- "Workhouse" ... 3458
- SIDNEY, Hon. WILLIAM, J.P., L.C.C., and GARDNER, Mrs. ROSE DUNN, J.P., L.C.C.: 19,002-19,411
- After care ... 19,280-95
- Board of Control ... 19,373-5
- Boarding out ... 19,233-47
- Certification ... 19,168, 19,202-32
- Classification ... 19,407-10
- Clinics 19,062-9, 19,097-8, 19,108, 19,121-4, 19,137-48
- Clothing ... 19,317-28
- Food ... 19,297-315
- London County Council Mental Hospitals 19,317-28, 19,332-54, 19,359-72, 19,380-2, 19,386, 19,390-407
- Maudsley Hospital 19,008-136, 19,294, 19,297-315, 19,337-46, 19,351, 19,352
- Medical Superintendents ... 19,384-99
- Mental Hospitals, size ... 19,383-4, 19,400
- Mental Treatment Bill ... 19,006-7
- Non-volitional cases ... 19,152-68
- Nursing staff ... 19,354-5, 19,359-72
- Poor Law Institutions, temporary detention in 19,249-52, 19,268-9, 19,275-7
- Reception houses ... 19,248-67, 19,272
- Voluntary boarders 19,117-8, 19,141-3, 19,149-51, 19,172-201
- SMITH, Dr. ROBERT PERCY, M.D., F.R.C.P., &c.: ... 9941-10,132
- Certification ... 10,065, 10,124-3
- Examination by, and charges against, Mr. H. 8262-71, 8312-62, 8815-57, 8886-918, 9039-74
- no Financial interest in any mental institution 9947-9
- Mr. H. case ... 9941-10,132
- STEELE, CHARLES RICHARD: ... 9544-616
- Conversation with, Stilwell ... 9916-24
- Mr. H. case ... 9544-616

- STILWELL, Dr. REGINALD JOHN, M.R.C.S.,
M.R.C.P.: 9705-9940
Charge against, Mr. H. 8842, 8962-4
Mr. H. case 9705-9940
- STODDART, Dr. WILLIAM HENRY BUTTER
9617-704
Examination by, and charge against, Mr. H.
8271-4, 8361, 8839-57, 8878-85, 9078-84
Mr. H. Case 9617-704
- TAGGART, Alderman J. G., J.P., and HODGSON,
Alderman Sir WILLIAM, on behalf of the Mental Hospitals Association: 13,005-13,499
After care 13,476
"Asylum" 13,304-11
Board of Control 13,236-40, 13,394-475
Clinics 13,070-130, 13,131-49, 13,173-80, 13,250-64,
13,312-24
County Councils Association 13,293-8
Discharge 13,182-208, 13,229-31, 13,265-9, 13,281-4
Grants 13,112, 13,232-40, 13,409, 13,446-8, 13,459
General Paralysis of the Insane 13,328
Ill-treatment 13,340-57
Justice of the Peace 13,149-72, 13,278-80
Lancashire accommodation, charges, etc.
13,040-8, 13,053-61, 13,212-23
Medical Staff 13,326-9
Medical Superintendents 13,243-9, 13,325-38, 13,477
Mental Hospitals Association 13,005-19, 13,443
Mental Treatment Bill
13,358-409, 13,412-29, 13,451-71, 13,495-9
Nursing staff 13,479-91
Out-patients 13,127-30, 13,250
Pauperisation 13,302-3, 13,028-130
Private accommodation in asylums
13,058-61, 13,270-7
Private patients, accommodation for 13,058-61, 13,270-7
Qualifications of 13,020-6, 13,285-92
Senile cases 13,209-25
Visiting Committees 13,492-4
- TREDGOLD, ALFRED FRANK, M.D., F.R.S.
(Edin.), ANDREW, Miss FLORENCE, and FOX, Miss EVELYN, representing Central Association for Mental Welfare: 21,099-259 Adolescent Mental Disorder, present facilities for dealing with, and suggestions ... 21,101-259
- USHER, GEORGE, see Senior, Harold, and Usher, George 3174-3539
- VERRALL, Sir JENNER, LL.D., L.R.C.P.,
M.R.C.S., on behalf of British Medical Association, see Langdon-Down, Dr. R., &c.
7796-8215, 13,500-13,719
- VICKERS, MISS: 7695-7795
Mental After Care Association ... 7695-7795
W., Mr., Personal experiences ... 20,238-315
- WALDEN, Sir ROBERT, C.B.E., J.P.: 2016-2180
Accommodation 2083, 2085
After care 2162-7
Board of Control 2094-6
Boarding out 2143-9
Certification of paupers, duties of justices and proceedings before
2021-64, 2080, 2087-90, 2150-3, 2159-60, 2168-9, 2179
Classification of patients 2066
Clinics for out-patients 2082
Ill-treatment 2104-5, 2110-2
Independent enquiry as to sanity or otherwise of patient 2116-28, 2137-40
Medical superintendents, special qualifications
2131-3, 2161
Observation period 2065-6, 2071, 2076
Reception homes ... 2066-81, 2083, 2093, 2170-7
Wrongful detention 2107, 2130
- WHITEMORE, L., J.P. for County of London:
3540-3598
After care 3586-7
Certification of private patients ... 3570-7, 3590-5
Discharge to care of relatives or friends... 3587-9
Drink cases, private 3569
14 days' detention 3589
F frivolous or needless notifications ... 3584-5
Judicial authority, proceedings before ... 3545-68
Lunacy Act, Sections 11 and 20, duplication 3542-3
Observation period 3578-84, 3598
- WIESE, Miss MAUD, R.M.N., see Blood, Walter,
&c. 11,835-12,451
- WILLIS, Sir FREDERICK J., K.B.E., C.B.,
MACLEOD, S. J. FRASER, K.C.; and BOND,
Dr. C. H., C.B.E., D.Sc., M.D., (F.R.C.P.,
Board of Control: 1-944, 21,260-400
Accommodation 21,386
After-care 511-2, 514-7
- BOARD OF CONTROL:
Access to, of friends of private patients 607-10
Clerical staff 317-329, 838-40
Commissioners, attendance at head-quarters system 207-9
Complaints to 409-11
Composition 5, 7, 724-5
Functions 27-31
History 4-5
Inquiry on oath 427-32
Position re administration of Lunacy Acts 870-2
- Powers:
Internal administration 841-3
Treatment 938-43
Records 313-8, 733
Disclosure 562, 567, 570, 732-3
Secrecy 561-75
Relations with Ministry of Health and Lord
Chancellor 728-30
Scrutiny of documents
131-5, 153, 161-201, 204-6, 210-1, 215-34, 251,
252, 306-12, 834-7
- Visitation
29, 337-8, 353-6, 357-85, 387-90, 392-6, 401-3,
451, 708, 713-6, 726-7, 874
- Boarding out 66, 71-8, 624-6
Buildings 36-8, 617-8, 728
Care 329-30, 438-9, 443-6, 802-8, 843
Certification
61-3, 93, 128-9, 137-8, 141-52, 161, 168-74,
180-203, 212-4, 236-51, 533-40, 696, 829-33,
849, 856-8
Classification of patients 58
Correspondence 38, 433-7, 443
Cruelty or ill-treatment 893-914
Detention, wrongful, and safeguards
38, 382-5, 403, 486-99, 507-8, 545-6, 645-9,
779-92, 930-7
Diet 842-3
Discharge
397, 481-502, 509-17, 531-2, 541-4, 576-85, 595-603,
606, 748-71, 790-801, 929-31
Discretion, need for 599-603
Guardians, visitation by 338-40, 353
Health leave of absence 467-9
Health, Minister of 37-8
Home Secretary, jurisdiction 36
Inquisition 42, 45-9, 51-6, 257A-8, 342-53, 614
Institutions, classes of 64-6, 620-6
Judicial authority, functions, proceedings before,
&c. 111-60, 568, 573
Licensed houses 82-8, 294, 296-302, 332-5, 341, 616, 619, 627-8, 660-1, 915-24
- LORD CHANCELLOR:
Jurisdiction &c. 32-6, 39-43, 348
Visitation by order of 342-8, 353
Lunacy Commissioners 5-6
Lunacy grant-in-aid 873
- LUNACY LAW:
Code 15-18
Principles of 13-14
Lunacy law and administration, previous inquiries
19-26

WILLIS, Sir FREDERICK J., K.B.E., C.B., etc.—cont.

Lunatic not a pauper and not wandering at large, not under proper care and control	254-66, 272, 275-9, 286-7, 740, 742-4
Lunatic wandering at large	243
Mechanical restraint	825-8
Medical practitioner's qualifications	925-8
Medical staff	859-65
Mental Deficiency Act	8-12
MENTAL HOSPITALS:
89, 338, 420-6, 524, 594, 633-9, 650-5, 666-70
Admission of outside doctors	418-20, 424
Cases from workhouses, proportion	875
Dental work	806
Private patients in	280-2, 636, 638, 656-7
Visitation	335-8, 353, 408, 416-7
Visits by friends and relations	407, 408, 412-6
Month-end and periodical reports	290, 292, 295, 303-12
Non-certification of certifiable cases	670-84
Non-volitional cases	21,350-76
Notices	440-3, 447-51, 807
Nursing homes	21,268-307
Outdoor relief for insane	67, 626, 809-17
"Pauper"	58, 269-73
Petitioners, visitation by	353, 404
Poor Law infirmaries	239-40, 254, 337-40, 353, 604-5, 633-4, 685-721, 874, 876-85, 891-2
Private patients	629-34, 642, 658-9, 781-8
Property and money, control of	611-5, 777-8
Provisional orders	21,378-83, 21,387-400
Reception, procedure after	215-25, 252, 291, 319-29, 845-8
Reception Orders	122-6, 237, 303
Recovery rate, competition	325
Registered hospitals	64, 84-5, 90, 353, 506-70
Single care	67, 353-6, 497, 507-8, 519, 639-44, 661-2
Statistics of cases, 1st January, 1924	67-72
Treatment in hospitals	938-44
Trial leave of absence	385-6, 452-3, 455-60, 466, 468-80, 519-20, 523-4, 525, 527-30, 540, 772-5

WILLIS, Sir FREDERICK J., K.B.E., C.B., etc.—cont.

Urgency orders	94-5, 105-9
Visitation	42-3, 338-9, 348, 355, 713-6
Voluntary boarders	80-1, 21,262-349
WORTH, Dr. R., O.B.E., M.B., on behalf of the Medico-Psychological Association, see Cole, Dr. R. H., &c.	16,599-17,287
WORTH, Dr. R., O.B.E., M.B., on behalf of the National Council of Mental Hygiene, see Buzzard, Dr. E. Farquhar, &c.	17,288-17,433
Y., Mr.:
Personal experience	20,622-88
YELLOWLEES, Dr. HENRY, O.B.E., M.D., and CROSLAND, Mrs. CONSTANCE M. R., The Retreat, York	5381-5851
Certificates	5586-7, 5642, 5664-8, 5832-5, 5837-9, 5845-6
Certification procedure	5636-63, 5751-71
Children	5727-8
Complaints	5691-3
Continuation reports	5612-9
Dementia præcox	5729-30
Detention, wrongful	5793-4, 5808-11
Discharge	5627-35, 5779-802
Escape	5847-51
Grading of patients	5739-41
Lady doctor on staff	5412, 5415-8, 5825-31
Medical superintendent, administrative work	5401-11
Medical treatment and drugs	5670-89, 5797-8, 5803-7, 5839-40, 5844
Mental hospitals, stigma	5719
Nursing staff	5424-70, 5472-9, 5482-9, 5491-504, 5507-9, 5720-1
Petitioners	5812-5
Registered hospitals	5395-8, 5724-5, 5818-20, 5823-4
The Retreat, York, particulars re	5381-851
Treatment without certification	5694-718
Voluntary boarders	5705, 5742-50

